"That in the interpretation of any provision relating to the duration or date of the termination of the present war or of the present or existing emergency, meaning thereby the war between the Imperial German Government and the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and people of the United States, in any acts of Congress, joint resolutions, or proclamations of the President containing provisions contingent upon the duration or the date of the termination of such war or of such present or existing emergency, the date when this resolution becomes effective shall be construed and treated as the date of the termination of the war or of the present or existing emergency, notwithstanding any provision in any act of Congress or joint resolution providing any other mode of determining the date of such termination. And any act of Congress, or any provision of any such act, that by its terms is in force only during the existence of a state of war, or during such state of war and a limited period of time thereafter, shall be construed and administered as if such war between the Governments and people aforesaid terminated on the date when this resolution becomes effective, any provision of such law to the contrary notwithstanding; excepting, however, from the operation and effect of this resolution the following acts and proclamations, to wit: Title 2 of the act entitled 'The food control and District of Columbia rents act,' approved October 22, 1919 (41 Stats., p. 297), the act known as the trading with the enemy act, approved October 6, 1917 (40 Stats., p. 411), and all amendments thereto, and the first, second, third, and fourth Liberty bond acts, the supplement to the second Liberty bond act, and the Victory Liberty loan act; titles 1 and 3 of the war finance corporation act (40 Stats., p. 506) as amended by the act approved March 3, 1919 (40 Stats., p. 1313), and Public resolution No. 55, Sixty-sixth Congress, entitled 'Joint resolution directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes,' passed January 4, 1921; also the proclamations issued under the authority conferred by the acts herein excepted from the effect and operation of this resolution: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as effective to terminate the military status of any person now in desertion from the military or naval service of the United States, nor to terminate the liability to prosecution and punishment under the selective service law, approved May 18, 1917 (40 Stats., p. 76), of any person who failed to comply with the provisions of said act, or of acts amendatory thereof: Provided further, That the act entitled 'An act to amend section 3, title 1, of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stats., p. 217), and for other purposes,' approved May 16, 1918 (40 Stats., p. 553), be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and that said section 3 of said act approved June 15, 1917, is hereby revived and restored with the same force and effect as originally enacted.

"Nothing herein contained shall be held to exempt from prosecution or to relieve from punishment any offense heretofore committed in violation of any act hereby repealed or which may be committed while it remains in force as herein provided."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. This is an important matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. It is not open to debate. The Chair will count.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 267 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution was introduced in the House in the early part of this session. It was passed and went to the Senate. The Senate has stricken out all the provisions of the original resolution as we passed it and substituted a resolution of their own. The first part of that resolution, however, is in almost the identical words in which the original House resolution was passed. There is one slight change. In that resolution we spoke of the war as "the present war" or "the present emergency." The Senate speaks of it in this resolution as the War with the Imperial German Government and the Austro-Hungarian Government.

In the original resolution there was one exception from the operation of the resolution that has been omitted by the Senate, but that, I presume, has been taken care of in the immigration bill. It is a provision of very little consequence, anyway.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman advise the House what that provision is which is not included?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is the act approved April 3, 1919, entitled "An act to prevent in time of war departure from and entry into the United States contrary to public safety." I was asked to put it in the original resolution and it was inserted, but it was afterwards stricken out in the Senate.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. IGOE. I have not been able to get a copy of this resolution. I should like to ask the gentleman if this now terminates the Lever Act?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It does; that is, it suspends all provisions of it that are in force only during the existence of this war.

Mr. IGOE. The Senate amendment terminates the Lever Act?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The Lever Act was stricken from the resolution; that is, the provision excepting the Lever Act from the resolution was stricken from it in the House.

Mr. IGOE. Has it been inserted again in the Senate?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It was inserted by the committee of the Senate, but was rejected by the Senate itself, so that the exception is not in the bill now.

Mr. IGOE. Then the effect of it, if I understand the gentleman correctly, is that if this resolution passes the Lever Act will still be in force?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; the Lever Act will not be in force.

Mr. IGOE. I understood the gentleman to say that the exception of the Lever Act was retained by the Senate.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No. If you will stop to consider the character of this resolution, you will understand what I mean. The first part of the resolution says that the effect of its passage shall be that of the adoption of a treaty of peace. Now, the Lever Act has provisions in it to the effect that it will terminate at the end of the war when a treaty of peace has been ratified. We had a provision, which was stricken out in the House, to the effect that the Lever Act should be excepted from the operation of the resolution, and while that was put back by the Senate Judiciary Committee, the Senate struck it out the same as the House did, so that the Lever Act is a part of the legislation that will be suspended or repealed by it.

Mr. IGOE. Then, the effect of it is that if this resolution passes the Lever Act is repealed in toto?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Unless——

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Let me answer the question of the gentleman from Missouri first. The Lever Act, outside of a provision that relates to rents in the District of Columbia, will be repealed. The rent provision of that act is to remain in force.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The chairman of the committee will recall that when the bill was before the House the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] offered an amendment by the terms of which the Lever Act was in effect repealed. Is that the fact?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Now, would the effect of the amendment which was adopted relieve from prosecution persons who had violated the Lever Act and were being prosecuted under it?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; because there is a provision——

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The one originally passed.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is a question of law which the gentleman can decide as well as I.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. By express provisions of this act it is proposed that the Lever Act shall be repealed and that it shall not affect pending prosecutions. Is that the purpose?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. All provisions of the Lever Act that are in force during the existing war will be suspended, just as all other statutes that we seek to suspend. There are no exceptions of the Lever Act except that part which affects the rent question in this District.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I want to call attention to the fact that in the language of the present enactment the Lever Act is not repealed.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. None of the laws are repealed outside of the one section of the bill which I will call attention to a minute later.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The closing paragraph refers to "acts hereby repealed."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman will give me time I will explain what the resolution provides for.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, would it not be well to allow the gentleman from Minnesota to first explain the resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. So far as the Lever Act is concerned, it is only suspended for the time excepting section 2, which applies only to the District of Columbia. Is not that true?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It suspends it, except title 2.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. It is suspended, all except title 2?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. But the Supreme Court yesterday declared the other unconstitutional.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not want to discuss that matter. I do not know how much they did declare void. The Senate added a provision to the effect that this suspension of these statutes shall not relieve anyone who may have deserted from the Army. The Senate put in another provision to the effect that the amendment which we passed to the espionage act shall be repealed. That amendment has given a good deal of offense, and many people have been convicted under it. They provide that an old section for which that was a substitute, section 3, title 1, shall be revived. Section 3 of title 1 of the espionage act is an old section that we have had with us for many years. It is only in force during the existence of a war. They added at the last minute in the Senate a provision that the penalties that may have been incurred prior to the passage of this resolution shall survive and may be enforced, notwithstanding this resolution. I believe that would be true whether we put it in this resolution or not. Outside of these three matters—the provision in reference to desertion, the provision in reference to the espionage act, and the saving clause in regard to penalties—the resolution is practically identical with the one we passed here in December.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Has the gentleman the language of section 3 of the act of June 15, 1917, so that he can tell us what the provisions in that section are?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The one that is preserved?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have it, but I do not have the portion that is to be repealed; that is very much more severe than that which is reinstated. I will read this section 3:

SEC. 3. Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies, and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the service or of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

That statute can only be enforced during war. The other statute that we repeal is very much broader, very much more drastic, and it is the one against which the principal complaint has been made so far as complaint has been made against the espionage act.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Quoting now from page 3 of the proposed resolution beginning on line 17:

Excepting, however, from the operation and effect of this resolution the following acts and proclamations, to wit: Title II of the act entitled "Food control and District of Columbia rents act," approved October 22, 1919 (41 Stat., p. 297).

Does that include the provisions of the Lever Act which have been nullified by the decision of the Supreme Court, as rendered yesterday?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. No; it does not; because it only includes the District of Columbia rent law. It does not include the original Lever Act.

Mr. DEWALT. Let me ask the gentleman another question. The Supreme Court, as I understand the decision, although I have not seen the text of it, says that the Lever Act is unconstitutional because of the indetermination of the penalties and of the time as laid out by the act itself. Is that correct?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is the newspaper report.

Mr. DEWALT. If that be so, then, is this inclusive of the Lever Act in toto, or only in part, and if so, why pass this resolution?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Title II has nothing to do with the Lever Act generally. Title II of the Lever Act was a District of Columbia rent act, and that is the only part that is here excepted from the operation of this resolution.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And that is not touched by the decision of the court.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Not touched by the decision at all.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. It is difficult to understand this act, because, so far as I know, it has not been brought to the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I brought it to the attention of a number of members. I tried to see as many members as I could.

Mr. GARD. But it has not been brought to the attention of the committee itself, so that the matter is approached with some difficulty of understanding. We desire to know just what this particular resolution does. I take it, from reading it, that it does not repeal anything. It still adheres to its description and interpretation as to the meaning of certain statutes with relation to the termination of the war.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The resolution in effect provides that upon its passage it shall be treated and considered as though peace had been declared by a proper treaty. The reason why I did not call the attention of the committee to it—although I might have done so—is because there is no material change in it now from the way it was when it passed the House, with the exception of those three things which I have called attention to, and it seems to me there can be no objection to these.

Mr. GARD. It is the ordinary policy of the chairman to call the attention of the committee to changes, is it not?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It came in during the last few days. We are very busy, and I tried to consult everyone as much as I could.

Mr. GARD. I am not quarreling with the gentleman, but I am seeking information so that we may understand the effect of it. The exceptions from this are, first, this section 2, commonly called the rent-control act.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That was in the original House resolution as we passed it.

Mr. GARD. I mean the exception to the general provisions of the resolution.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. GARD. And the other exceptions are the trading with the enemy act and the Liberty bond act and a part of the espionage act.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. That is correct.

Mr. GARD. Is that all?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The espionage act, so far as it is only in force during war after this is passed. It does not except it at all; it only provides that section 3 of the original espionage act shall remain in force in place of the amendment against which so much complaint has been made.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman allow another inquiry? I notice on page 4—and I have a transcript of the resolution which may not conform with the resolution the gentleman has—on page 4, line 15, "Joint resolution directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes." Is that also in?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I beg your pardon. That was not in the original resolution, but I did not think of it. That was passed during this Congress and has been simply added as a matter of precaution.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. There were a number of members of the United Mine Workers of America who were indicted under the Lever Act and those indictments are still pending. It is my understanding that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] repealed the Lever Act so that they could no longer prosecute under those indictments. Now, what I wanted to know was if the act in its present form will permit prosecutions under those indictments. I might say that the Supreme Court has held the law unconstitutional because it is so indefinite and uncertain, but on a rehearing they might change their mind about it. What I want to know is what effect this change of language has upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND]?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is in the same position that it was when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] put it in.

Mr. DEWALT. In other words, will these prosecutions fail by reason of the passage of this resolution?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I think they ought to fail; I think they should never have been indicted.

Mr. DEWALT. The question is, Would they have failed?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is a question I want to——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the Bland amendment would have made them fail they will fail under this resolution, because it is the same language. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman reserve that for one moment? Some of us who feel an interest in this matter would like to discuss it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think the discussion already has been very general.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw his motion or not?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I should like to have five minutes to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I refuse to yield.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me? It seems to me the request of the gentleman from Alabama is a reasonable request to yield him five minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think this matter has been discussed very fully.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman from Alabama desires——

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Nobody has discussed it but the gentleman from Minnesota, so far as I know.

Mr. GARRETT. It has been discussed, and yet we do not know much about it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman has had ample opportunity to know; there has been no material change since it passed the House.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the request of the gentleman from Alabama is a reasonable one, and I hope the gentleman will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 176, nays 122, not voting 130, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the House No. 113 to the bill (H. R. 15543) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, and agreed to the same.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may first take up Senate bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that Senate bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar be first taken up. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will call the list.

NATIONAL FORESTS, STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11118) authorizing the consolidation of lands in national forests in the State of South Dakota.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think this is rather too important a matter to be taken up at this time, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CLAIMS OF INDIANS OF CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12788) authorizing any tribes or bands of Indians of California to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CANNON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The Clerk will report the next one.

ARID LANDS IN THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8864) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill read?

Mr. GARD. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DIKE ACROSS MUD SLOUGH ON ISTHMUS INLET, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14158) granting the consent of Congress to H. H. Haynes to construct a dike across Mud Slough on Isthmus Inlet, in section 23, township 26 south, range 13 west, of Willamette meridian in Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the necessity for the erection of this work?

Mr. HAWLEY. At high tide this valuable land overflows with salt water, which renders the land unfit for agriculture. All the interests on the slough, which are small ones, are in favor of the construction of the dike, and the War Department says it has no objection to it.

Mr. GARD. I see it is to be constructed only with the approval of plans by the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes. That is the usual form.

Mr. GARD. That is supposed to protect all the rights of the United States?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to H. H. Haynes, and his successors and assigns, to construct and maintain a dike and approaches thereto across the Mud Slough on Isthmus Inlet at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near its mouth in section 23, township 26 south, range 13 west, of Willamette meridian in Oregon, in the county of Coos, in the State of Oregon, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable water," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With committee amendments, as follows:

On page 1, line 6, after the word "Inlet," insert a comma and strike out the words "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

Page 2, line 1, after the word "Oregon," strike out the comma and insert a colon, and strike out the balance of the paragraph. Insert after the colon the following words: "Provided, That the work shall not be commenced until the plans therefor have been filed with and approved by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, and by the Secretary of War: Provided further, That no dam or dike constructed under the consent hereby granted shall be used to develop water power nor to generate electricity."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CHICKASAW AND SEMINOLE TRIBES OF INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15085) to perpetuate the memory of the Chickasaw and Seminole Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCKEOWN], the author of the bill, here.

Mr. MCKEOWN. It takes nothing out of the Treasury.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is, authorized and directed to erect at Tishomingo and Wewoka, Okla., monuments constructed of Tishomingo granite to perpetuate the memory of the Chickasaw and Seminole Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma.

SEC. 2. That the monument erected at Tishomingo, Okla., shall have inscribed thereon such words and figures as will in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior preserve the memory of the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma.

SEC. 3. That the monument erected at Wewoka, Okla., shall have inscribed thereon such words and figures as will in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior preserve the memory of the Seminole Tribe in Oklahoma.

SEC. 4. That there is authorized to be appropriated out of any money belonging to the Chickasaw and Seminole Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior the sum of $25,000 from each tribe, respectively.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 12, strike out "$25,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$15,000."

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. McKEOWN. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Is this money to be paid out of the Indian funds?

Mr. McKEOWN. Out of the Indian funds.

Mr. BEE. And not out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. McKEOWN. Not out of the Treasury of the United States, but out of the Indian funds.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McKEOWN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

WAR MINERALS PRODUCERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4259) to provide further for the relief of war minerals producers, and to amend an act entitled "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes," approved February 2, 1919.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON, Mr. BEE, and others objected.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman please withhold his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold it if the gentleman wants to explain the bill.

The SPEAKER. Several gentlemen objected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there is no use in withholding objection. Evidently objection will be made, and it simply takes time, which might be better occupied.

Mr. RHODES. I simply desire to make a brief statement.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PENAL CODE OF THE CANAL ZONE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13649) to amend the Penal Code of the Canal Zone and the navigation rules of the Panama Canal.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

INDIANS OF CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3998) authorizing any tribes or bands of Indians of California to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CARSON NATIONAL FOREST.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14669) for the consolidation of forest lands in the Carson National Forest, N. Mex., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman in charge of the bill state what its provisions are?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. This simply provides for the exchange of private lands for forest lands.

Mr. McCLINTIC. It has the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands within the Carson National Forest, N. Mex., if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture the public interests will be benefited thereby and the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes, and in exchange therefor may give not to exceed an equal value of such national forest lands or timber within the national forests of New Mexico as may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, and in determining the relative values of the lands or timber to be exchanged consideration shall be given to any reservations which either party may make of timber, minerals, or easements.

Timber given in such exchanges shall be cut and removed under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests and under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become a part of the Carson National Forest.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "the," insert the word "said."

Page 1, line 11, after the word "national," strike out the words "forests of New Mexico" and insert the word "forest."

Page 2, line 1, after the word "and," strike out the words "in determining the relative values of the lands or timber to be exchanged consideration shall be given to any reservations which either party may make of timber, minerals, or easements" and insert "the Secretary of the Interior."

Page 2, line 6, after the word "given," insert the words "and the timber on lands given."

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, has this bill escaped objection?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to be recognized to ask a question or two.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New Mexico yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. We have not been very fortunate in exchanging our lands for private forest lands. The fact is there was great abuse many years ago and many worthless lands were exchanged for very valuable timbered lands owned by Uncle Sam.

If I had been aware that this bill was coming up, I should have objected to the consideration of it at this time, because in the last hours of the session, when we are all in very good temper, much dangerous and improper legislation goes through without question. We are all in a good humor. We will soon depart to our homes for a short time——

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. The exchanges which the gentleman complains of were under an entirely different law. They were under the old lieu land act. This bill provides for a different standard entirely from that old law. This provides for the exchange of lands of equal value. Under the old lieu land law, which was repealed a number of years ago, a man having 160 acres of worthless land could transfer it to the Government and get 160 acres of very valuable timberland, but that can not be done under this act.

Mr. CANNON. Why?

Mr. SINNOTT. Because the lands exchanged have to be of equal value.

Mr. CANNON. You will have an army of people examining the value of the respective lands; you will have many employees. And, after all is said and done, the Government generally gets the worst of it.

Mr. SINNOTT. As a matter of fact there have been a number of exchanges authorized under which no exchange has been made at all, because the owners of the private land feel that the cruisers of the Forest Service, the officials representing the Government, are too exacting; and as a matter of fact no exchanges have been made.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the unfortunate conditions to which the gentleman refers, were under the old laws and that we have passed during this Congress, and during every Congress for the last 12 years, bills like this. This is the same form being used by the Public Lands Committee and the Forest Service, and there has been no wrong or outrage on the public under the language of this bill. Every Member from the West approves of this measure and the Forestry Service approves of it. There can be no outrage perpetrated under it.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Let me say that I am acquainted with these lands and the intention of the bill is to exchange these lands within the forests for timberland in the forests.

Mr. CANNON. Does Uncle Sam gain anything by that?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I think so, because it consolidates the forests. The homesteader being right in the forest is sometimes rather careless about guarding against fire. There will not be more than 10,000 acres altogether of private land within the forests and there may not be one-half of it exchanged at this time.

Mr. CANNON. After all, there would not be a swap made unless the citizen thought he was making a good trade, and then we have to trust agents for whose honesty you can not vouch, and I do not feel like criticizing the constituents of the gentleman from New Mexico—of course, they are looking out for themselves. But they would not make the exchange unless they thought it was to their advantage to make it.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. The Secretary of Agriculture thinks it is a good bill.

Mr. CANNON. What Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Secretary Meredith; and, of course, he gets his advice from the officials on the ground.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Might not the exchange be for the mutual benefit of both? Might not the exchange be to the advantage of the Government because it consolidates the land in the forest and to the advantage of the man because he may get a little better land, and at the same time both parties get advantage by the exchange, and is not that the purpose of the act?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the act provide in express terms that the exchange shall not be made unless in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture it is for the advantage of the Government?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Yes.

Mr. MAYS. Is this a general exchange bill, or does it apply to one forest?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. It applies to one forest.

Mr. MAYS. Does it permit the exchange of cut-over lands?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. No.

Mr. MAYS. Suppose a private party owned cut-over lands from which he had taken the timber; could he under this bill exchange those cut-over lands for other land?

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I think he could; but that is up to the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas). The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and fifteen Members present, a quorum. The question is on the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HERNANDEZ, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the conferees on the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 15943) may have up until 12 o'clock midnight in which to present a conference report for printing under the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the conferees on the part of the House on the Army appropriation bill may have until 12 o'clock midnight in which to file their report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CAMP FUNSTON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House resolution 635, requesting the War Department to furnish information to the Committee on Military Affairs regarding the abadonment of Camp Funston and providing that pending the furnishment of such information and action thereon that no action toward the wrecking and abandonment of said camp be taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

AMENDING THE NEW MEXICO ENABLING ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4310) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the New Mexico enabling act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, let us have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 13 of the act entitled "An act to enable the people of New Mexico to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admited into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved June 20, 1910, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 13. That the State, when admitted as aforesaid, shall constitute one judicial district, and the circuit and district courts of said district shall be held at the capital of said State, and the said district shall, for judicial purposes, be attached to the eighth judicial circuit. There shall be appointed for said district one district judge, one United States attorney, and one United States marshal. The judge of said district shall receive a yearly salary the same as other similar judges of the United States, payable as provided for by law, and shall reside in the district to which he is appointed. There shall be appointed clerks of said courts, who shall keep their offices at the capital of said State. The regular terms of said courts shall be held on the first Monday in March and the first Monday in September of each year. The circuit and district courts for said district and the judges thereof, respectively, shall possess the same powers and jurisdiction and perform the same duties required to be performed by the other circuit and district courts and judges of the United States, and shall be governed by the same laws and regulations. The marshal, district attorney, and the clerks of the circuit and district courts of said district, and all other officers and persons performing duties in the administration of justice therein, shall severally possess the powers and perform the duties lawfully possessed and required to be performed by similar officers in other districts of the United States, and shall, for the services they may perform, receive the fees and compensation now allowed by law to officers performing similar services for the United States in the Territory of New Mexico."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, having heard the bill read, I have no objection. It seems to me to be a very proper bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] please explain the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, the bill has only one purpose, and that is the time of holding court in the district court of New Mexico from the first Monday in April to the first Monday in March, and from the first Monday in October to the first Monday in September. There is no other change. It is thought desirable by those living in New Mexico, court officials and citizens generally, that the change be made so that the time of holding court shall be one month earlier in the spring term and one month earlier in the fall term.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Under the enabling act is it necessary for the State of New Mexico to come to Congress for this character of relief?

Mr. GARD. It is. This is a Federal court.

Mr. BEE. They have to fix it in all cases under the enabling act?

Mr. GARD. Yes. Mr. Speaker, before the House proceeds further, I would say that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has called my attention to certain necessary amendments which, if there be no objection to the bill, I shall offer. Those amendments are to strike out the word "circuit" where it appears in the bill, because there is no circuit court. This applies simply to the district court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, is the bill open to amendment now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was open to amendment. The bill has been reported.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 1 of the bill, in line 12, by striking out the words "circuit and."

The Clerk reported the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, on page 1, line 13, I move to strike out the word "courts" and insert in lieu thereof the word "court."

The Clerk reported the amendment.

The Clerk reported the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the distinguished gentleman from Ohio believe that in view of the fact that the bill is so very defective, requiring so many amendments to perfect it, it ought to go back to the committee?

Mr. GARD. I have only a very few more, and I beg the gentleman's indulgence. Mr. Speaker, on line 12, page 2, I move to strike out the words "circuit and."

The Clerk reported the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, in line 12, page 2, I move to strike out the words "courts" and insert in lieu thereof the word "court."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 210, noes 7.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment. Page 2, line 13, after the word "thereof," strike out the word "respectively."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 2, line 13, after the word "thereof," strike out the word "respectively."

The question was taken.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas demands a division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 208, noes 8.

So the amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ALIENATION OF LANDS TO CERTAIN QUAPAW INDIANS.

The next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15780) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1895 (28 Stats. L., p. 907), and to extend restrictions against alienation of lands allotted to and inherited by certain Quapaw Indians, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I object in order that the bill may be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I was just about to make the statement that this bill has already passed as a rider on the appropriation bill.

Mr. CARTER. And it might as well be stricken from the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be laid on the table. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GARD. I objected to the consideration of the bill which automatically strikes it from this calendar.

Mr. CARTER. And it might as well be stricken from the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to striking the bill from the Union Calendar? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DISPOSITION OF BORON DEPOSITS.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15445) to provide for the disposition of boron deposits.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, let us have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter all deposits of boron minerals and lands containing such deposits, owned by the United States, except deposits of potassium borates provided for in the act approved October 2, 1917 (40 Stats., p. 297), shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner prescribed for the disposal of borates of sodium in the act approved February 25, 1920 (41 Stats., p. 437), entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has this bill passed the Senate?

Mr. SINNOTT. A bill like this has been reported to the Senate. It is a departmental bill introduced by myself at the request of the Secretary of the Interior. At the present time there is no method of disposing of the particular material referred to except by patent. Now, this provides for the leasing of boron material or mineral.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the gentleman advise the House what purpose there is of securing final action on bills now being enacted within two days of final adjournment if they have not passed the Senate?

Mr. SINNOTT. I think this bill will be enacted in the Senate because they have reported a similar bill. The chairman of the Senate committee has reported a bill which he introduced at the request of the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the purpose of this bill is to include boric deposits under the provisions of certain statutes?

Mr. SINNOTT. The purpose of this bill is to include within the provisions of the oil and mineral leasing act, which we passed at the last session of Congress, borate of calcium. There is no law at the present time covering the disposal by lease of borate of calcium, from which is obtained all of our borax in this country. We have a law pertaining to borate of sodium and borate of potassium, but not to borate of calcium, and therefore we use the term "boron," which is generic and comprehensive, embracing all the borates from which borax may be obtained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Is the bill submitted by the department?

Mr. SINNOTT. This was introduced at the request of the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The bill has been read.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

UNCLAIMED FUNDS FROM OKLAHOMA TOWN SITES.

Mr. SINNOTT. The next bill upon the calendar was passed earlier in the evening and therefore I move it be stricken from the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 15219 be stricken from the calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following House concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 77.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 10074) "An act to enlarge the jurisdiction of the municipal court of the District of Columbia, and to regulate appeals from judgments of said court, and for other purposes," the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to incorporate the following amendment:

On page 9, line 1, after the word "and," strike out the following: "fuel, approved August 10, 1917," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "fuel, approved August 10, 1917, and to regulate rents in the District of Columbia."

INCORPORATING NATIONAL CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC OF AMERICA.

The next bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1551) to amend an act approved March 3, 1891, incorporating the National Conservatory of Music of America.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 1551.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1551) to amend an act approved March 3, 1891, incorporating the National Conservatory of Music of America.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, constituting the persons therein named a body politic and corporate by the name National Conservatory of Music of America is hereby amended by substituting the names of Henry White, George Peabody Eustis, Charles D. Walcott, Mary Harrison McKee, Anna Cochran Ewing, Lillia Babbitt Hyde, Helen Hartley Jenkins, Dorothy Whitney Straight, Jeannette M. Thurber, Thomas Ewing, George McAneny, and Ernest M. Stires in place of Abram S. Hewitt, Frank R. Lawrence, William Pinckney Whyte, Enoch Pratt, Fitz Hugh Lee, William H. Payne, Olive Risley Seward, John Hay, S. P. Langley, Anthony Pollock, C. R. P. Rodgers, and John M. Scofield, and that said National Conservatory of Music of America may establish and maintain branches outside the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, the sole purpose of this bill is to permit the National Conservatory of Music, which was incorporated some 30 years ago by act of Congress, to maintain branches outside of the District of Columbia. The bill does one other thing: It substitutes the names of certain living persons in place of the names of certain incorporators who are now deceased. This National Conservatory of Music is entirely supported by private funds. It has never come to the United States Government for any support of any kind, and never will. It has done a great work for music in this country. At this institution hundreds of young men and young women have been educated in music absolutely without cost. They have had upon their teaching force the most eminent composers and musicians in the country. It is an institution well worthy of the support of this Congress in granting the small requests which it asks. The time has now come when it is really to its advantage to maintain branches in other places than the District of Columbia. Under the statute as it exists it can maintain a branch nowhere else.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Certainly.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would like to ask what is the necessity for changing the names of the incorporators?

Mr. HUSTED. Well, there is not any necessity, except that certain of these incorporators are deceased.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What is the propriety of it?

Mr. HUSTED. The propriety of it is their desire to name certain eminent persons, eminent in music, among the incorporators now in that act. There is no other purpose that I know.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The real purpose is to pay an honor to these new parties?

Mr. HUSTED. I presume that is the sole and only purpose.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. At the expense of those who are dead?

Mr. HUSTED. It is not at the expense of anybody.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I will.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The gentleman made the statement that the purpose of this bill was to allow branches to be established in other States, I take it?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Are those branches to be permitted to charge for instruction?

Mr. HUSTED. This conservatory, as I have said, is a private institution. I suppose they have a right to charge, and I suppose they do charge in some cases. But, as a matter of fact, hundreds of young men and young women who have been financially unable to educate themselves in music have been educated at this institution absolutely free of cost. The lady who has been the moving spirit is Mrs. Francis M. Thurber. I think anybody in this country who knows anything about the cause of music in America knows she has devoted a very large fortune to that cause.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HUSTED. I will.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The gentleman makes the statement that hundreds are educated free of charge.

Mr. HUSTED. Absolutely without any charge.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Who pays the cost in connection with this education?

Mr. HUSTED. A very large part of the cost has been made by Mrs. Francis M. Thurber, who is the principal mover, and the one who is chiefly interested in this institution.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. I will.

Mr. KING. I am very favorable to this proposition, and I would like to ask the gentleman why it is necessary to get the authority of Congress to establish branches in other portions of the Union?

Mr. HUSTED. The claim is made, and the claim is supported by very eminent attorneys of this association, that they would have no legal right to maintain branches outside of the District of Columbia unless authority was granted by Congress.

Mr. KING. Can they do that in spite of some law to the contrary on the part of the States?

Mr. HUSTED. I assume there is no conflict of law in the States. So far as I know, they have not run counter to any State law.

Mr. KING. What does the gentleman think about it as a constitutional lawyer?

Mr. HUSTED. Well, I do not think it is necessary to pass an opinion upon it, and I do not think the opinion of "the gentleman" as a constitutional lawyer would be of any great value. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the only objection that I have to this bill is its name—the National Conservatory of Music. It is a commercial enterprise, aside from the question of art that is connected with it. The principal place of business of this institution now is New York City. Under the terms of this proposed bill this so-called National Conservatory of Music could establish a branch conservatory in Philadelphia, another one in Baltimore, another one in Cleveland, another one in Chicago, another in St. Louis, another one in San Francisco, and so on. Its name, the National Conservatory of Music, gives it an advantage over every other conservatory now existing in the United States.

I doubt not what the gentleman says—that many young students of music are educated free—is true. I doubt not that that is correct. That is the case with every educational institution in the United States to-day. You will find students who are carried free on their enrollment.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. KING. What is the gentleman's objection to the word "national"?

Mr. BLANTON. My objection is that it gives them a commercial advantage over any other musical conservatory in the United States.

Mr. KING. What about the National Biscuit Co.?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; but it is not incorporated by Congress as a governmental institution. Whenever an institution with the name of "National Conservatory of Music" is incorporated by Congress, and it is a commercial enterprise, the name itself gives it a governmental relation everywhere in the United States. That is my objection.

Mr. HUSTED rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman is not going to take me off my feet. We might as well have an orderly procedure here now as at any time. I have my rights and I know them, and, no doubt, the Speaker will see that I get them.

I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker, and I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I shall use all of my five minutes. Of course, most thoughtful men recognize the danger of granting Federal charters to any kind of a private institution, but it seems this Federal charter was granted a long time ago, before the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] or myself knew anything about music, except of an infantile nature. As I gather from the explanation of the gentleman in charge of the bill, the principal function of this society is to furnish free music, free instruction in music; and I am inclined to think that even though it is brought in here in the closing hours of the session, when we are supposed to confine ourselves to important matters, we ought not to object to it and it ought to go through. I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will allow it to go through without objection, because if there ever was a time when the American people needed free music it is at the beginning of a Republican administration. [Laughter.]

For two years you have been in absolute control of the Government, having a majority in both House and Senate, but you have given as an excuse for your inaction that you had a Democratic President, of whom you were either afraid or who was too intelligent for you to get around him. Your newspapers are already suggesting that the people should be patient and not expect too much of you. The Supreme Court of the United States did you a favor the other day when it decided that the Congress was without power, even in time of war, to do a whole lot of things that you have been making the American people believe you could do if the cantankerous and obstreperous Democratic administration would only let you do what you wanted to do. And you claimed you would do everything the people wanted; that you would make the price of wheat go up and the price of bread go down; so I think the people, when they realize how you have fooled them, will require a lot of lulling music to keep them quiet. [Laughter.] When they find out that you, instead of relieving them of taxes, intend to increase their burdens, you will need some music to enable you to quiet them, because they will begin to howl. You had better get used to it. I know how you felt when all the "wild asses from the green corn" that made up your new membership gathered in your caucus last night, and I know what a sigh of relief you heaved when you gathered them safely into the corral. [Laughter.]

Oh, yesterday you were on your p's and q's, and you heaved a sigh of relief because you got them into the corral and got them branded, and all you did for them was to promise them just two additions to the steering committee. You told the people you were going to reduce the expenditures of the Government a billion dollars a year. Instead of doing it, when you get through with your deficiencies in the next Congress it is going to dawn on the taxpayers that this was the most extravagant Congress that ever sat beneath the Capitol dome, and you will need some music then. [Applause.] If you do not do it the American taxpayers are going to sing you a song for which you will furnish the music. [Laughter.]

You now exult in the dance of victory; but remember, you must pay the fiddler. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, after listening to the witty speech of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], I feel reluctant to enter upon a serious discussion of this bill. I am opposed to Federal charters. I do not believe that any private concern should be incorporated by act of Congress, especially should no company under purely private control and in which there is no general public interest be given congressional recognition by a special act.

But that is not my principal objection to this bill. As I look it over, I am convinced that I am growing old—that I belong to a past generation. The main purpose of this bill is to substitute the names of living persons for those of persons who are dead, to pay honor to the living, since "flattery can not soothe the dull, cold ear of death." With such a purpose I can have but little sympathy.

The reason I think I am growing old is that as I read the names of deceased persons to be stricken from the charter of this corporation and of the living to be substituted for them, I find that I recognize all the names of those who are dead, but am familiar with but few of those which it is proposed to substitute for them. It brings a feeling of sadness. I feel like one who stands alone, a sort of last leaf of yesterday. I recognize that it is because I am growing old.

I call to the attention of the House the names that it is proposed to strike from the charter of this concern: Abram S. Hewitt, Frank R. Lawrence, William Pinckney Whyte, Enoch Pratt, Fitz Hugh Lee, William L. Payne, Olive Risley Seward, John Hay, S. P. Langley, Anthony Pollock, C. R. P. Rodgers, and John M. Scofield. These are some of the most eminent names in American history—statesmen, soldiers, philanthropists, scientists, men of letters—eminent in the walks of life.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No. Instead of these eminent Americans it is proposed to substitute Henry White, George Peabody Eustis, Charles D. Walcott, Mary Harrison McLee, Anna Cochran Ewing, Lillia Babbitt Hyde, Helen Hartley Jenkins, Dorothy Whitney Straight, Jeannette M. Thurber, Thomas Ewing, George McAneny, and Ernest M. Stires.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No. Now, I do not doubt that the names of the persons whom I have last read are well known to the present generation. No doubt they include great soldiers and poets, men of wisdom and achievement; no doubt they are all persons of the highest eminence. No doubt they are just as famous as the first names that I read, only I do not know it. I am growing old. I belong to a generation which is passing. I recognize few of the names of these newly famous ones, and it makes me sad. It must be that I am growing old. Surely such talent as that which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED] brings to bear would not be devoted during the last moments of Congress to the ignoble task of embalming flies in amber. [Laughter.]

Oh, I know them well enough—the older ones. Hewitt and Fitzhugh Lee and Langley and Hay and the rest. Not to have known them in my day was to be ignorant of our country's history—of the best and highest and noblest in American life. And now they have served their purpose and are to be dismissed and kicked out of the charter of this corporation.

I am growing old. I crave the indulgence which is the perquisite of venerable years. I beg the gentlemen who are pushing this bill to respect the feelings of the elder generation and leave, yet to remain, some of these names with which we are acquainted. Let them wait yet a little while before they bring in the names of the newly famous, of the new great statesmen, of the new great generals, of the new great scientists, of the new great men who are identified with this latter day in America. Let them not be in such haste to ring down the curtain on Scofield and Payne and Whyte and Pratt.

I am growing old. I can not give my countenance to this ruthless innovation. Let us give the recognition which the exceeding eminence of the new great no doubt commands in some way which will not do violence to the respect due to those of our elder day and time.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Is the gentleman familiar with any precedent for amending one of these special acts of Congress and substituting new names?

Mr. HUSTED. I am not familiar with any congressional precedent, but there is legislative precedent.

Mr. GARRETT. I mean legislation by Congress.

Mr. HUSTED. Not by Congress, but by the State.

Mr. KING. We have amended the statute——

Mr. HUSTED. The gentleman asked whether there was any legislative precedent for the substitution of names. There is no legislative precedent by Congress within my knowledge, and I doubt if it has occurred many times. Very few of these acts have been passed; but I do know of legislative precedent for exactly that action.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman will permit me, I have always been opposed on principle to these special charters by act of Congress. I have never supported any since I have been here.

Mr. HUSTED. This was incorporated some 13 years ago, and I would like to say in reply to the gentleman from Texas that we do not change the name of this corporation. It is the same name carried in this bill under which the corporation was originally created.

Mr. BLANTON. I was only objecting to New York spreading out over the United States. We do not care what goes on there in New York.

Mr. GARRETT. If it was an amendment to the charter and not fundamental, I think it would not be worth while to interpose an objection, but I say very frankly to the gentleman that I really do not think—and I do not mean to reflect on the artistic ability of any of these who are named as new persons going into the charter—but the original charter undoubtedly provided for the selection of successors.

Mr. HUSTED. It provided for a continuation.

Mr. GARRETT. They could select their successors.

Mr. HUSTED. I think the majority of the original incorporators are dead.

Mr. GARRETT. But it was a continuing corporation. Now, we have, despite the objections I made, created a great many of these special acts, confining them to the District of Columbia, except in a few cases where they slipped by and got a charter that did not make them citizens of the District of Columbia. If we adopt this precedent, all the charters that we have passed are going to come here and ask to substitute new persons. They may be entirely worthy of the honor, but I believe it is giving a prestige to corporations by act of Congress, and if we amend by putting in new names Congress will be continually dealing with these things.

Mr. HUSTED. I think the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee is anticipating a danger which does not exist.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUSTED. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Are these new names the names of persons actively engaged in the corporation?

Mr. HUSTED. They are actively interested in the work carried on by the corporation, active supporters.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. You are substituting working directors for honorary directors?

Mr. HUSTED. That is it, only we give the corporation more support and extend the activities in order that more young men and more young women in this country may get the benefit that this corporation is handing out to so many young people of the country.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the suspension of the rules.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 132 ayes and 30 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 2, 1921, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 2, 1921.

(Legislative day of Thursday, February 24, 1921.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD—POSTMASTERS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there is a little matter which I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate in the nature of correcting the RECORD of yesterday. I have received this morning from the Postmaster General a letter reading as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., March 2, 1921.

Hon. G. M. HITCHCOCK,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: On page 4327 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 1, 1921, Senator LODGE states:

"Mr. Cleveland blanketed in 40,000 postmasters at one time."

Senator LODGE is in error, as Mr. Cleveland never issued any Executive order classifying postmasters. Mr. Roosevelt, on November 30, 1908, issued an order blanketing postmasters at offices of the fourth class in certain States into the classified service. On October 15, 1912, Mr. Taft issued an order blanketing into the classified service the fourth-class postmasters in the remainder of the States.

Very sincerely,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

The Postmaster General is correct, so far as the RECORD is concerned. The RECORD reports the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] as using the language which he quotes, but my personal recollection is that the Senator referred to employees of the Government generally and not to postmasters. However, I have offered this letter of the Postmaster General in order that the RECORD may be corrected and that the Senator from Massachusetts may have the opportunity to correct the typographical error.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I did not say "postmasters." I said "offices." It is a mistake which I ask to have corrected. I very well knew that Mr. Cleveland never issued any order about post offices at all. President Roosevelt and President Taft did. It merely came into my mind when I remembered that first and last Mr. Cleveland, after the offices had been filled, put them under civil service to the number of 40,000, as I recall; but, I repeat, I did not say "postmasters"; I said "offices." President Cleveland never took any such action concerning postmasters, so far as I remember.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Assistant Secretary of Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, schedules of useless papers devoid of historic interest accumulated in the files of the department, and asking for action looking to their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, to be selected by the Chair. The Vice President appointed Mr. WALSH of Montana and Mr. FRANCE members of the committee on the part of the Senate, and ordered that the Secretary of the Senate notify the House of Representatives thereof.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The signature of the Vice President was announced to the following enrolled bills, which had previously received the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

H. R. 8067. An act to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia; to define the duties of the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets of the District of Columbia; and for other purposes;

H. R. 11572. An act for the relief of the John E. Moore Co.;

H. R. 12045. An act to provide for the conveyance of lots on the low grounds of Washington, D. C.;

H. R. 12634. An act for the relief of Wilhelm Alexanderson; and

H. R. 16100. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

FRENCH COLONIAL TROOPS IN GERMANY.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, I have received, as doubtless have many other Senators, a large number of anxious and protesting communications concerning alleged brutalities and atrocities in the occupied portion of Germany by the French Negro colonial troops. There is a report—No. 397—on this question that has been printed as a Senate document. I took the matter up with the Secretary of State, and very promptly received an answer in connection with the matter, which ought, in my judgment, to be printed in the RECORD. It clearly shows, largely on the testimony of American officers and representatives who are near the localities concerned, that these alleged atrocities are mere irresponsible propaganda, untrue in fact, and officially disapproved by the German Government. I ask that the letter from the Secretary of State be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 7, 1921.

In reply refer to WE 862t.01/232.

The Hon. SELDEN P. SPENCER,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of February 4, 1921, referring to reports of misconduct of French Negro troops in the occupied portion of Germany.

In reply I have the honor to inform you that the department is in receipt of many letters from individuals and from societies concerning this matter, all of which letters are answered at some length in order to correct misunderstandings. As soon as the first complaints were received an investigation was made, and from reports received from diplomatic and American military sources it is understood that there are at the present time no black troop units in the occupied territory, the French having removed such troops some time ago. It is believed, however, that there are certain Algerian and Moroccan troops still employed in the armies of occupation, such troops being Arab or a mixture of Arab, French, and other nationalities, and including a large proportion of purely French soldiers. So far as is known the Germans have made no accusations against the conduct of these troops.

The number of Senegalese troops in the occupied regions was never large. The specific attacks made against them in the German press have in most cases been refuted by investigation or by testimony on the part of responsible Germans, and where individuals have been found guilty they have been promptly punished. The American authorities in the Rhineland state that the stories of atrocities originate not in the occupied territory but in Berlin and appear to be very largely anti-French propaganda. This opinion would appear to be carried out by the fact that the agitation in the United States is carried on largely by the German-language press. Inasmuch as it is the understanding of the department that there are no Negro troops remaining in the occupied area and no recent examples of misbehavior have been brought forward, it would appear that these reports must be part of a widespread propaganda directed against France.

In response to a request from the Foreign Relations Committee of the House, a complete report on this subject was recently furnished to the committee by the department.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

BAINBRIDGE COLBY.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its session to-day it shall take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. KING. I think we had better wait until a quorum is present before the Senator submits the unanimous-consent request. Personally I shall have no objection to it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well; I shall withhold it for the present.

APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement furnished by the First Assistant Postmaster General, showing very clearly the action of that department of the Government in the execution of the Executive order of the President with reference to postmasters. It is very brief.

Mr. SMOOT. Was it not printed in the RECORD yesterday?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; it has not been printed in the RECORD. There was just a summary of figures printed yesterday. This is not a very long statement, but a very clear statement, a very impartial statement, merely giving the action of the department with reference to the execution of the order, and showing that it has been carried out in good faith.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a copy of the same letter. I have no objection to having it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina if the statement contains the Executive order of 1917?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; that is the one it refers to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does it show that order as amended by the order of 1920, or does it show the original order of 1917?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not able to answer the Senator. It covers the whole case and answers all the matters in controversy, showing what the department has done.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The order of 1917 is very different from the order of 1920. I was hopeful that the Senator's statement would embody not only the order of 1917 but also the order as amended in 1920.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not read the statement very carefully, but it starts out by referring to the order of March 31, 1917. I think it embraces all the orders that relate to the subject.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have seen the statement, and I am quite sure it covers the order of 1917.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It contains the order of 1917 as originally issued?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. The order is not included in the statement; it simply refers to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF INFORMATION,
POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
February 26, 1921.

Since the President's order of March 31, 1917, applying the nonpartisan civil-service test to the selection of presidential postmasters, appointments to these offices have gone to the candidate first on the list of eligibles furnished by the Civil Service Commission, and the Post Office Department has had no record indicating the political affiliations of the several successful candidates.

The assertion has frequently been made that this order has not been conscientiously administered. To show whether this charge is true and to ascertain just how the application of the civil-service principle has operated in eliminating partisanship and establishing service as the standard of fitness for appointment, the following letter was, on February 12, 1921, addressed to postmasters who have been appointed under this system:

On March 31, 1917, the President issued an Executive order whereby appointments to presidential post offices were made as the result of an open competitive examination, the result thereof being certified by the Civil Service Commission to the Postmaster General, who submitted to the President the name of the highest qualified eligible for appointment, unless it was established that the character or residence of such applicant disqualified him for appointment.

In accordance with this order you were appointed postmaster, the appointment being based solely on merit, as shown by the result of the examination. It is now claimed by some that in making these appointments the department has shown discrimination for political reasons. The department is without knowledge of the political affiliations of those appointed under the Executive order, as politics was not considered. It will be to the interest of the service to demonstrate that there has been an impartial administration of this order. As all appointments have been submitted to the Senate, it can not affect the selection or appointment of anyone, and in order to enable the department to answer this charge, which is unfounded, you will state in the space below your political affiliations.

It is not desired to know how you voted in any particular election or whether you voted for any particular candidate, but the party with which you usually affiliate.

There have been three points of attack upon the Post Office Department in an effort to discredit the sincerity of the President's order applying the civil-service principle to the appointment of residential postmasters. This disposes of the last of these attacks.

The first allegation was that the eligible having the highest standing was set aside and some one of lower standing appointed where party politics could be served by the attack. This charge was disposed of by citation of the record, which showed that of 1,560 appointments then made 1,454 had gone to persons whose names appeared first on the eligible list submitted by the Civil Service Commission, and that where the first eligibles were not appointed it was because of their death, declination, or some disability.

The next false accusation was that the Post Office Department failed to recognize the preference given to ex-service men under the law. In response to a resolution of the Senate on this subject the Postmaster General submitted a list showing the names of applicants for these offices who passed successfully the examination held by the Civil Service Commission. Applicants certified to the commission as entitled to preference on account of military service having been nominated to the Senate for confirmation, the department appointed either first eligibles or gave the preference over first eligibles to veterans according to the demands of the best interest of the service.

The Postmaster General's reply to this resolution gives a list of 218 nominations sent to the Senate, but not confirmed, who were entitled to preference for military service, 90 of the nominees not being the highest eligibles. There is also given a list of 49 who for sufficient reasons were not given preference over the higher eligibles, some having declined or withdrawn their applications, some disqualified by age, some being canceled by the Civil Service Commission, and some for some other disqualifying cause.

The records show statistically that there has been no political bias in making appointments under the President's order of March 31, 1917; that the first eligible has invariably been appointed unless disqualified, and that preference has been given to eligibles with military service except where this could not be done without injury to the service.

Replies have been received from 2,103 postmasters to the letter above set forth, which, of course, removes beyond cavil the question of their party affiliation. These replies cover every State in the Union and show that, including all sections, 1,012 appointees were Democrats, 907 were Republicans, 32 were independent, 10 were Prohibitionists, 3 were Socialists, 129 had no affiliation, and 10 failed to state their affiliation.

Omitting the 11 Southern States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, and Virginia—overwhelmingly Democratic in their population—the equation stands 598 Democrats, 846 Republicans, 26 independents, 9 Prohibitionists, 3 Socialists, 95 without affiliation, 9 blank, and 6 dead.

Even in the 11 almost solidly Democratic States a considerable number of Republicans received appointment as postmasters under the application of this civil-service order. In Alabama 6 Republicans were appointed postmasters, in Arkansas 5, in Florida 7, in Georgia 6, in Kentucky 5, in Louisiana 4, in Mississippi 1, in North Carolina 9, in South Carolina 2, in Texas 11, and in Virginia 5.

In States where the population is more evenly divided between the two great political parties, the appointment of Republicans frequently preponderated. In California, 33 Republicans and 14 Democrats were appointed; in Colorado, 10 Republicans and 15 Democrats; in Connecticut, 10 Republicans and 5 Democrats; in Delaware, 1 Republican and 2 Democrats; in Idaho, 11 Republicans and 5 Democrats; in Illinois, 62 Republicans and 33 Democrats; in Indiana, 19 Republicans and 29 Democrats; in Iowa, 63 Republicans and 19 Democrats; in Kansas, 29 Republicans and 20 Democrats; in Maine, 18 Republicans and 10 Democrats; in Maryland, 4 Republicans and 10 Democrats; in Massachusetts, 20 Republicans and 6 Democrats; in Michigan, 46 Republicans and 16 Democrats; in Minnesota, 55 Republicans and 15 Democrats; in Missouri, 18 Republicans and 54 Democrats; in Montana, 25 Republicans and 10 Democrats; in Nebraska, 55 Republicans and 21 Democrats; in Nevada, 2 Republicans and 1 Democrat; in New Hampshire, 7 Republicans and 4 Democrats; in New Jersey, 21 Republicans and 11 Democrats; in New Mexico, 3 Republicans and 7 Democrats; in New York, 40 Republicans and 36 Democrats; in North Dakota, 26 Republicans and 16 Democrats; in Ohio, 34 Republicans and 29 Democrats; in Oklahoma, 26 Republicans and 61 Democrats; in Oregon, 11 Republicans and 5 Democrats; in Pennsylvania, 55 Republicans and 37 Democrats; in Rhode Island, 1 Democrat; in South Dakota, 27 Republicans and 18 Democrats; in Tennessee, 8 Republicans and 24 Democrats; in Utah, 4 Republicans and 4 Democrats; in Vermont, 3 Republicans and 3 Democrats; in Washington, 23 Republicans and 10 Democrats; in West Virginia, 10 Republicans and 31 Democrats; in Wisconsin, 54 Republicans and 7 Democrats; and in Wyoming, 10 Republicans and 3 Democrats.

One Prohibitionist, 1 Socialist, and 1 having no affiliation were appointed from California. One Prohibitionist and 1 of no affiliation were appointed from Idaho. In Illinois there were 1 Independent, 1 Prohibitionist, and 7 of no affiliation. In Iowa there were 2 Independents, 1 Prohibitionist, and 9 of no affiliation. In Kansas, 1 Prohibitionist and 9 of no affiliation. In Massachusetts, 2 Independents. In Michigan there were 2 Independents and 4 of no affiliation. In Minnesota, 2 Independents, 1 Prohibitionist, and 7 without affiliation. In Missouri, 1 Independent and 4 without affiliation. In Nebraska there were 2 Independents, 1 Prohibitionist, and 11 without affiliation. In New York there were 1 Independent, 1 Socialist, and 3 without affiliation. In Ohio, 2 Independents and 5 without affiliation. In Oklahoma there were 2 Independents, 1 Prohibitionist, and 3 without affiliation. In Texas there were 2 Independents and 8 without affiliation. In South Carolina, 1 Prohibitionist and 1 without affiliation. In Vermont, 1 Independent. Virginia, 2 without affiliation. In Washington, 1 Independent and 1 without affiliation; and in Wisconsin, 3 Independents, 1 Prohibitionist, and 4 without affiliation.

The nonpartisan operation of the President's order applying civil-service rules to these appointments is indicated by the correspondence conveying this information, as well as by the statistics assembled. One postmaster writes, "At time of my appointment I was Republican county chairman," and another says, "Have been Republican county chairman for 10 years." Another Republican postmaster says, "The charge of political discrimination by your department is unfounded."

Another Republican postmaster writes:

I was one of the six who took the examination for this position. I was the only one who was a Republican; the rest were Democrats; two boasted of party influence. I simply took the exam. I had taught in grammar and high school; been superintendent of schools for 25 years, and for 2 years had been treasurer and head bookkeeper of a corporation doing some thousands of dollars a week of business. I felt if I did not get the position there must be something wrong about "civil service," but I got it, although in the "wrong" party. I never voted a Democratic ticket in my life. * * *

Another Republican writes:

I am returning to-day answer to your inquiry as to my party affiliation. I do not think, however, that the mere statement that I am and always have been a Republican is sufficient answer in my case to the inquiry.

For 40 years I have edited Republican newspapers in * * *. More than 30 of those years I edited newspapers in this city. They were not merely Republican in name. I was regarded as a radical, uncompromising, "stand-pat" Republican. With that record I entered the contest for the * * * post office when it was announced that civil-service rules would govern the appointment.

When the Civil Service Commission made its report, I was the highest on the list, and my name was certified to Postmaster General Burleson, who promptly recommended me for appointment, and President Wilson at once made the appointment as recommended. If there is any question or doubt as to the fairness or consistency of the administration in living up to its pledges in this line, my own case should be sufficient to prove the doubt groundless. I desire to give my testimony as to the absolute fairness of the department in making these appointments.

After stating his party affiliation, one says:

I feel that I should further state that I have affiliated with the Republican Party for the past 20 years.

So far as I have been able to ascertain, the question of politics did not enter into either the examination or my subsequent appointment to this office.

One of those who disavowed any political affiliation said:

The commission certainly never showed political favoritism in my appointment. The other candidate was a Democrat, while I lived with my father, who is a lifelong Republican and has been the judge of every election in this place for 20 years.

Another letter from a Republican shows that a very narrow margin of superiority in his rating was sufficient to secure his appointment. He says:

I wish to state that I was appointed because I made the highest grade in the competitive examination, beating the next highest by only fifty-five one-hundredths of a point.

This appointment came promptly and without the use of any outside influence, and I consider that the department has lived up to the letter and meaning of President Wilson's wise order.

A Republican writes:

I received the appointment, but did not accept; but I always felt that the order was administered impartially.

Another Republican says:

I believe it my duty to express my candid and sincere belief in the impartial administration of the Executive order of March 31, 1917. Long before I received my appointment and up to the present time I have followed through the press the action of the department in making appointments, and it is my frank belief that it has been impartial in every respect.

A postmaster who reports himself as being a Democrat says:

William took the examination at the same time I did. * * * We were competitors for the office. He was an ex-service man, wounded in "no man's land," and a Republican. My standing was much higher than his in the examination, but he was appointed postmaster at this office. I was glad of it; would not have taken the examination had I known he was going to take it. He resigned and I was appointed in his stead.

A Republican writes:

I was treated with absolute fairness in every step of procedure from the time of taking the examination until I received my appointment as postmaster. I shall be glad to render any further aid in this matter that you may see fit to ask. The merit system as established by Executive order should be retained as a permanent thing or part in the Postal Service.

An Independent writes:

The records of the department will show that my appointment was bitterly opposed by the pie-eating Democrats and indorsed by the leading business men regardless of political faith. * * * On account of this opposition there was one or more investigations, and your inspector called on every business house in the city and got a personal expression from them on my appointment. * * *

Have voted for the following men: Bryan, President Wilson, Senator CAPPER for governor and Senator, and Gov. Allen. This is why I was not considered a deserving Democrat, and the chairman of the Democratic central committee did all in his power to prevent my appointment.

Another postmaster says:

I have always been a Republican, first, last, and all the time, and nothing was said in my application or any correspondence from the department relative to my politics, and if the matter was ever discussed at any time I had no knowledge of it and am sure that the department did not know my party affiliation at the time of my appointment.

One postmaster says that prior to his appointment it had been reported in his community that appointments were being made without regard to the civil-service order, and that he was urged to believe that he would stand no chance of appointment on account of not being a Democrat:

I refused to believe such information—

he says—

for, having read the Executive order very carefully, I reached only one conclusion, that merit alone would be the deciding factor. And the results proved my decision, for had it not been for the Executive order under which I took my examination with an equal opportunity with all the other candidates, I would not be the postmaster at ——— to-day. For, being a Republican, I would have had no chance if the matter was to be decided politically.

I am frank to say that I fail to see where there are any facts to base this criticism upon. In fact, if it was to be political and one party favored, then why was the order issued?

In the judgment of the writer, while a Republican, and should any changes be made, the postmaster stands in line for continuous service, yet I believe the order was one of the finest things issued from the Executive Office, for it removes all political squabbles for the postmasterships and places them upon a competitive basis. The result will be, not as often would happen, incompetency, but highest efficiency. I sincerely hope that the new administration will go one step further and place the postmasters under the classified civil service. This will be a great step forward.

I will further add that when I took my examination I was warned in writing by the commission not to mention religion or politics anywhere.

It would certainly be of interest and value, I think, if the result of your inquiry could be sent to all the postmasters.

Another Republican whose appointment came as a surprise says:

The inclosed communication does not call for more information than stated on the blank spaces, but I think my case is just a little different than most appointments. I served four terms as postmaster in this office from 1898 to 1914. When the postmaster who succeeded me resigned I was requested by patrons of the office to take up the examination. I could not see any reason for appointing a Republican, but to test the new rule of civil service I submitted my papers and was very much surprised when I received notice that I was at the head of the list and was appointed postmaster. There certainly was no political influence in my case. Had I known that the Post Office appointments were going back to politics, I never would have given up a good position to come back.

Another says:

I desire to advise that absolutely no political, religious, or fraternal affiliations were mentioned in the appointment of the postmaster at * * *. I have been a lifelong Republican and received my appointment solely on merit after passing the highest grade in the civil service examination for the position.

One postmaster says:

I am in possession of three commissions signed by Republican Presidents for postmaster at another office of the third class, and at the examination held for postmaster at * * * the other applicant was a Democrat and chairman of the precinct committee, so I can truthfully state that there was no discrimination shown in this case for political or other reasons. The Hon. Frank W. Mondell will verify that he has recommended me to the previous appointments as postmaster under a Republican administration, and am satisfied that the ruling of March 31, 1917, was strictly adhered to in this case. Any further information will be cheerfully supplied.

One of the postmasters who is a Democrat writes:

I am glad to state that in making my appointment the department adhered strictly to the presidential order of March 31, 1917. The department had no knowledge at that time of my party preference, as I made no reference thereto on the papers I submitted with my application. As a matter of fact, I had the combined opposition of both major parties in my own town, and also the opposition of the Congressman from my district. Had the appointment been made from a political standpoint I certainly would not have received it. My appointment was due to the fact that I received the highest grade in the competitive examination.

An independent says:

Have always been strictly an independent in politics, not affiliated with any political party, but guided entirely by the issues and men presented in each campaign. Have twice voted for a Republican President and three times for a Democratic President. During the past 20 years, with one or two exceptions, I have supported the Republican Members of Congress, and generally speaking have supported the Republican State ticket. At the time I was appointed postmaster here my appointment was strongly opposed by every Democratic politician in the State. * * *

In another instance of a Democrat being appointed the postmaster writes:

When the civil service examination was held to fill the position as postmaster at this office four applicants contested; three Democrats and one Republican.

The Democrat who had the indorsement of the Democratic organization, and who had secured the appointment as acting postmaster at this office, stood third in the examination, and the Republican stood fourth, and I stood first, and in compliance with the Executive order I was nominated for the position.

The department did not know or ask what my political affiliation was. I am convinced I could have never secured the appointment on a political basis.

A Republican writes that he was rejected by the local board in August, 1917 (draft), because of bad eyes and that his attention was called to the President's Executive order relative to the competitive appointment of postmasters and advised to take the examination. Of the four applicants who took the examination, he says:

The other three were affiliated with the Democratic Party and two have been candidates for other offices. I and my father before me have always been affiliated with the Republican Party.

No information was asked of me at any time as to my political affiliations, and I can say further that the Democratic committeemen from this precinct worked for one of the candidates and that a friend of another of the candidates who happened to be at the Capitol, made a special call in the interests of his friend, and I can also say further that one of the applicants also had petitions signed by about 25 asking for his appointment.

A Democrat, explaining how he got into office says (names being omitted):

Politics did not enter into the appointment of the postmaster at * * * in any way.

* * * A Republican had charge of the office at the beginning of the present administration. Soon after his time expired and an examination was held to fill the vacancy.

He * * * and I * * * took the examination. His grade was three or four points higher than mine and he was given the position and held it five years. His health failed and he appointed his son * * * assistant.

The office was then raised to the third class and an examination was held for third-class postmasters to fill the position at * * *. This son * * * and I took the examination. But before the appointment was made * * * resigned to take a better position in a bank and I was appointed postmaster.

There was no politics in it at all. It was not even suggested. The same thing happened at * * *. A Republican and a Democrat took the examination. The Republican was given the position because he passed the best examination.

It is frequently said in letters by postmasters who avow themselves to be Democrats that no political influence was used to secure their appointments and that though they were Democrats their political affiliation was not known or inquired into. One Democrat says:

In connection with the inclosure I might say that I filed my application for the local post office, passed the examination, and was appointed and confirmed without at any time writing or asking anyone either in public or private life for any assistance. My politics could not have been known to anyone handling the matter unless such persons on his own initiative discovered what my politics were and if this was done I do not know anything about it.

One Republican postmaster closes his communication with this suggestion:

The Republican Party will do well to copy the Democratic Party in the matter of post-office appointments. A lot of my friends thought there would be no use for me to take the examination for postmaster on account of being a Republican, but politics did not enter into the matter at all. The Democratic Party has been very fair as far as I am concerned and the Republican Party will make a mistake if the old political spoils system is employed in making post-office appointments.

MEMORIAL OF THE LATE SURG. GEN. GORGAS.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, on February 14 last the Senate granted unanimous consent to print as a public document the memorial speeches on the late Surg. Gen. Gorgas. I have been furnished a photograph of Surg. Gen. Gorgas, but the photograph can not be published with the public document except by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. May I inquire of the Senator whether that consent was given in the House or in the Senate?

Mr. HEFLIN. It was given in the Senate on the 14th of February.

Mr. SMOOT. The Government Printing Office can not publish the photograph without a specific order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Government Printing Office be authorized to reproduce the photograph as a part of the document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

INDIAN ALLOTMENTS—VETO MESSAGE.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to dispose of the bill (H. R. 517) amending an act to provide for drainage of Indian allotments of the Five Civilized Tribes, approved March 27, 1914, together with the objections of the President thereto, which was reported last night from the Committee on Indian Affairs. There is no objection to it in any way so far as I know. It was vetoed by the President under an obvious misapprehension. The only change made in the existing law is a provision permitting the amount of $15—the previous limit—to be raised because of the increased cost of making the drainage and removing the right of an individual to veto the matter. The bill was passed by the House over the President's veto by a vote of 322 to 18, and I think there will be no one in the Senate objecting to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding? The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK]. Being unable to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like the privilege of asking unanimous consent that some Senator who understands the veto message on which we are voting may make some explanation of it. I do not know a thing about it, and I do not care to vote unadvisedly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unfortunately, the rules provide that there can be no discussion or explanation during the calling of the roll.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Not even by unanimous consent? I rose for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that that might be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That can not be done even by unanimous consent. After the roll call has started nothing can be done but to continue and conclude the call.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the regular order.

The reading clerk resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], which I transfer to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The result was announced—yeas 67, nays 5, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT. A quorum of the Senate being present, and more than two-thirds thereof having voted in the affirmative, the bill becomes a law, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication, with accompanying papers, from the United States Shipping Board in response to Senate resolution No. 413, of December 27, 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, inasmuch as the communication from the Shipping Board in response to the resolution passed by the Senate some time ago, requesting certain information, is very short, being but a single page, I ask unanimous consent to have it read to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, March 1, 1921.

SIR: Pursuant to directions of the United States Shipping Board, I quote below resolution adopted by said board at a meeting on March 1, 1921:

"Whereas on December 27, 1920, Senator WALTER E. EDGE submitted a resolution (S. Res. 413) to the Senate of the United States, which was considered and agreed to, instructing the United States Shipping Board to submit a report on moneys appropriated from September 7, 1916, to November 30, 1920, on profits, capital, number and description of vessels, system of accounting, contracts of operation, number of employees, etc.; and

"Whereas said resolution was submitted to the general comptroller with instructions to prepare an answer thereto for the board; and

"Whereas said general comptroller's department has since the 1st day of January had in hand most important matters demanding in the interests of the public immediate attention, and thus far has been unable to prepare a complete answer to said Senate resolution 413 as requested by the board; and

"Whereas a report has been prepared by Joseph N. Teal, one of the Commissioners of the United States Shipping Board, covering in substance the facts required by said resolution; and

"Whereas said report has been examined by the general comptroller as well as by members of his staff, and has been approved by him and them as being substantially a correct statement of facts; and

"Whereas said general comptroller has advised the board that said report in substance answers the inquiries in said resolution heretofore referred to, and advises the submission of said report as a proper response thereto.

"Resolved, That the said report prepared by Joseph N. Teal, covering operations of the United States Shipping Board and United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation from September 7, 1916, to January 1, 1921, be submitted to the Senate as an answer so far as it may be germane to the resolution above referred to."

Two copies of the report referred to in the above-quoted resolution are transmitted herewith.

Respectfully,

JOHN J. FLAHERTY, Secretary.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

DUTIES OF UNITED STATES JUDGES.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 5042) to require judges appointed under authority of the United States to devote their entire time to the duties of a judge, and I submit a report (No. 826) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] to the bill.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill 5042, just reported by the Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, be read, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I do not think it will cause any debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from South Carolina advises me that if the bill leads to any discussion he will withdraw the request.

Mr. DIAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Under that condition I will not make an objection to it, but I will be compelled to object to the presentation of any other matter save the conference report upon the Agricultural appropriation bill, which I understand has been agreed to except as to two items. The Senator from North Dakota agrees, and will make the request, I understand, that not exceeding 30 minutes be devoted to the consideration of that report.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will pardon me——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one word. I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to say, by way of notice, that I will undertake to keep the naval appropriation bill before the Senate continuously until we get a vote on the bill either to pass it or to defeat it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator sits down may I ask him a question?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator would not be willing to lay aside the bill for a conference report?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There seem to be so many conference reports that they practically operate to blanket and defeat the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. What conference report is it?

Mr. NORRIS. It is the conference report on the Patent Office bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I can assure the Senator that it will lead to a great deal of discussion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator, I think, would not ask me to lay aside the naval appropriation bill under those circumstances. Let us get a vote upon the naval bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Unfortunately I can not assure the Senator that the conference report will lead to no discussion, as the Senator from Utah has just said that it will lead to a great deal of debate; but it ought to be disposed of.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That would amount practically to defeating the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. NORRIS. If we should reach a time when it became obvious that it would be impossible to finish the naval bill, would the Senator then yield for the purpose I have indicated?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will confer with the Senator in that event.

Mr. NORRIS. I should be very glad to have the Senator do so. I do not want, of course, to displace the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am sure the Senator does not.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize that I probably can not get the conference report disposed of.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, before the Senator from Nebraska takes his seat I should like to ask him what has become of the conference report on the Patent Office bill.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the conference report about which I was talking to the Senator from Washington. I have never been able to get it up, or to get an agreement as to a vote. I will state frankly to the Senator from South Carolina that it looks as though it was going to be impossible to reach a vote on it, because, as the Senator knows, if there should be extended debate on it, it could not be disposed of; and there is promise of a good deal of debate, which, under the existing circumstances, would make it impossible to secure a vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I just want to go on record as saying that I regard this as one of the most important matters that is coming before the Senate, involving, as it does, certain interests of those who have made our country great by discovering and patenting different devices.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Washington, if I may have his attention——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] has the floor. Does he yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, the bill to which I referred is very short. I should like to have it disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the bill be read, and see if there is any objection to its consideration.

The reading clerk read Senate bill 5042, to require judges appointed under authority of the United States to devote their entire time to the duties of a judge, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last sentence of section 1 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as amended by the act approved July 30, 1914, entitled "An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911," is amended to read as follows:

"Every district judge shall reside in the district or one of the districts for which he is appointed and shall devote his entire time to the duties of a judge, and for offending against the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a high misdemeanor."

The READING CLERK. The committee reports an amendment on page 1, line 12, following the word "judge," to insert the words "and shall not engage in any other employment or vocation for which he receives compensation."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think this bill needs a little explanation, in view of the fact that it provides a punishment for the disobedience of its provisions. The principal purpose, I suppose, is to prevent a judge from going out on the Chautauqua circuit for pay, or to prevent a judge from engaging in any other business for pay; but the word "compensation" is used. I know judges who live upon farms, and have their little farms outside of the city. They operate their farms at the same time that they are acting as judges. If they should raise a little wheat or a little barley or some potatoes, and sell those potatoes or other products, would they be guilty of an offense for which they ought to be punished?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if the Senator from North Dakota will yield, it is evident that there is going to be discussion and debate over this bill, and I object to its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Washington if he is not willing to lay aside the unfinished business so that the conferees may have an opportunity to present the conference report on the Agricultural bill. I know of no one who wants to speak on this conference report except one Senator, a member of the committee. I do not understand that it will take any great length of time. I am anxious to have it disposed of this morning, because I expect to leave the city very soon, and should like to have it disposed of before I do so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On account of the personal accommodation of the Senator from North Dakota, I am particularly glad to give an opportunity for the consideration of the conference report, with the statement that if it leads to prolonged debate I shall insist upon the resumption of the consideration of the naval bill at the expiration of a reasonable length of time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair inquire who is to decide what constitutes "prolonged debate"?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In this instance, Mr. President, I will decide it to the extent of making a motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what the Chair wants to know. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the naval bill is laid aside until the Senator from Washington desires to resume its consideration.

Mr. GRONNA. I present the conference report on the Agricultural bill, and ask for its immediate adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, 31, 32, 33, 79, 80, 82, 115, 116, and 119 to the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, amendment numbered 31 is the free-seed provision. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] desires to address the Senate on that subject, and I do not know whether a separate vote will be asked or not; but on all the others I move that the Senate agree to the action of the conferees.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I realize that this is not an opportune time to discuss at any length——

Mr. GRONNA. I understand that the Senator from Iowa is not opposing agreeing to all the amendments except that numbered 31.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There has been no agreement on that, has there?

Mr. KENYON. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, there has been an agreement on all.

Mr. KENYON. There has been an agreement by a majority of the conferees, but not by all.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, may we have order? This is an important matter.

Mr. KENYON. Tremendously important—this question of free seed. It goes to the very existence of the Republic—in the minds of some Members.

The VICE PRESIDENT rapped for order.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the situation is this: The conferees have agreed on all of the amendments. The well-known and notorious free-seed amendment has not been subscribed to by all of the conferees, but it has by a majority. Being one of the conferees, for my part I refused to sign the conference report with the free-seed proposition in it. Now, that is the situation. I am perfectly willing that all of the amendments, except that one, shall be agreed to, if we can have a vote in the Senate on that.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if this is not a complete report?

Mr. KENYON. It is a complete report.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, it seems to me the only way to do is either to adopt the report or to reject it.

Mr. GRONNA. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the conference report is one single question. The report shows that the Senate has receded from its amendment No. 31. The conference report must either be concurred in or it must go back to the conference as a whole. It can not be split up.

Mr. GRONNA. The Chair is correct. That is my understanding. I am perfectly willing to have a vote taken at any time, but I understand that the Senator from Iowa wishes to speak on this motion briefly.

Mr. KENYON. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the Chair. If the Senate rejects the conference report, then the conference report, as I understood the Chair—and I think he was correct—goes back to the conference, and in that event it is still in conference?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. And it will come back here. If the Senate disagrees to this report, it will disagree to it because of the seed provision being in the conference report, and it will take only a little while, if this report is rejected, to go back in conference and agree upon that one item.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, as one of the conferees, I should like to make a short statement in reference to this situation.

This item of free seed was voted on by the Senate——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I do not want to lose the floor.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Oh, well, then, I will take the floor in my own time. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. KENYON. I had not started yet.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I will start later.

Mr. KENYON. I am sure the Senator will, though perhaps he will not stop as quickly as I shall.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that 30 minutes have been allowed in which to consider this conference report.

Mr. GRONNA. Oh, no.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the wrong understanding. The matter is in the hands of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. HEFLIN. Then I should like to know of the Senator from Washington if at the expiration of 30 minutes, or any number of minutes, he proposes to stop the consideration of the conference report on the Agricultural appropriation bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not specified any particular time, but I think it would be unreasonable to proceed with the discussion here about an item of $360,000 for free seeds and as a result defeat the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. The reason why I make the inquiry is that if we are going to have only a few minutes I do not think one Senator ought to occupy the floor during the whole time. There are several Senators who would like to say something on the subject.

Mr. KENYON. I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Alabama shall proceed now and take all the time he wants.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not want to take the Senator off his feet.

Mr. KENYON. Not at all.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thought if we had only a few minutes that other Senators would like to be heard.

Mr. KENYON. I should be delighted to hear anything that can be said in defense of this free-seed graft, and I am perfectly willing to give up my time to listen to such defense.

Perhaps that language was a little too strong, Mr. President.

Now, here is the situation: I presume I am about as much interested in agriculture and the Agricultural bill as any Senator here. I am not willing to engage in a long discussion and defeat the Agricultural bill for a number of reasons—one is the amendment in the bill of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], of which I shall speak in a moment.

Here we have the spectacle, Mr. President, of the dignified Senate of the United States, with a great naval bill before it, and information coming to us of the serious condition of international affairs, pausing to settle the question of free seeds—an edifying spectacle!

That is the only amendment in controversy. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] suggested yesterday that at the time he entered Congress this question was up. It may run on for ages yet to come, and children yet unborn may be discussing it here in the future. It is always so complicated with something else that you can not get a fair, square expression of the Senate and the House on it, and it is complicated at this time with the proposition of loaning money to farmers in the drought-stricken regions, a proposition which I favored, and which I believe has great merit to it. So when we talk about defeating the free-seeds provision we are met with the proposition, "Do you want to destroy this great amendment in the Agricultural bill giving the Government the power and the right to loan money to the drought-stricken farmers?"

I am amazed, Mr. President, that this item is here. The House committee defeated it; the House put it in on the floor, and they not only put in the old amount of $240,000, but increased it to $360,000, and this cheap thing in the eyes of the public and in the eyes of the people who get the seeds has cost this Government at least $5,000,000 in the last four years. That includes, of course, the burden on the mails.

What I say about it is not in criticism of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], because I think a better representative of the people, a truer friend of the agricultural interests, never sat in this body. But it has come about in this way——

Mr. REED. The Senator perhaps will explain the matter I rose to ask him about. Did I understand him to say that the seeds had cost the people in the last three years $5,000,000?

Mr. KENYON. I said in the last four years this free-seed distribution had cost the people of the United States over $5,000,000, not just the purchase of the seed, but that plus the expense of transporting them through the mail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KENYON. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Did the Senator state that the original bill provided for an appropriation of $240,000, but that the Senate struck that out and the conferees had put in $360,000?

Mr. KENYON. No; I did not intend to convey that impression. The House put $360,000 in the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. GRONNA. The House put $360,000 in the bill, the Senate committee struck that out altogether, and the Senate sustained the action of the Senate committee; but it was put back in conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was no change in the amount?

Mr. KENYON. There was no change in the amount. In the Senate we adopted an amendment appropriating $5,000,000 to be used in loans to farmers for buying seed in the drought-stricken regions. That amendment and the free-seed amendment were the only matters in controversy, practically, before the conferees. The House conferees took the amendment appropriating $5,000,000 to the House, and the House voted $2,000,000 for that purpose, leaving nothing then but the free-seed proposition. It was quite apparent, after they had done this, that there would be very much of a weakening on the part of the Senate conferees; and there was. I say that in no spirit of criticism. It is just a plain unvarnished fact. I do not want to criticize the other branch of Congress, and it is against the rules, but there do seem to be men in Congress who care more about this free-seed appropriation than they do about their souls' salvation. So that by reason of this amendment, and the House position on the amendment, we have the free-seed business back in all its glory, and I assume it can not be defeated now, because to defeat it would defeat the entire bill, we will be told, and so the bunko game is put over on us.

If it were not for the virtue of the amendment providing an appropriation to buy seeds in the drought-stricken area, I would not have any hesitancy in standing on this floor and defeating the whole Agricultural appropriation bill, letting it go over to the next Congress and letting the people of the United States understand that with the Treasury almost bankrupt, and scanning every field of taxation, the Congress of the United States, for the privilege of sending out free seeds under a frank, with the name of a Congressman in the corner, was willing to let the bill be defeated. I am embarrassed, and I can not do it because of the virtue of the other amendment. So will others be, and I suppose the thing will go through.

Mr. President, the other day we passed through the Senate a bill to help in sending food which had been donated by the farmers of this country to famine-stricken China, the railroads to furnish the transportation, and the railway men to furnish their services, yet that bill does not emerge from the other branch of the Congress; and while I am not criticizing them, I will simply say that one branch of Congress, refusing to help in this enterprise of feeding the starving Chinese, insists on $360,000 for garden seed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, no doubt the Senator intended to refer to it, but I suggest that it would not cost as much to send that food over to those starving people as it will to get and distribute these seeds.

Mr. KENYON. It would not, or anything like it; and they are dying at the rate of something like 7,000 a day, 14,000,000 Chinamen are facing starvation. It is great statesmanship—but I realize that the rules limit a man in talking about it.

A short time ago I read a letter from a Member of Congress to a constituent about the garden seed, and I tried to find the letter, but have not succeeded. It illustrates how this thing is used.

I know everybody holds up his hands in holy horror and says, "Do you mean to insinuate that our constituents are bought with garden seeds? Yours may be, but ours are not. Do you mean to insinuate that distinguished Members of Congress would descend to sending out of packages of garden seed to influence elections?" It does not make much difference how sanctimonious an expression anybody puts on, the people of the United States know that it is used for that purpose. It is cheap. It discredits the American Congress, besides looting the Treasury.

That letter to which I referred ran along something like this, as I remember it:

I am sitting in my office looking out through the window at the cold stone of the Washington Monument. It would be much more beautiful if it were covered with flowers, and as I sit here and look at the cold stone of the Washington Monument, I am somehow or other reminded of that little plot you have back of your home, and how fine it would be if you could have flowers growing there, and a garden producing tomatoes and turnips, and I am turning from the window to write you this letter and send you a few packages of garden seed.

P. S.—Please remember that I will be a candidate for election in the fall.

[Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. Always in the closing days of a session the occupants of the galleries forget the rules. They must keep quiet.

Mr. KENYON. I suppose you can go back to the old days of the Prophet Jeremiah and try to justify this habit. He proclaimed that they would sow wheat but would reap thorns, and I believe that the time has come in this country when, trivial as this thing may seem, those who sow it for votes will reap exactly the opposite.

The branches of some of the legislatures in this country have passed resolutions denouncing this thing. We are always met with the old argument of how it will help some poor person to get a garden. If it did help in that way, I would have less objection to it; if it helped the school children to a love of flowers, and made happier homes and better wives, and healthier babies, as we will be told, I would have less objection to it. We have the same old thing year after year—the same hoary-headed old petty, penurious, pestiferous graft.

Some interesting letters have been sent at different times to Members of Congress about the seeds. One Congressman received a letter from one of his constituents, to whom he had sent a package of garden seed, which read as follows:

Send me another package of beans. My wife made bean soup out of the last ones you sent and we had it last night for supper. It was great.

This is always claimed to be put in for the benefit of the farmer, and the great friends of the farmer here—some of whom, when we had the packer bill up, seeking to stop the robbery of the American farmer by the control of the market place, were found side by side with the packers—will undoubtedly be now talking about the farmer. They say we ought to do this little something for the farmer. Here is what one farmer wrote to a Congressman:

It is nauseating to us to see the Government spending millions of good dollars for a worthless article, and it is surely disgusting to see a Member of Congress trying to perpetuate himself in office by handing out such a worthless sop to his constituents. A match or a toothpick has some real value and wouldn't cost the Government so much, and we have no doubt would be used by a majority of the recipients, where not one-tenth of the seeds ever get into the ground, and when they do are a detriment to the planter. It is hoped that we will have a Congress some day that won't go to "seed," and one that will realize that voters can not be influenced by any such cheap methods.

While this may fail now by reason of these complications, with a new Congress pledged to economy, I hope it will be one of the first things they will take hold of.

What are you going to send out to the women voters—vanity boxes, rouge rags, and other things suggested by Senators around me? Are you going into the business of using public money to carry on these trivial campaigns? Let us do something for the women. Send them flowers through the mail, or feathers for their hats, or something. It is just as sensible as this. It is unjust discrimination; though it is claimed, I think, that the women like to get these garden seed to plant a wonderful garden, blest by the fall of the rain and the sunshine, growing up to bless the memory of the Congressman who never forgets his constituents and the children wandering amidst the flowers murmuring "God bless our Congressman."

When you come to the farmer question, and argue that the farmers want these, I enter my emphatic denial. It may be that in some cities there may be some little good done by the development of the taste for flowers among children by gardening, but you can go to the corner grocery and get seeds for 5 cents a package just as well as to have the Government pass them out.

I desire to read, on the subject of the farmer, for I know that is what we are going to hear about, a short editorial from Henry Wallace's Farmer. If there is a man in the country entitled to speak for the farmer, it is Henry Wallace. He is to be the next Secretary of Agriculture, and the President elect could not have found a better one in the whole United States. I wish to say that the Democratic Secretary of Agriculture, a splendid man who comes from Iowa, not the mother of Presidents, but the mother of Secretaries of Agriculture, has denounced this whole thing, and has called on Congress to stop it. He has gone out and in speeches denounced it throughout the country. What kind of process does the Congress need to get this idea out of its head? Here is what Henry Wallace's Farmer said:

We felt like throwing up our hat and shouting a few hallelujahs when we read in the report of the Secretary of Agriculture that he would ask Congress not to make an appropriation for the free distribution of garden seed as usually conducted. We hope he will be able to persuade Congress to give up this hoary graft.

He is a Scotchman who speaks out what he thinks.

Long years ago, before there was any Agricultural Department, Congress made an appropriation for the free distribution of seeds. There was necessity for it then; there is no such necessity now. Ever since that time Congress has been appropriating, we don't know how much money, but probably, including the expense, from a quarter to a half million each year, to enable Congressmen to frank some common garden seeds—which sometimes would grow—to farmers who had exactly the same kind of seeds growing in their own gardens year after year.

It was a very nice, easy way for the Congressman to make the lady of the farm believe he was thinking of her and sending her a present through the mails each year.

The Secretary proposes to carry out the original idea of the grant—to get rare and valuable seeds and plants for different localities, which can be tested out in these localities, to ascertain whether they are suitable to the soil and climate. The best way to do this is through the experiment stations.

Speaking generally, the farmers have been disgusted with this business, to our certain knowledge, for about 20 years, yet it still continues. It is nothing but a bit of congressional graft which the Congressman is not willing to give up. We doubt whether the present administration, with all its power, will be able to shut off this petty, little, picayunish graft, this delicate reminder to the voter that his Congressman at Washington is lying awake nights thinking about him and his wife and his family and his farm. We certainly wish the Secretary success in this most desirable reform. The good wife on the farm will have no trouble in getting beans and peas and carrots and raddishes and "yarbs" and "garden sass" without any help from Congress or the Congressman, and without any obligations to him.

That is the farmer viewpoint, not the farmer politician, not the farmer Congressman and Senator, who tries to farm the farmer with cheap talk, but the actual man out on the farm.

I desire to read from an editorial in a leading paper of the country, the Marshalltown Times-Republican, on this subject, as follows:

By their seeds ye shall know them. Congress has adjourned. It passed the usual appropriation bill and made the customary distribution of worthless seeds to the voters as a cheap sop for past loyalty.

If every recipient of garden seeds would plant them and then vote accordingly at the next congressional election, what a world of new faces would be noticeable in the Halls of Congress. We tried planting some of them several years ago with the following result:

The lettuce seed brought forth fruit in the form of leaves about as thick as a cabbage leaf and of a texture resembling a palm-leaf fan. We had had visions of the tender, succulent variety, but, although I have just paid a $50 dentist bill, I was unable to make any noticeable impression. We took some to an old lady who had the reputation of having more jaw action than anyone in town and told her if she liked it to come over—we had a plenty. She never came. I spoke to a friend that had a corn shredder, but he refused to give it a try out, as the machinery was not guaranteed against anything tougher than a dried cornstalk. We then conceived the idea that a valuable forage crop had been overlooked and so fed some to the cow, and for weeks we could see her, even in her leisure moments, in a masterly attempt to put it away for keeps. The result was that we fed her on bran mash for two weeks to enable her to rest up and be normal.

RADISH OF HOLLOW VARIETY.

The radishes were of the not uncommon hollow variety. If you ate them without peeling, you were apt to come to the conclusion that you were eating horse-radish. If you peeled them, you wondered how the wood-pulp manufacturers had overlooked such a promising raw material.

The onions were in size about like a school boy's assortment of marbles, but what they lacked in size they made up in strength. If you would give it a moment's thought, you would probably come to the same conclusion that I did, and that is, Congress had them bred up to take the place of whisky killers.

One day we had congressional salad from these selfsame vegetables, with appropriate dressing. They say time dulls all memories, but that salad still holds a vivid place in my memory, and I never will forget the Congressman responsible for sending the seed except when in the election booth. By their seeds ye shall know them.

That is the farcical situation over the country, the general opinion of people about the seeds.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going to take the time of the Senate further on this matter. It is considered a small thing. We are not permitted to save money in large things. If we try to save any on the naval appropriation bill, we are accused of not being willing to defend our country. We are not permitted to save any money in the small things; they are too trivial; and so we go on, and there never seems to be any place to commence. If there ever is a good place to commence, it is right here and now on this article, to save the country at least $1,000,000 a year. If we take the small things like this, and keep piling them up, possibly we would get somewhere in the matter of saving. I do not know what we are coming to. Men seem willing to vote for anything here. The poor old Treasury of the United States has few defenders, and one of its greatest defenders is going out of this body in a few days.

It is a joke. We laugh about this and go on voting for it. We have it so complicated every year with something else that we ought to pass that we can not defeat it. That is the trouble in the Congress. We are compelled sometimes to vote for things we do not believe in to get the thing that we must have.

I have sometimes thought that for the few years I expect to remain here I would support appropriation bills absolutely essential to carry on the Government and fight all the rest of them. I am intensely interested in certain great humanitarian progressive questions that come before the American Congress, and have voted for them. I think we shall have to call a halt on practically everything for a few years and see if we can not cut down the enormous expenses of the Government. If we feel we must have something in the home or on the farm or in the place of business that we may be able to get along a few years without; thrifty people do that and wait and scrimp and save. It seems to me we have to reach that point pretty soon with the Government and the Treasury of the United States.

How can anyone condemn any appropriation out of the Federal Treasury if we go on and appropriate $360,000 for garden seed? It is the crowning farce of congressional action.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I always listen with a great deal of interest to the able and distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. I can not agree with the argument that he advances. If there ever was a time when Congress should continue the seed distribution that time is now. If there ever was a time when the people need the little bit of seed that the Government distributes that time is now.

The Senator reminds us of some Republican who received a package of beans and used them in making himself some soup, and he straightway wrote back to his Member of Congress for more beans. I submit that since the Republican Party carried the country last fall very few people have even had bean soup, and if conditions get much worse the Government in all probability will have to send beans to all of them.

When I hear Senators without even batting an eye speak of appropriating money in millions and hundreds of millions and then get up here and quibble about giving to the whole population of the United States $360,000 for rare vegetable and field seeds, I confess that I can not reconcile the two positions. The Senator from Iowa is worrying and worrying about this thing of distributing seed. Some one has said that worry is forethought gone to seed, and I am opposed to distributing that kind of seed. We have been told for a long, long time that he who makes two blades of grass to grow where only one grew before is a benefactor, and I submit to the Senator from Iowa that we now distribute some very fine grass seed, and I want to see the time come when we can make four blades of grass to grow where only one grew before.

The Congress a few years ago—and I was a member of the Committee on Agriculture in the House at the time—provided for obtaining choice field seeds, rare seeds of various kinds, to be distributed throughout the country.

I submit that that was a good thing. If the farmers of Iowa or of North Dakota develop a fine seed of some variety it is well for the seed to come to Washington and be distributed, so the farmers of the East and of the South and of the North might have the opportuntiy of planting such seed, and that has been done. We have distributed seeds after that fashion.

Garden seed? If I could take the Senator from Iowa down into my State to the garden spot of Dixie, and let him see those big, luscious tomatoes, grown from seeds sent from the Agricultural Department here; if I could let him enjoy some of the beans produced from seeds distributed from Washington, he would forget all of his worry about this little package of seed that goes to the farmer; he would rejoice that he failed, as he will fail to-day, in striking down this provision for seed distribution.

The Senator tells us that when the new Members come into the House they will strike down the free-seed distribution. I invite him now to watch them hit the seed-distribution trail.

Mr. KENYON. I did not want to predict that; I am hoping that they will; but I have my doubts.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad the Senator from Iowa does not predict it for it is not going to come to pass, because when they get here and begin to get letters from their constituents telling them "You are a new Member, and I trust that you will continue to send these seeds as your predecessor has done," that will be the end of that, and the argument of the Senator from Iowa will prove of no avail.

However, the Senator from Iowa reminds me of a Congressman telling his constituents that as he looks upon the Washington Monument, cold and towering in the distance, his mind's eye beholds a little flower garden back home in his district. Yes, Mr. President, there humming birds are sipping the liquid sweets and the bumble bees are buzzing in the blossoms, and the butterflies are floating on the perfumed air, and the curly-haired tots are playing joyously about the yard, while birds are singing in the trees, and yet the Senator would deprive them even of that little plot of flowers the seeds for which the Government has sent out to them. I ask the Senator not to do that; I ask him to permit these flowers to continue to bloom and sweeten the air, to make the birds sing more merrily, and to contribute to the general enjoyment of the household. Not only that, Mr. President, but on these gardens the passersby can look and see rare vegetables revelling in sunshine and shower as they flourish and serve the table of a hundred million constituents.

This item involves an appropriation of only $360,000, while we have pending here a bill which carries hundreds of millions of dollars; yet, this report is held up here in an effort to deprive the farmers of the country, the good women of the land, and the children who enjoy flowers and vegetables of this small appropriation. It is now desired to take this $360,000 away from them. Mr. President, I am opposed to such a movement.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama how about watermelon seed? Is he opposed to distributing them?

Mr. HEFLIN. No; I am in favor of distributing rare watermelon seed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for a vote on the pending question, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have only one objection to the conference report; that is as to the free-seed item, and the only way that I can express my objection is to vote against the whole conference report.

Mr. KENYON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, as one of the conferees, I desire to make a statement about this matter. There has been considerable discussion on this question, which does not seem to get anywhere. The situation that confronted the conferees was that when this matter was sent to us it came not as the action of the Agricultural Committee of the House, but as the action of the House itself. The provision had not been included in the Agricultural bill by the committee of the House, but when the bill went to the House, by a yea-and-nay vote the free-seed item was inserted in the bill, as in former years. It then came to the Senate, and the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry struck it out. That action on the part of the Senate committee was sustained by the Senate. The bill then went back to the House, as under their new rules it must do, for such action as the House sees fit to take concerning any matter incorporated in a bill by the Senate and referred to the conference. On this particular matter, to which the Senate has disagreed, the House then had another roll call, and the result of that roll call was 198 to 134. That represented quite an increase in the expressed sentiment of the House as compared to the previous roll call. When the matter was returned to conference it was simply a question of deadlocking on this amendment and consequently destroying the Agricultural bill for this session or acceding to an expressed position on the part of the House adopted after a roll call.

I did not deem it a matter of sufficient importance to justify jeopardizing the passage of the Agricultural bill by voting to reject the conference report simply because some Members of this body, together with outsiders who have written and petitioned this body, think that a coordinate branch of Congress do not know what they are doing or what they want.

Had it been a mere expression by a viva voce vote or had it been a matter that had not had the attention this item has had during all these years, consequent upon the onslaughts made against it, it might have been very well for us to have insisted that the question should be gone into more thoroughly; but every Senator here knows that this subject has been a bone of contention for years, and to jeopardize the passage of this bill by rejecting the conference report upon a matter that we know can not now be settled, seems to me would be to take a very difficult position.

If we are to settle this question, it is for us to give notice to the other coordinate branch of Congress that we will not admit it, not in connection with an agricultural bill in which the item appears, not by a mere expression of opinion here and there without any decided action until the bill comes in, but let us have some preparation; let us discuss this matter as a principle and decide it before it comes to the discussion of a bill of the importance of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

Furthermore, Mr. President, there are features in this bill fraught with such interest to the public that we are not justified, even though $360,000 are appropriated for the distribution of free seed, in jeopardizing the passage of the entire bill on that account. We have before us to-day a bill for the national defense. One would hardly feel justified, if that amount of money is necessary to protect the interests of this country, in jeopardizing the passage of that bill, or in defeating its passage because some minor proposition in it does not meet the approval of certain Senators. It was for these reasons that I acceded to the conference report. I have respect for the opinions of others charged with legislative responsibility, and they, by a majority vote, expressed a desire to have this provision retained in the bill. They have, perhaps, as important reasons for wanting it incorporated as some have for desiring it to be expunged.

I again submit that there has been much talk and expression of opinion, but, perhaps, not a great many know, as a practical fact, what the effect of the seed distribution is. There are those who claim that it does good. I myself am of the opinion that not so much good flows from the distribution either because of the intrinsic value of the seed or of the results obtained by those who plant them as from the fact that it is a means of keeping more or less in touch with that mass of our people who God knows are now far enough away from the great heart of the legislative body. About the only privilege they have is to support those that are higher up, to pay taxes, and receive nothing at all, for, the Senator from Iowa says, the distribution of seeds amounts to nothing; but I know of nothing else outside of this provision and a few other provisions in the agricultural bill that the great masses of the people who feed and clothe the teeming millions of this country get at the hands of the Government. Is there a Senator here who dares say that other industries receive like indifferent treatment? It does not sound very good in view of the notorious benefactions that have been poured out on other classes for us to quibble over this, even though it is admitted that the distribution of the seed amounts to nothing.

It at least is some semblance of a recognition of the fact that the tillers of the soil ought to be recognized by this Government in some form.

This is a poor form, and perhaps unnecessary. I myself should be willing to see it stricken from the bill, not on the ground of economy but simply because I believe that something better could be substituted and some real benefit accorded by the use of this money with an additional appropriation. I recognize the fact, however, that this bill must fail unless we agree to this proposition as a whole, and because of the other splendid matters that are in the bill I shall vote to agree to the conference report; and let me say, Mr. President, that an overwhelming majority of the conferees voted for this report.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think it is well for us to understand the exact situation as it confronts us now.

A majority of the Senate have been in favor of abolishing this provision which has been carried for so many years in the Agricultural appropriation bill. In spite of all that may be said, the majority is convinced that there is no reasonable, legitimate argument for its retention; yet Senators rise here, as they have ever since I have been in Congress, in the House and Senate, and say that we must not imperil the other provisions of the bill. How many times that fictitious argument has been used.

I can not imagine that the House of Representatives would allow the agricultural bill to be defeated on account of free seeds. We are coerced into voting every year against our own judgment, our own convictions, as to what ought to be done. Now, I am in favor of sending this bill back to conference and letting the responsibility rest where it belongs, with those Representatives who would defeat the agricultural bill unless it is furnished the unworthy political capital of free seeds. Send the bill back to conference and then the country shall know who is responsible for failure of the agricultural bill, if it shall fail. But it will not fail if the Senate stands by its convictions.

These seeds do not go to the farmers of the country. The statement that they are given to and demanded by the farmers to any great extent is without foundation of fact. Mr. President, this is what might occur: If the Senate refuses now to concur, and this bill is sent back to conference on this one item alone, the only one in dispute, it will then be up to the House of Representatives to say: "We will defeat the agricultural bill because you do not grant us $360,000 of seeds to be distributed among our constituents."

So far as I am concerned, while I want the agricultural bill to pass, and while I believe it would pass, it never can pass in the proper form if we surrender every year on the same ground, upon the same arguments that are advanced year after year. Therefore, I trust that this conference report will not be agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I shall delay the Senate only a minute or two; but I want to suggest to the Members of this body that the defeat of this conference report is the defeat of the Agricultural appropriation bill. I presume that the industries of the country would still go on if this bill were defeated; but we have only recently appropriated $350,000,000 or $400,000,000 to the railroads of the country. It was probably necessary. It was due on an obligation and had to be paid. This bill takes care of a great many things in all the departments of agriculture. No one was more opposed to the free-seed provision than I. In fact, the committee unanimously voted to strike out the seed provision and the Senate sustained the action of the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator really think there was a deep-seated opposition to the free-seed provision by the members of the committee, or were some of them opposed to it and the others just willing to strike it out because we were putting in measures on which we wanted the House to yield; and was this measure really being used, at least in part, to force the House to yield to measures that we thought necessary that they had left out?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, does the Senator make that charge as to the committee? He may have had that in mind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not make that charge. I asked the Senator a question. I made no charge against the committee. I asked the Senator if he did not think that in part influenced them, and they were not really all so unanimously and urgently against the free-seed item.

Mr. GRONNA. I have no doubt that is correct; but what I want to say is this: Here we appropriate for plant industry; we appropriate for animal industry; moneys are appropriated to take care of tuberculosis among animals throughout the United States to protect the lives of the people as well as the lives of the animals. Now, this appropriation bill is to be defeated because there is $360,000 here to which we are opposed; and I will confess that I was opposed to it, but my judgment is not superior to that of 435 Members of the House. The House, by a substantial majority, on a record vote, said that they never would agree to the bill unless this free-seed provision remained in the bill. By a vote of 198 to 134 this bill was sent back. I felt, therefore, that it was my duty to bring back this bill to the Senate and let the Senate vote upon it, and I agreed to the conference report, although I am opposed to the free-seed provision.

Mr. President, this bill carries large amounts for fire protection, not only in the western country but throughout the whole United States. In cooperation with the 25 States of this Union, we appropriate several hundred thousand dollars for that purpose. I do not believe that the Senate of the United States is justified in turning down this bill simply because there is opposition to the seed provision; and I hope the Senate will sustain the committee and vote to accept the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not believe that if this conference report is defeated it will jeopardize the bill. It will go back to conference, and the conferees can make a report before this session ends. I want, if possible, this time to have the Senate, now that the disagreement is reduced to one item alone, and that is the free-seed item, to put up to the House of Representatives the question whether they are willing to defeat this bill in order to save the $360,000 for free seed. I do not believe they are going to do it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? I do not see how the Senator can stand here and lay the charge of defeating this bill at the door of the other body, when we are assuming the attitude rather than they.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator had listened to what I said, he would have known that I said "rather than to have the free-seed appropriation defeated." There is no question but that this bill is now in agreement on the part of both Houses with the exception of the one item, and it will not take very long to have the conference report go back and have a further conference held; and then the fact will be definitely before the House of Representatives that the Senate of the United States is unalterably opposed to this item.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. But the point I am making is this: Your representatives on the conference committee have agreed. Now, if the bill is defeated because of this item, it can not be charged that the odium of the defeat will lie anywhere except here. Our conferees have agreed. The House is in accord. If you repudiate our action, then the odium of the defeat of the report is here and not there.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I desire to suggest that there is no odium about defeating a bill like this in view of the attitude which the Senate has taken for so many years upon this one item; and that is particularly true when there is an interval of three or four months between now and the end of the present fiscal year.

Mr. SMOOT. I know of no better time than the present to bring this question squarely up to the House of Representatives. It would be quite different if this were the close of a fiscal year, with no extra session of Congress in sight, and the appropriations would fail and go over into another fiscal year; but there is no danger of that at all. I do not believe there is any danger but that if this question is put up squarely to the House, and the Senate insists upon its action, the House will recede from its position on this free-seed proposition.

Mr. GRONNA. But the Senator knows that all these items will have to go back, because the agreement is a complete agreement.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, the only thing in dispute to-day is one item, and the report has been agreed to with the exception of that one item.

Mr. GRONNA. We often find people hiding behind a certain thing, but there is always a ghost back of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not like to interrupt the Senator while he is discussing the bill, but it is evident that this discussion is going on interminably. One speech leads to another. I had hoped that we could get a vote on the conference report and dispose of it one way or the other, but if it is going to lead to so much debate, I shall be compelled to move to take up the naval bill.

Mr. THOMAS and other Senators. Vote!

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I shall be through in two minutes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then, Mr. President, I want to make one statement to the Senator from Utah, and that is that I, as a conferee, assert that if this bill goes back, not only will that item be in conference, but other items of importance will be in conference, and it means inevitably the defeat of this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it seems to me that the statement of the Senator from South Carolina at least intimates that there has been some agreement between the conferees of the two Houses on items that rest upon the action taken upon free seeds.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have made no such intimation, but I am telling the Senate just what is the fact.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if there is not any such thing as that, there is no danger, from the statement the Senator made.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. That is just a mere expression of opinion on the part of the Senator from Utah, and I am stating a fact.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not interpret the statement of the Senator from South Carolina in any other way than I have.

Mr. President, I was going to call attention to a number of statements made by Senators here as to a separate bill. This whole item has been in the Agricultural appropriation bill ever since the Agricultural bill was first inaugurated, and you are not going to pass a separate bill through Congress for this purpose. It does not belong in a separate bill. It is a direct appropriation, and it ought to be in an appropriation bill, and that is where it will be if it is to be carried; and nobody is going to suffer if this conference report fails.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. KENYON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], which I transfer to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. HENDERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but I understand that he is in favor of this legislation. So I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], and in his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. On this matter I understand he would vote as I am about to vote, and I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX. May I inquire if the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. KNOX. Having a pair with that Senator, and being unable to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I observe he is not in the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the negative). Has the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. EDGE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Oklahoma, and it being impossible to secure a transfer, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] are paired.

The result was announced—yeas 55, nays 22, as follows:

COURTS IN NEW MEXICO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 4310) to amend an act entitled "The New Mexico enabling act," which were:

On page 1, line 12, to strike out "circuit and";
On page 1, line 13, to strike out "courts" and insert "court";
On page 2, line 8, to strike out "clerks" and insert "a clerk";
On page 2, line 8, to strike out "courts" and insert "court";
On page 2, line 9, to strike out "their offices" and insert "his office";
On page 2, line 10, to strike out "courts" and insert "court";
On page 2, line 12, to strike out "circuit and";
On page 2, line 12, to strike out "courts" and insert "court";
On page 2, line 13, to strike out "respectively";
On page 2, line 15, to strike out "circuit and";
On page 2, line 15, to strike out "courts" and insert "court";
On page 2, line 18, to strike out "circuit and"; and
On page 2, line 18, to strike out "courts" and insert "court."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 4310, which proposes to amend an act entitled "The New Mexico enabling act." The House has made some amendments, which do not affect the purpose of the bill as it passed the Senate. I simply desire to move that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House. The bill is merely to change the time for the holding of the terms of the Federal court in New Mexico.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON DECEASED REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, on account of the recent death of one of my colleagues in the House and the fact that the resolutions came over from the House at a late hour in respect to another colleague who has passed away, it is desired at an early date to hold memorial services. We are approaching the closing hours of the Congress. I ask unanimous consent that a short time may be set aside this afternoon to offer resolutions in reference to the late JOHN L. BURNETT, of Alabama, and the late FRED L. BLACKMON, of that State, and that a few short speeches may be made. I ask that at 3 o'clock the unfinished business may be laid aside for that purpose. It will not take long to dispose of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the order will be entered.

MILITARY NOMINATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, the Committee on Military Affairs has instructed me to report to the Senate a number of nominations for promotion and transfer and original appointment in the Army. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, as in open executive session, to make the report, and I ask for its immediate consideration. It affects no one above the grade of colonel, with the exception of Brig. Gen. Frank McIntyre, who is renominated to be Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, and who, if not confirmed by noon March 4, will be out of the Army of the United States entirely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection at all to the consideration of the list of Army officers sent in above the rank of captain. In the grade of captain, however, there have been a number of promotions sent in—not original appointments, but promotions—to which I do object, for this reason, that the promotions of first lieutenants and captains are made in compliance with a construction of the Army reorganization act, which construction I do not believe is legal, fair, or just, and I do not believe that such a construction was ever in the contemplation of the House and Senate when they passed the act. Under and by virtue of this construction second lieutenants, without any further examination, are promoted to captains, and promoted over captains having a shorter service on the single list. In other words, there are included in these three branches captains, first lieutenants, and second lieutenants, on the theory of length of service alone, and all put in hodgepodge, and the man who stood an examination and obtained a captaincy would, by virtue of this construction of the act, be put below a man who had stood examination and became a second lieutenant.

Such a system is entirely unfair. I do not believe such a construction of the act is legal. It ought not to be permitted, and, so far as I can prevent it, I am not going to let it go into effect. For these reasons, briefly stated, I object to the confirmation or the consideration of the confirmation of nominations of captains, first lieutenants, and second lieutenants. I have no objection whatsoever, indeed, I desire the confirmation of general officers and other officers above the grade of captain whose nominations are presented. I desire to have the colonels, lieutenant colonels, and majors confirmed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think that a great deal of confusion and inconvenience will result if the Senator from Tennessee persists in the objection he has just made. I doubt sincerely whether the confirmation of the officers above the grade of captain can be had if he persists in the objection. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, will understand whether the objection will have any effect on the nominations above the classes objected to.

The Senate has had great difficulty in acting upon these nominations. There are still other nominations for promotions to higher grades which, in my opinion, ought to be disposed of, and a little later I may take occasion again to express my views on that subject. The purpose I have in mind now is to suggest to my friend the Senator from Tennessee that if the objection is persisted in it may have the effect of disarranging the agreement that has been reached respecting several thousand nominations to military appointments. Of course, I know the Senator from Tennessee is familiar with the subject, and I know that he appreciates the importance to the Army and to the country of acting upon the nominations. I wish to ask him if he will not withhold his objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, my objection can not possibly affect the officers above the grade of captain, because I do not object to the confirmation of any officers above that grade. I favor confirmation of officers nominated to these higher grades. My objection can not possibly have any effect upon the nomination of officers whom the Senator has mentioned; not at all.

As I have tried to explain on one or two occasions, my objection to these nominations is this: Under the construction of the Army reorganization act we will have practicaly no lieutenants in the Army. We will have no second lieutenants at all, and we will have very few first lieutenants. I think that with an Army such as we have we ought to have a proper number of lieutenants. These nominations deprive the Army of lieutenants. This ought not be done. In the late war lieutenants played a very conspicuous part in the fighting. There is no necessity for being in a hurry about these nominations. No one will be hurt if they are not confirmed at this session. I believe the Congress, whenever the matter is brought to the attention of the two Houses, will correct this erroneous construction of the act that the War Department has placed upon it, by which majors, lieutenant colonels, and colonels are placed on the single list of promotions with respect to their grades, but by which those below—captains, first lieutenants, and second lieutenants—are put in a hodgepodge and all promoted according to length of service and in accordance with the result of open and fair examination had. If a second lieutenant has a longer service by one day than a captain, under this remarkable construction of the act, he is promoted over the captain on the single list, and I understand sometimes it has been figured out that under this appointment plan there will be second lieutenants promoted more than 2,000 numbers over a captain who was appointed a captain as a result of what was substantially a competitive examination.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New York to what the effect is going to be. In the Air Service, for instance, and in various other services as well, especially in the technical service, a man who accepted a captaincy would not have accepted the lower grades, would not have accepted a second lieutenancy or even a first lieutenancy if he had known this construction of the act by the department was going to be made. In many instances first and second lieutenants will be promoted over captains. When I say promoted over them, I do not mean exactly promoted, but I mean they will be placed ahead of captains on the promotion or so-called single list, which is really a promotion over the men who have earned their captaincies, who went in and stood the examinations. Four different boards passed upon the qualifications of these captains, their educational, physical and mental qualifications, and their records of actual service in the Army, and those boards have said that certain of these men shall be captains and certain of them shall be first lieutenants and certain others shall be second lieutenants. They have determined this after the most careful and painstaking examinations and investigations. And here comes the department, by a ruling and by an erroneous construction of the act, and upsets the results of all these examinations and makes the act of Congress nugatory.

Under this construction which has been placed upon the law by the Army authorities, they have said that these examining boards had nothing to do with determining who should be captains and who should be lieutenants; that the second lieutenant who has had a longer service than a captain was entitled to be promoted over the captain on the single list, regardless of what the examining boards determined. That is an intolerable construction of the act—unfair to the men and unfair to the Army itself—because, after having made these selections, these four boards having made the selections, the Congress ought to stand by them; and I do not think we ought to take any step that will prevent those who have earned their commissions from getting them and getting their proper place on the single list. For that reason I object to the consideration of these nominations of captains and lieutenants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Objection is made.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to make just a brief statement. The objection which the Senator from Tennessee makes shows that it is in anticipation of difficulties and inequalities and injustices that may arise in promotions hereafter to be made. I suggest that we can meet that objection when the promotions are made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. I have not objected to the confirmation of those above the grade of captain. I have not objected to any general officer, and I have not objected to any major, lieutenant colonel, or colonel. I join in the hope that they may be confirmed. They ought to be confirmed. I am only objecting to those three classes of officers where this injustice will be done.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Tennessee objects to the confirmation of captains, first lieutenants, and second lieutenants.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, unless these nominations can be disposed of without further debate, I shall have to insist on the regular order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If I may make a statement, I can settle the matter, I believe.

Mr. ROBINSON. I insist that the Senator from New York be permitted to make his statement. He can make it during the consideration of the naval appropriation bill if the Senator from Washington declines to permit him to make it at the present time.

Mr. PONDEXTER. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the fact that I have not been interrupting in the matter. I have been trying to get an opportunity for the Senator from New York to make a brief statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it will be quite impossible at this time to debate the question about the single list for promotion. Let me simply say that the law upon the subject is as plain as the English language can make it, and that these promotions have been made in strict compliance with the law. The Committee on Military Affairs, with the single exception of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], reached that conclusion at its last regular meeting.

The only way by which the situation can be changed in order to meet the views of the Senator from Tennessee is to amend the law. The Senator from Tennessee has certain views upon the question. I am not going to debate it here and now. I sharply disagree with him. I think the law is right and works out the greatest measure of justice. His objection, however, to captains, first lieutenants, and second lieutenants as affected in this list for promotion is controlling for the time being. It is true that they may not be promoted, and that captains may be promoted to majors, majors to lieutenant colonels, lieutenant colonels to colonels, and no harm done to those particular grades.

Therefore, in view of the situation, which I intend to bring up later if I get an opportunity during the session and endeavor to settle the matter, I now ask unanimous consent that all the nominations for transfers in the Army, the nomination of Brig. Gen. Frank McIntyre for Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, and nominations for promotions to the grades of major, lieutenant colonel, and colonel be considered at this time and that they be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And that the President be notified.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Now, Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WADSWORTH subsequently said: Mr. President, I have just had a consultation with the Senator from Tennessee, and I ask that the order entered this morning with respect to confirmations in the Army be made to include the promotions in the Medical Corps, the Dental Corps, the Veterinary Corps, and the appointments in the Chaplains Corps. None of them conflict with the ideas of the Senator from Tennessee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course that ought to be done. These officers are not affected by the question I raised, and of course it ought to be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BONUS FOR EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I suppose the regular order is before us at this time. It is evident to me, and I am ready to stand corrected if incorrect, that there is no possibility of enacting the naval appropriation bill into law at this session. Possibly the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] could give me more definite information, but I am assuming at this time that we will not be able to pass the naval bill. That being the case, I am going to ask that it may be laid aside for the purpose of taking up the soldiers' bonus bill.

There is opportunity for passing the latter bill, provided there is not a prolonged debate, and a determination that it, too, shall not pass during this session. By eliminating the tax portion of the bill the House can immediately vote on it if we pass it through the Senate. Of course, if we had taken up and attempted to dispose of the tax measure to meet the obligation of this bill it would have been impossible to have disposed of it during this session, and perhaps before close to the end of the next session. We therefore eliminated the tax proposal, leaving the tax feature to be determined by the session of Congress which is to meet in April.

To meet the objections of the Treasury Department and possibly the disapproval of the Executive, the Finance Committee put the date of the beginning of the operation of the bill six months after the end of the deficit year mentioned in the Treasurer's report, June 30, 1922, leaving it for the Senate to fix any intermediate date. Personally, I think that January 1, 1922, which would give 10 months to put in action the new machinery necessary to carry the proposed law into effect, would give the American Legion and the department sufficient time to inform soldiers just what their rights were, and which one of the several propositions would be most beneficial to them, and give Congress sufficient time to enact proper revenue legislation.

The report which has been presented by me gives accurate estimates, so that only the question is left of whether or not we want to pass the bill at this time. We know just about what it will cost. We can make a fair estimate of that. We have all the data that we need. I believe if we should consider the bill now all we would have to do would be to fix the date for the first payment thereunder. I have prepared all amendments necessary to conform the bill to any date that the Senate sees fit to fix as the beginning of its operation, leaving the operation of the farm and home provisions and the training provision to take effect immediately, so that if we should agree to enact this measure we could within 20 minutes make every amendment necessary to conform the bill to whatever date we agree would be the best date for the beginning of its operation. But I know that any one or more Senators could prevent the enactment of the bill into law, just as they can prevent the enactment of the naval appropriation bill into law, and there is no use of attempting to press it if there is a determination to prevent action at this time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. There are those in the Senate who are strongly opposed to the bill, and there has been a very strong report in opposition to it made in the Senate. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to ask the Senator a question for information. As the Senator has reported the bonus bill, as I understand, it provides that it shall go into effect in 1923?

Mr. McCUMBER. That the payments, under the cash basis and under the certificate basis, shall go into effect as of January 1, 1923. I have stated that my reason for that was in order to put the date off beyond the time within which the Secretary of the Treasury concluded it would be very unwise to have any payments made, and to meet any possible objection on that ground that might be urged by the President, leaving it for the Senate to adjust any intermediate date.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the very point as to which I wish to ask the Senator. The Senator is in charge of the bill; his proposal will have great weight in the Senate when the bill comes up for consideration; and although he has reported the bill, he fixes the year 1923 as the date when it shall go into effect. He leaves it in doubt as to what the Senate should do. Now, I ask the Senator what he proposes to do; what he stands for?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say candidly, just as I have already stated, that I think, in view of the suggestions that are made in the report as to the means of meeting the obligation, that we could select January 1, 1922, which will be about 10 months from now, as a proper date, and one which would give ample time for us to adjust our revenues to the added obligations and to fund the indebtedness due to us from other countries and give them time to begin the payment of the interest to meet the obligation.

However, the strong reason, I will say, that actuated the committee was the fact that the Treasury Department deemed it very unwise to provide an earlier date, and we felt that possibly the President might have the same view as the Treasury Department, and it might be questionable whether the bill would receive his approval if we did not put the date off as late as this; but with the means suggested of bringing in the cash to meet the obligation, I can see no reason why the President of the United States should not sign the bill, even if it should go into effect on January 1, 1922.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He probably would do so; but I think before the bill comes before the Senate for consideration the Members of the Senate would want to know what date is going to confront them as to when the obligation would go into effect. As I now understand from the Senator from North Dakota, if the Senate takes up the bill, he would abandon the date fixed by the bill and would propose January 1, 1922.

Mr. McCUMBER. Personally, I would favor January 1, 1922.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is that the position of the committee?

Mr. McCUMBER. I can not say; I should not wish to speak for the committee. There is a divergence of views among members of the committee; some feeling that the date ought to be put off even later than 1923. We voted on that proposition, however, and it was voted down.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. If it is ever enacted, this bill will increase the public indebtedness of the taxpayers of the United States by not less than $3,500,000,000. The bill was reported on the legislative day of February 24, which day has not yet expired. It must, therefore, under Rule XIV, go over under objection, and I object to its consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I only wish to say in conclusion, that I think now we have presented all of the facts which are necessary for this Congress or for the next Congress; and that it will not be necessary to have rehearings at the beginning of the next Congress. The bill will be prepared with the tax proposition and the appropriations proposition left out, and reintroduced. My candid opinion is that the bill will pass both Houses during the early part of April of this year, and will go into effect at such date as may be fixed by the two Houses.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want a ruling upon my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado under the rule has made objection to the consideration of the bill. In the judgment of the Chair, the rules as enacted by the Senate do not contemplate legislative days but rather calendar days.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to be heard upon that, in order to see if I can not convince the Chair to the contrary.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the question?

Mr. McCUMBER. I asked the Senator in charge of the pending bill if he would allow me to ask unanimous consent to have the pending bill laid aside to allow the Senate to take up the soldiers' bonus bill? It is rather an appeal to the Senator who has in charge the naval bill for the laying aside of that bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not hear that request; consequently I did not understand the remarks of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota still has the floor. In the meantime he was interrupted by the Senator from Colorado, who, as the Chair understands, made objection to the consideration of the bonus bill at this time. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir; the objection being founded upon Rule XIV.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the objection made is not well founded; that the rules do not contemplate a legislative day, but rather what is known as the calendar day; and that the request is in order at this time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Chair rule, then, that the Senator from North Dakota can have his bill taken up at any time? Is that the effect of the ruling of the Chair? I understood the Senator asked for unanimous consent, and that any Senator could object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has not so ruled. The Chair simply intended to answer the question raised by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, as I understand the proposition, the ruling of the Chair is simply this—which is correct—that the rule when it says a bill shall lie over for one day means a calendar day and not a legislative day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me just one moment—and, of course, if that is so, then it is in the power of the Senator in charge of the bill to move to take up his bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But he has not so moved.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He has not done so.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He has asked for unanimous consent, and any Senator can object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has asked unanimous consent to have his bill taken up. The present Presiding Officer will put the request of the Senator from North Dakota. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Before that is done I want the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS. I object.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask for the regular order. The request has been made, objection has been entered, and I ask that the naval appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a moment. I think we ought to get the ruling correct, because it is of great importance.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the doubt about the ruling, when the request for unanimous consent was made and objection was interposed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present Presiding Officer has not attempted to make a ruling further than to give his opinion as to the question raised by the Senator from Colorado. At the present time the question before the Senate is the request of the Senator from North Dakota for unanimous consent to take up the bonus bill.

Mr. THOMAS. To that I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado has objected to giving unanimous consent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am not going to move to take up the bonus bill as against the naval appropriation bill unless I can gain something by so doing, unless I can feel reasonably certain that the bonus bill will not be talked out of existence between now and the close of the session or for such a length of time that it would be impossible to get a conference report back from the House and secure action upon it. Those who are opposed to the measure—and I know they are acting in the best of faith and for what they believe to be the best interests of the country—can say to me whether or not they propose to prevent a final vote upon this bill within such time as may permit it to become a law during the session.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. THOMAS, and Mr. CALDER addressed the Chair.

Mr. McCUMBER. I first yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator having yielded to me, I will say that my throat is not in very good condition today, but I will do the best I can.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I believe I was recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from North Dakota had yielded the floor.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; Mr. President, recognizing the fact that when the Senator from Colorado says that he will do the best he can to prevent any action on this bill at this session, I know he is capable of making good his purpose; that being the case, I shall not move to displace the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield the floor?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the merits of the proposed bonus legislation. I believe, however, that the Senate has a prior obligation to the soldiers and the sailors of the World War before they enact bonus legislation, and that is to enact measures which are before this body providing for proper hospital facilities for the wounded and disabled soldiers and the decentralization of the agencies which are now distributing compensation to the wounded soldiers.

I had intended to speak upon that subject and to lay certain facts before the Senate, and also to set forth what I believe is the position of the American Legion in regard to the priority of the legislation to which I have referred. I have refrained from doing so until the Senator from Washington has had a full opportunity to present the naval appropriation bill and an opportunity to pass it if possible. I intend to refrain from speaking on this subject until he has had further opportunity, but before the close of the session I intend to address the Senate and place certain facts before them as to what I believe are the desires of the American Legion in regard to legislation to be enacted by this body. For the present I intend to defer to the Senator from Washington, and to allow him to continue with the naval bill, but I shall seek an opportunity, as I have stated, before this session adjourns finally to present certain facts to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. To what bill does the Senator refer?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am speaking upon the request of the Senator from North Dakota for unanimous consent to consider the proposed bonus legislation.

Mr. CALDER and Mr. JONES of New Mexico addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized.

THE COAL SITUATION.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am in accord with the naval bill now pending in the Senate, and am hopeful that before the session ends it may become a law. I believe in the Senate bill, and I am sure the best interests of the country will be served if it is enacted; but I propose for just a very few moments this afternoon to discuss another subject, a matter that is not pending at this moment, but in which I am sure the country is deeply interested.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that the naval appropriation bill is now before the Senate? If not, I think the Senator should allow it to be placed before the Senate before beginning his discussion on some other subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NEW in the chair). The naval appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understood that it was temporarily laid aside and had not yet been taken up.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I can not permit this Congress to end without drawing to the attention of the Senate again the activities of the special committee of the Senate, of which I am chairman, which spent a great deal of time last summer and fall inquiring into the coal situation throughout the country, resulting in the introduction of the Federal coal bill. I have carefully watched the attitude of men toward the supply and distribution of some of the basic necessities of the people and have become convinced that the time has come when, in the interest of the public, the Government must have some oversight of this basic necessity. Senators may argue that during the war this supervision tended to increase prices and destroy initiative, and undoubtedly this, in some degree, may have been the case, but the war taught us, too, that a method must be found of furnishing the people with the necessities of life at a reasonable price.

We have been drifting for many years toward a condition of things where the important industries of the land were being more closely controlled by a smaller group of men, and coupled with this we have to-day in many lines a very highly organized state of labor. Combinations of capital are necessary and are to be encouraged where these combinations serve the public good, where they bring to the people their everyday needs, where they tend to decrease cost and waste, but they are menacing not only to the individual business interests of the people but to the very foundation of our Government if they are permitted to continue uncontrolled, for their own selfish advantage. We recognize the right of the workers to organize for their good and engage in collective bargaining under fair and equitable conditions, but I am as strongly opposed to giving labor the right to organize against the public interest as I am opposed to permitting capital to do the same thing.

So, in the days ahead, those of us who are charged with authority, both in the legislative and executive branches of the Government, must see to it that the interests of the whole country are safeguarded. These are matters of great concern, as important as the settlement of our foreign relations and the modification of our tax laws. The country is drifting along in its oversight of business and labor into a very dangerous field, and unless we have the vision to protect the public welfare and see to it that the interests of both business and labor are directed in proper channels, who can tell but what the activities of one group or another may bring disastrous consequences?

The countries of Europe are struggling with these problems to-day, and we should take heed before we become entangled in the same difficulties. I have argued long and earnestly in an effort to convince the Senate of the need of enacting legislation which would tend to direct capital toward the financing of homes, that we might not ultimately become involved to the extent of having the Government go into the business of building homes for the people, but I have apparently talked to deaf ears, for not more than half a dozen Members of either House seem to realize that this is a fundamental question we will have to grapple with in a serious way sooner or later.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York does not object, I am constrained to ask for a quorum, because I think the observations that the Senator is making ought to be heard by more Senators than are now in the Chamber.

I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Heflin	Nelson	Smoot
Ball	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Spencer

Hale	Myers	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Sixty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, many Senators insist that we should adopt a policy of leaving well enough alone, and that the situation will take care of itself, through a gradual return to normal times. This same argument was made in Europe by those opposed to the Government's affording facilities for private initiative, until the public clamor for relief so overwhelmed the governments that they were forced to go into the housing business themselves. The same reasoning was put forward in New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, and the District of Columbia; little or no construction was undertaken, and the inadequate housing facilities, coupled with some instances of profiteering, raised rents to an abnormal level, until public opinion decreed the enactment of drastic rent laws which discouraged building. In my judgment the time is not far distant when Congress will be compelled to do one thing or the other; either to furnish facilities for the encouragement of private building or go into the business itself. The furnishing of shelter for the people where they can live comfortably and healthfully is one of the things that can not and must not be lightly treated, and we are treading on dangerous ground when we ignore this subject.

But, Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate to-day particularly on the subject of coal. The special committee of which I am chairman went thoroughly into this whole question, and it has been also carefully inquired into by the Committee on Manufactures, of which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is chairman. There is evidence before both of these committees which convinces me that in the interest of the American people we should legislate on the subject of the Nation's production and distribution of coal. It used to be said that there were three basic necessities of man: (1) Food, (2) shelter, and (3) clothing, but modern civilization has added to these fuel and transportation, so that to-day there are five which in my opinion may be named in the order of their relative importance, as follows: (1) Food, (2) fuel, (3) transportation, (4) shelter, and (5) clothing. Food, of course, is of the most immediate importance. Fuel is almost as basic as food. It creates the power that operates the railroads and the industries of the land; it furnishes light and the heat that cooks the food, and keeps us warm in winter; it can very properly be considered in the same relation to our everyday life as water, light, and heat. It took many years to convince the people of America that water, which falls from the heavens and comes from the ground, was charged with public use and necessity, but in the States and municipalities all over the country we have come to consider water, electricity, and gas as indispensables of life. In every city in the land the distribution of water is directly controlled by the governmental authorities, while electricity, gas, and the street railways are regulated down to the minutest detail. The question we must consider here is whether the time has now arrived when coal, which is used in the production of virtually everything we require, has become so necessary that it is charged with public use and necessity, and its production and distribution should be regulated by the Government. I am convinced that this is so, and that there is every obligation upon Congress to enact legislation to that end.

The evils encountered during the year 1920 were speculative conditions as the result of shortage of supply, artificial demand, and misuse of transportation facilities. The shortage sprang from strikes of miners in the winter of 1919. In the expectation that prices would be lower, some of the large consumers of coal stayed out of the contract market in April, 1920, when there was every indication that prices would gradually descend after the cold weather had passed and the depleted stocks had been replenished, but the outlaw switchmen's strike stopped the movement of coal for a period of about two or three weeks, and transportation did not fully reach normal again until the wage award of the Railway Labor Board in July. The normal capacity of the mines recovered but gradually from April to July. The "vacations" of the anthracite miners served to aggravate the conditions by increasing the demand for bituminous coal in the East, and the exceptional demand for foreign export of coal, caused by the strikes of the British miners and the failure of Germany to deliver coal to France, brought about congestion at docks and at tidewater and threw our coastwise shipping into idleness, at the same time congesting the railroads and raising the price of spot coal in the area of acute shortage in the Eastern States.

When May 1, 1920, arrived the release of restrictions on export coal and the prices of domestic coal, and with predictions of impending shortage emanating from the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Railroad Administration, the Geological Survey, and Senator FRELINGHUYSEN'S committee, the price of coal went up. Buyers of the automobile industry and other prosperous industries went into the coal fields with instructions to buy regardless of price. Industries which had made contracts for coal found that their contracts were not being fulfilled, and they were also forced into the spot market. This was particularly true of public utilities in New York and New England.

The Interstate Commerce Commission attempted to handle the situation through the control of transportation facilities, and while issuing ex parte priority orders they were delinquent in increasing the charge for the reconsignment of cars and also in advancing demurrage charges. Although the railroads were unduly congested through the forcing of coal over the rails instead of coastwise by vessel, the Interstate Commerce Commission took no effective action to bring the water transportation into use in the emergency, nor did it make proper provision for policing of its priority orders in order to prevent their abuse.

Strong opposition to the ex parte orders of the commission was voiced by industries cut off from transportation, and criticism was also directed at the delinquency of the commission in not curtailing the reconsignment privileges, increasing demurrage charges in order to discourage the holding of cars for speculative purposes, and also in failing to provide adequate policing of their priority orders.

It was contended that many industries in the eastern part of the country were brought to a standstill through lack of transportation facilities.

The gross volume of transportation, however, increased, while coal transportation became a matter of speculative profit. Car numbers were bought and sold, priority orders were bought and sold, and coal cars were held at terminals until the railroad terminals were blocked to other traffic and to legitimate coal business as well. The speculative element secured possession of a large tonnage of coal, moving it into terminals, and holding it there under demurrage for reconsignment; shipments changing hands from one speculator to another without the coal being unloaded.

The public utilities paid enormous sums of money for coal in order to keep running, sometimes bidding outrageous prices for coal held in terminals, in order to relieve conditions existing, and permitting other coal to come in. Coal shipments moved in circles around the terminals in New Jersey, or were reconsigned to distant points, possibly several times. Those conditions tied up railroad equipment, the rail and terminal facilities, and created shortages and artificial demands. Prices soared to an outrageous extent, especially at tidewater points, where the influence of export demand was felt.

A review of the year shows that no coal shortage actually existed; that the country produced 556,563,000 tons of bituminous coal during the year 1920, compared with 458,063,000 tons of bituminous coal during the year 1919; and that in spite of the strikes and priority orders, which always decrease the tonnage movement of railroads, they carried more tonnage in the year 1920 than in any previous year. The railroads averaged to move 191,000 cars of bituminous coal weekly in the year 1920, as compared with 154,000 cars weekly in the year 1919; so that there was no actual transportation or coal shortage.

The misuse of the transportation facilities by the coal industry to whom priorities were given at the expense of the general industry of the country and the domestic consumers of coal was unfortunate, the abuse even extending to the abrogation of contracts.

The experiences of the War Department in the purchase of coal are well worthy of note. In the fiscal year from July 1, 1919, to June 30, 1920, this department purchased 1,816,000 tons, at an average cost of $3.22 per ton free on board at the mines. Eighty per cent of this was contract coal, bought at a price of $2.85. The remainder was bought on the open market, due to failure of contractors to make delivery during the period of the bituminous strike in 1919, thus bringing up the average price of the whole to $3.22.

For the year beginning July 1, 1920, the War Department had great difficulty in getting coal. Proposals asking for bids for 1,000,000 tons were opened on July 15, but the bids covered only 7,500 tons. Subsequently the War Department purchased on the open market 765,000 tons at an average price of $7.12 per ton free on board at the mines.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. I was unfortunately out of the Chamber and heard only the last part of the Senator's address. I am wondering whether he touched upon the reasons for the present price of anthracite coal in Washington—in the neighborhood of $15.90 a ton for stove coal—as compared to the prices for the same class of coal in New York, and in that vicinity, of in the neighborhood of $13 a ton. Has the Senator discussed that particular situation?

Mr. CALDER. No; Mr. President, I did not intend to go into the anthracite coal question except in a general way, because I am only making a summary of some of the things brought out in the coal inquiry. But I shall refer in my remarks later on to the fact that anthracite coal is very closely held in the eastern territory. Bituminous coal, as the Senator knows, is mined by a great number of operators, 2,500 or 3,000 miners, perhaps more than that, while 80 per cent of the anthracite is controlled by seven companies, as the Senator knows. It is a fact that the people in Washington are paying $15 a ton for anthracite. In New York to-day the average price, I believe, is $13.75. I had a letter from home yesterday about it.

Mr. EDGE. It is quite gratifying to know that in certain parts of northern New Jersey the price of anthracite has gone to $12.50.

Mr. CALDER. I am very glad that there has been some reduction in anthracite. I think perhaps it is partly due to the activities of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], who has labored long and zealously to bring about some relief to the people of his State and the country in this matter of anthracite coal.

Mr. EDGE. I appreciate the kindly remarks of the Senator from New York; but I want to join with him and see if it is not possible to get some relief for the citizens of the District of Columbia. It seems to me the Capital City is poorly treated, if not worse than any other section of the country, so far as I have been able to ascertain.

Mr. CALDER. I will add to what the Senator has said that the committee of which I am the chairman, and of which the Senator from New Jersey is a member, began an inquiry into the Washington situation, but when the Committee on Manufactures, of which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is chairman, took up the coal question we felt that the matter was more properly within his committee's province.

Perhaps the Senator's attention has not been called to the voluminous amount of testimony before Senator LA FOLLETTE'S committee, which dealt with this Washington situation. It was very clearly demonstrated that there was a combination of interests here which sought to prevent anyone but the members of the Washington Retail Coal Association from entering the coal business. Men were unable to buy coal from dealers outside of the city because they were not members of the coal organization of this city. I am told that the matter is being investigated by the Department of Justice, and I trust something will be done to break up what appears to be a very close combination which is very detrimental to the consumers of coal in the District.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to say that not only the State of New Jersey, but the city of Washington, has fared during the past winter much better than the coal consumers in the State from which I come. In my town early in the winter, during the holidays, I purchased some anthracite coal myself, and paid $18 a ton for it.

Mr. CALDER. I am glad to have the Senator from North Carolina bear witness to the profiteering on anthracite coal.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I may interrupt the Senator from New York for just a moment, in the course of the hearings before the Committee on Manufactures, it was developed that in the city of Washington the larger retail dealers have an association, and from the testimony taken by the Committee on Manufactures it would appear that they made war upon any independent dealer who sold below the association prices, or anyone who attempted to establish a coal business outside of the association. Considerable testimony was taken upon this subject, and witnesses appeared before the committee who testified that they had been compelled to retire from the retail business because of the difficulties which they encountered at the hands of this association in procuring coal and in conducting their business in competition with the members of the association. As a result of the testimony taken by the Committee on Manufactures, the Government has instituted an inquiry, which, if it is prosecuted, I believe will afford some relief to the people of Washington, and I hope, perhaps, at an early date.

With regard to prices of anthracite coal, it was testified before the committee that anthracite coal has been selling during the fall and winter at from $16 to $22 per ton in many sections of the country. Bituminous coal has also sold at the enormous rates of $12 and $15 a ton.

The bill which was introduced by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], after the hearings had been held by the committee of which he is chairman, came to the Committee on Manufactures on the 12th day of January.

Hearings were begun upon that bill immediately. We endeavored to expedite the hearings in the hope that we might report a bill that would be comprehensive, and afford some relief from the situation, but the hearings were extended; the subject is a vast one, and we were unable to close the hearings until the 15th of February, although we were in session every day, which brought us down to within a week or 10 days of the close of the session. Then the bill as amended was reported out and is now upon the calendar. It contains the fact-finding features of the bill as introduced by the Senator from New York. It was presented to the Senate with the emergency features eliminated in the hope it would be possible in that mild form to pass the bill. I have not been able to get the consent of those who were opposed to it to give unanimous consent for its consideration—a minority of the committee—nor have I been able to secure any arrangement by which it could be given time for consideration by the Senate.

Mr. CALDER. I thank the Senator for the interruption.

I had referred to coal purchased by the War Department. This coal was purchased through a number of companies acting as buying agents, one of which was the Wentz Co., which will be referred to later. This is the company whose president is D. B. Wentz, president of the National Coal Association. Practically all of the 62,638 tons which it purchased for the War Department have been traced by the committee back to the original producer. The situation is summarized in a small table which I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in my remarks at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[1] Average margins weighted by number of cars.

Mr. CALDER. This table shows the size of margins, by groups, from $5 per ton down, taken by brokers on this coal. The table is not arranged to show the total combined brokerage charges on the cars in any group. For instance, the margin of $1.50 shown in the table as taken by the West Penn Fuel Co. was on the same cars on which McCarthy & Gilmore are shown as taking a margin of $1.02, and there were also on these same cars charges of two other brokers, one of which is included in the table in the 50-cent to $1 group and the other in the 25-cent to 50-cent group. Thus the table shows charges on particular transactions, but not pyramided charges.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CALDER. With pleasure.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator from New York is discussing a measure in which I am very deeply interested and in which my constituents are very much interested. There is no part of the country that has suffered so much from inability to obtain coal or from excessive prices for both anthracite and bituminous coal as New England. I think there is a very strong sentiment in the State of Massachusetts in favor of the Government undertaking to do something to regulate in some manner the production and distribution of coal so that our manufacturing plants and the consuming public may be able to get coal expeditiously and at reasonable prices. Private management of this most vital commodity has evidently broken down. In fact, the Legislature of Massachusetts, a very conservative body, recently passed a joint resolution which I had entered in the RECORD, urging some governmental action by the Congress in the matter of coal. I read from the resolution—for it is indicative of the sentiment of the people of New England:

Ordered, That the General Court of Massachusetts is in favor of the creation or designation of some agency of the Federal Government with full power to ascertain facts and disseminate information and to regulate and control the production, sorting, grading, transportation, and distribution of coal to the several States to secure so far as possible a sufficient supply of coal of good quality at reasonable prices to the consumers in the several States.

Mr. President, the sentiment of the American people is, generally speaking, overwhelmingly against governmental interference in private business. I mean strictly private business in distinction from certain businesses that are charged with a public use. I am strongly opposed to the Government interfering in private business in any manner or form. However, where two conditions or factors exist in private business, a form of Government inspection, regulation, or possibly Government control may become imperative and necessitate an exception to the general rule of noninterference.

First, is the business which it is suggested should be regulated or controlled in some form or manner by the Government producing a commodity or product which is a public necessity? Is it something essential and indispensable to the life, to the happiness, to the prosperity, to the well-being of the American people? I suppose we will agree that coal is; I do not see how anyone can successfully dispute that fact.

The second factor is this—and this is important—it is why I am addressing an inquiry to the Senator from New York:

Is the article or the product made or produced through a business organization that has become a monopoly? Has the element of competition been removed as a factor in the regulating of prices? In other words, has the coal industry reached a stage in modern development where it is a monopoly? If it has my duty as a public servant is easily determined.

If a product that is vitally essential to the happiness and prosperity of the American people is being made or produced by a group of men who can control and regulate the price of it, limit the production of it, or remove the element of competition in fixing the prices to the consumer, then I do not hesitate to say that such a private business is a subject for governmental inquiry, concern, and possible regulation. I wish to have it clearly understood that no one is more opposed to the Government interfering with private business than I am, but I am not going to be frightened because of my belief in this principle from protecting the welfare of the American people and from using the functions of our people's Government to regulate a monopoly, a private business in the hands of a few who can control prices, who can profiteer without restraint upon the American public. When such factors as I have described exist in an industry I shall not hesitate to urge legislation to prevent the American people from being exploited.

All this is preliminary, and I assume from the Senator's position on this subject that the Senator agrees with these fundamental principles that I have briefly and imperfectly attempted——

Mr. CALDER. I am in complete accord with the statement that the Senator has made.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. We all agree that the coal business is one which is essential to the business development of our country. I can not overemphasize how important it is to the future development of our general industries to have coal flow steadily and constantly and at reasonable prices from the coal fields of the country to the consumers.

I do not mind saying that I have been very much distressed about the industrial future of New England because of the steadily increasing price of coal and difficulties of obtaining sufficient supply. Coal is so essential to our New England industrial life that without it there can be no steady business development unless electricity or some other motive power is made a substitute. We have no undeveloped water power to speak of in New England, and of course to develop electricity coal is necessary. Unquestionably the serious danger to our future growth and prosperity caused by the high cost of coal led the Legislature of Massachusetts to adopt the resolution to which I have referred. The people there are very deeply concerned about the coal situation, about their inability to get the needed supply, and about the exorbitant prices they are forced to pay. If it had not been for the Almighty giving us the mild winter climate that we have enjoyed——

Mr. CALDER. And the closing down of many industries.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes; and the closing down of many industries we would have had as great suffering in New England during the past winter as has occurred in any part of the country during our lifetime. Fortunately those two elements have tended to relieve the situation from assuming alarming proportions.

In brief, what I desire to ask the Senator is whether bituminous or anthracite coal has become a monopoly. Is it a product that is in the hands of a limited few who can at will curtail the production, advance prices, hold the public at their mercy, and profiteer without limit if they so desire. I ask this question both as to bituminous and anthracite coal. If the Senator is able to convince me that a monopoly exists, I for one will support some remedial legislation or will support not necessarily the Senator's exact bill, but a measure intended to restore the factor of competition in some form or other and seek, if possible, to increase and improve the production, quality, and transportation of this very essential commodity.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. CALDER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. KENYON. Has he any doubt in his own mind about anthracite? There may be some doubt about bituminous coal, but certainly there is none about anthracite.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The committee of which I am a member has not discussed at such length the anthracite situation as bituminous, but I will say to the Senator frankly that I have not any doubt that anthracite is to-day in the hands of a few owners, who not only control the production but the transportation as well.

Mr. KENYON. Less than a dozen owners.

Mr. CALDER. Seven.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to correct the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts with regard to the evidence taken by the Committee on Manufactures. I think it was taken in part during his absence, but certainly the record will show very conclusively that the anthracite industry is completely controlled. If it has not reached the stage which would enable one to characterize it as a monopoly, then I am at a loss to know what facts would warrant one in arriving at that conclusion.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I spoke with caution, having, however, steadily approached the same conviction as the Senator from Iowa, namely, that this business is unquestionably a monopoly.

Mr. KENYON. How many concerns, I would like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin, are shown by the testimony to control or practically control all the anthracite of the United States?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There are seven great coal companies affiliated with seven great railroad companies that control 80 per cent of the anthracite of the country.

Mr. KENYON. What area of territory does that cover, if I may ask the Senator?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The entire anthracite fields are in the State of Pennsylvania. There are three of those fields. If they were brought together into one solid piece of territory, it would constitute a patch of country 8 miles wide by 60 miles long. That is all the anthracite we have in the United States. We have some high-grade bituminous coals in different States that are called semianthracite, but I think they are regarded by the experts as high-grade bituminous coal, and the area of those deposits is quite limited.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I repeat, I have not much doubt about the situation, so far as anthracite coal is concerned. Of course, we know what answer the coal people make to that. It is very interesting; I never heard it before. The answer as to anthracite coal is that it is a luxury and that the Government should not attempt to regulate a luxury. They say it is not a necessity any longer.

Mr. KENYON. At present prices is it not a luxury?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I think the Senator from Iowa will agree that it should not be, but it has been made so by present prices.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is a curiosity.

Mr. KENYON. It is a curiosity at present prices.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Now, coming to the question of bituminous coal, has the bituminous-coal business reached the stage where it has become a monopoly? I find a very great misunderstanding about the bituminous-coal situation. If we take the whole country at large, the answer is that it has not become a monopoly, but certain sections of the bituminous output can, in fact, become a monopoly. For instance, New England gets its bituminous coal alone from the Pennsylvania and West Virginia fields. So far as New England is concerned, there might be bituminous coal in every other section of the country and it be practically of no serviceable value to New England. I suppose the great Northwest depends upon the output of bituminous coal in Ohio, Indiana——

Mr. CALDER. And in Illinois, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Yes; the Northwest depends on Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and other States. What I am concerned about is whether the Senator from New York has any figures or information tending to show that in the various bituminous coal fields there has been or is a combination among the producers controlling prices, controlling output, which amounts to a monopoly? I think that is a very important and a very essential fact to develop, so that we may be able to ascertain whether the bituminous-coal business has reached the stage of a monopoly.

Now, the very first answer one hears is that bituminous coal comes from independent operators in Colorado, Illinois, West Virginia, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Pennsylvania; but it seems to me it is important to know whether in a given field control has fallen into the hands of a few operators and the prices thereby regulated and controlled for the consumers dependent on them.

If the Senator from New York can give us any information as to what extent the coal fields where bituminous coal is mined have gone into the hands and possession of a few producers, I should like very much to have it.

Let me say while I am on my feet that I find this suggestion very frequently made—I find it in my letters from New England—that nothing should be done to attempt to regulate the coal industry, because if we do it will be an entering wedge; it will be the beginning of governmental interference with private business; it will be the beginning of interference with the boot and shoe and other New England industries, which are so essential and important to New England.

Mr. CALDER. And with picture frames and carpets and other articles.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Let me say here that the boot and shoe industry is not a monopoly and it never has been a monopoly. The reason why the industry has grown and developed as it has is because of the large number of private individuals and small corporations engaged in the manufacture of boots and shoes. It will be interesting to know that when recently discussing this matter with a manufacturer of boots and shoes I took occasion to say to him, "I do not know of any industry which, if it should become a monopoly, would be regulated more quickly by the Government than the boot and shoe industry." The manufacturer quickly replied, "When the boot and shoe industry becomes a monopoly, it ought to be the first industry to be regulated."

I want to ask the pardon of the Senator from New York for taking up so much time and for interrupting his able and interesting speech. I should like him, in addition to any evidence that has been presented to the committee, of which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is chairman, to state to what extent the bituminous coal industry in this country has become a monopoly.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his interruption and for his illuminating statement. I know that New England has had, perhaps, a more difficult time during the past year in connection with the supply of coal than has any other part of the country. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Iowa that it is unquestionably a fact that the anthracite coal industry, closely held as it is—80 per cent, as the Senator from Wisconsin pointed out, being held by seven companies—is very nearly a monopoly.

The bituminous coal situation is somewhat different. There are mines of bituminous coal all over the country. I am not prepared to say on this floor that the bituminous coal industry is so held that it can be claimed to be a monopoly, but I do insist that to everyone who observed closely the conditions of the coal business last summer and fall it would seem that the bituminous coal business was so held that it was possible to raise and lower prices at will.

It is my opinion, Mr. President, that just as soon as business is again active, just as soon as industry becomes normal, there will be the same condition in the bituminous coal industry as existed last summer and fall, when people were compelled to pay two and three times a reasonable price for bituminous coal.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York permit an inquiry?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. KING. My information is not very accurate, and I have not studied the question as has the Senator from New York, but may we not attribute the extortionate prices of coal to what might be denominated combinations of middlemen and brokers rather than to any concerted action on the part of the producers? My understanding is that brokers and middlemen would take, if not the entire output of a mine, substantially all of the output of a mine, and when they secured control of the product and it passed beyond the control of the mine they then raised the price levels until the people were charged excessive and extortionate prices.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, that is undoubtedly true to a very great extent. The evidence before the committee of the Senator from Wisconsin indicates that in certain coal fields of the country, particularly in Pennsylvania, Maryland, the Virginias, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee, there was a very abnormal profit made during one-half of last year; in fact, most of the operators in those States profited to the extent of 100 per cent upon the cost of their production, while in the States farther west the mine profits were not much more than normal. Somehow or other here in the East, perhaps because of the great demand for export and because of the unusual demand upon the part of the industries, there seemed to be a getting together—I have not developed that sufficiently to prove there was an actual combination of interests—but there was undoubtedly an understanding which certainly had the effect of raising the price of bituminous coal to the consumer.

In addition to what I have said, there is no doubt that middlemen profited abnormally. I was discussing when the Senator from Massachusetts interrupted me the purchases by the War Department when they were unable to buy their coal under contract last summer and fall. The facts disclosed seemed to indicate that while prices back at the mine were high, they were not high in comparison with those which the Government paid. For the coal which at the mines in some cases sold for $4 a ton the Government paid as high as $10 or $11.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit another suggestion?

Mr. CALDER. Yes.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, he will recall that the investigations which his committee has been conducting developed the fact that prior to the war for many years the price of bituminous coal at the mines was from 87 cents to $1.10, which was cheaper than the coal at the mine in Australia, New Zealand, Newfoundland, and in many parts of England. It seemed to be absolutely impossible for any monopoly of bituminous coal to exist before the war. If there was any monopoly, it was a monopoly instituted after the coal had passed from the hands of the producer into the hands of the middlemen.

I merely challenge attention to that fact to show that if there was no monopoly then there ought not to be any monopoly now in the bituminous fields; but, unfortunately, during the war and following the war people seemed to have acted upon the assumption that the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law had been suspended, and there is no doubt in the world but what, in the teeth of State statutes and of Federal laws, monopolies have developed and have practiced their nefarious operations to the injury of the American people.

I hope that as we return to normal conditions we will enforce our State statutes against monopolies and also the Federal statutes and strengthen the Sherman antitrust law, because if we do not destroy monopolies either by penal statutes or by the power of taxation—and we can reach any monopoly by the power of taxation—there will be an irresistible demand grow upon the part of the American people for the control of all business which is susceptible of monopoly; and I think, confronted with that alternative, that we should strengthen the Sherman antitrust law; that we should punish monopolists; that we should not ignore a monopoly simply because some court may say that it is a reasonable monopoly; but we ought to proceed upon the theory that monopolies are bad ab initio and enact statutes to punish monopolies in a penal way or tax them in a progressive manner, so that they would be forced to a dissolution. I ask the Senator to pardon the length of the interruption.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. CALDER. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not wish to trespass upon the Senator's time nor wear out his patience——

Mr. CALDER. I am glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But if I may make an observation, partly in response to the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], whom I do not now see in the Chamber, and partly in response to what the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has just said. There is no question, as I suppose every Senator well knows, that the supply of bituminous coal in the United States is, practically speaking, inexhaustible. We have bituminous-coal fields that will supply the people of this country for centuries to come. However, that must not be understood to mean that a condition may not arise within a reasonable time, when we will begin to feel the pinch of high-cost production that will be burdensome even though there were no possibility of the element of control.

Bituminous coal is being mined very wastefully. Beyond any question, we are destroying beyond possibility of recovery 40 per cent of the deposits under the system of mining as it is now conducted. It behooves this Government and the people of this country to consider whether or not in the public interest a degree of regulation may not be interposed in this industry, as it has been interposed by the Governments of other countries, to prevent that waste even with the operation of the mines in the hands or under the control of private interests.

Now, just one word about the monopoly element which may enter into our consideration of the bituminous-coal question.

Of course, as to quantity it can not be said, with its wide distribution, that as it lies in the ground it can be easily subjected to a monopoly control; but we have taken testimony that will make three printed volumes. The inquiry was directed for the most part into the bituminous coal situation. I do not know how other members of the committee were impressed, but I am convinced that there exists between the mouth of the mine—and I am choosing my words now with care—and the consumer of bituminous coal a control of price and delivery that in effect imposes almost if not as great a burden upon the consuming public as could be imposed if the deposits of bituminous coal in the ground were more limited, and it could be cornered there. I believe a more complete investigation of this subject will disclose that in the mining and marketing of coal there is at every stage a degree of cooperation which amounts to at least partial control which is reflected in the exorbitant prices that the consumer has had to pay for coal.

I wanted to make that brief statement, and, if the Senator will permit me, I wish to say that I realize that it is very doubtful that legislation upon this subject can be passed at this session. It was doubtful when we received the bill if it would be possible to secure legislation if a thorough investigation was made and we sought to get comprehensive legislation; but I believe that the bill which was reported by the committee might have been passed if the condition of business in the Senate had permitted taking it up at that time. If it is not passed, however, I am hopeful that there will be a further consideration of this vitally important subject.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] inquired a moment ago as to the profit of the jobber or middleman. That is very well illustrated in the purchases by the War Department of coal during the summer and fall of 1920. I was illustrating, before I was interrupted, just how that operated.

Col. Wentz, the president of the National Coal Association, sold coal to the War Department in September and October at prices ranging from $9 to $10.75. He testified before the committee of which I am chairman that he was president of the Stonega Coke & Coal Co. of Virginia, an operating concern, and that its own output had been sold for the entire summer at a price of $3.83 a ton.

Now, while Col. Wentz was selling his own coal, mined at his own mine, for $3.83 a ton in July, 1920, and on which he agreed he had a margin of profit of $1.38 a ton, which was about 35 per cent upon the cost of the product, during that same month, in fact, on July 14, his jobbing company, the Wentz Co., was quoting prices of $13 to $13.75 on the general market. That shows very clearly what the margins of the middleman or the several middlemen were, for much of the coal passed through from three to five hands.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if this coal was delivered at the same place? Was it f. o. b. mine?

Mr. CALDER. It was the mine price, always. Here the Wentz Co. is stating that the ruling market price in July is $13 to $13.75 at the mines—on whose coal is not stated; what the exact cost was is not known, but that is what they were getting for it. Somebody else's coal, not Wentz's, cost the War Department $13 to $13.75.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, is the Senator referring to anthracite or bituminous?

Mr. CALDER. Bituminous coal. As I indicated, for the coal mined in Col. Wentz's own mine he got $3.83, and he stated that the profit was $1.38. At the same time, acting as an agent or as a wholesale coal dealer, he was selling coal in July for $13.75. In the same month Mr. Wentz's own mine was selling, as I said, at $3.83.

Margins before the war used to be 10 to 20 cents a ton, not over 20 cents. They should, no doubt, be somewhat higher now; but Mr. Wentz has not complained that the Stonega Co.'s margin was not high enough—it ranged from 19 cents in January to $1.38 in July, and averaged 77 cents for January to September. Yet the Stonega's average price in July was nearly $10 a ton less than the prices that the Wentz Co. was quoting on July 14.

Obviously, after making all possible allowances for greater costs of other fields or other companies, there can be no explanation of cost that will account for this $10 difference in price. It is indefensible.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CALDER. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. Did not the Senator find that a good part of that increase was due to the fact that these brokers were selling from one to another and each time adding a very substantial profit?

Mr. CALDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. POMERENE. I will not say a reasonable profit, but in many cases a very unreasonable profit.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, our committee, through its experts and through correspondence, traced practically every ton of coal purchased from Col. Wentz back to the mines, and we found that the coal came from central Pennsylvania, in the main. The costs at the mine in that region, we found, were about $3.10 a ton for the period April to September, 1920, because we were able to obtain, when we subpœnaed the papers of the National Coal Association, a great many records that they had in their possession.

They had gone to the courts and prevented the Government from getting information upon production and costs of mining, but they had in their possession certain records which we took; and after we examined them carefully we were able to go back to the mines and ascertain the actual cost during last year. Now, this coal that Col. Wentz sold all came from central Pennsylvania, and we were able to trace back, as I say, nearly every ton of it to the very people from whom it was bought first. It was sold in the beginning for $4.50, say; the next man made 60 cents, the next one $3, the next one $1.50, the next one 40 cents, until finally it got to the War Department at from $9 to $10.75 a ton, passing through four or five hands, all making a profit, or sometimes the producers' price was $7 or $8 and the brokers did not make so much.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, is this the same Col. Wentz who charged the Government a commission of 50 cents a ton to sell it?

Mr. CALDER. Yes, sir.

Mr. POMERENE. He had been in the coal business; and certainly, if he was to have any due regard for the Government, he would have known enough to go to the operators and buy at the mouth of the mine, instead of through a number of these brokers.

Mr. CALDER. Of course there is no better-informed man in the country on bituminous coal than this same Col. Wentz, because he is president of the National Coal Association of the United States, among whose members are practically all of the large bituminous coal operators in the country.

The most partisan representatives of the coal industry will have difficulty in answering the proposition that the public is entitled to full information regarding their industry. They maintain that they have nothing to conceal; they assert that the "open-price" information which they formerly obtained until dissuaded therefrom by court decision in other industries held such "open-price" information illegal—this information, they assert, was gathered with a view to the widest public dissemination in the hope that it would be carried on the financial pages of the daily newspapers of the country. While I never saw nor heard of the coal association's price data being published in newspapers, the representatives of the association have at least put themselves on record in the hearings that we have had that it was their object to give this information the widest publicity. They can not, then, object to publicity for it under this bill. The costs of operators in the association were earnestly sought by the association for the purpose, they have testified, of presenting the cost information to the committees of Congress. Therefore, it is clear that they do not object to publicity of the costs of their industry. What, then, do they object to in the program of information? Nothing, as I see it, except the fact that they, the interested parties, will not be the sole arbiters of what information is gathered and what information is given out, nor the manner in which it is compiled and the interpretation of its detail.

Will any Senator agree that it is proper that information on this industry vital to our national life shall be gathered or not gathered, given out or not given out, and interpreted solely by those who have coal to sell? I think that however good the intentions may be, interested parties given such power it is idle to suppose that the best and fairest results can come from such a policy. There is too much temptation in power like that, and it is too easy for those wielding it to let their own natural viewpoint affect the figures or color the interpretation that they will place upon the material that comes to their hand. In the record of the hearings before the Committee on Reconstruction and the Committee on Manufactures are instances that show what is likely to happen if the power of information is entirely in the hands of those whose interests are at stake. For example, in the files of the National Coal Association was found a small poster, used for propaganda purposes, which displayed in great detail the many items of cost entering into the production of coal. This large number of items was inclosed in a long bracket, opposite which on the poster appeared this statement in prominent type:

> The cost of production is made up of these 200 or more items which the operator has to pay to put the ton of coal on railroad cars ready for shipment. The wage of the miner is just one item out of the many.

Mr. Morrow, vice president of the National Coal Association, on being questioned, admitted that the one item of labor constitutes 75 to 80 per cent of the total costs of producing coal. This fact, however, was not stated on the poster. That seems to be an illustration of misleading propaganda which is likely to result from publicity by interested channels.

We need accurate information vouched for by an unbiased Government agency, sworn to its duty, which includes just as much a proper regard for the rights of the coal operator as for the rights of the consumer. We particularly need this information accurately and dispassionately on production. That is the gauge against which demand measures itself. And we also particularly need accuracy and detachment in the information on the causes of idle time at the mines, for on this information the public tends to rely in apportioning the responsibility of the operators, or the railroads, or the mine laborers for falling off in production or the praise for an increase in the supply. Because the public judgment regarding labor and the operator, or regarding the operators and the railroads, is in the balance, we need to be especially careful to have this information free from even a suspicion of bias.

Mr. President, nothing more impressed me in the hearings on coal by the Special Committee on Reconstruction than the fact that in the face of the coal crisis that has distressed and outraged the country during the past year, the great organized power of the coal operators, through the leaders of the national association, has stubbornly maintained the position that the mining and distribution of coal is a "private" business.

The leadership of the association has used a large part of the great funds collected from the operators to influence by propaganda and to fight by lawsuits and injunctions any agency of Government that attempts to enforce the rights of the public to information or to adequate protection against profiteering.

Here in Washington the National Coal Association, which collects from its members annually in the neighborhood of $400,000, spending a very large part of this for legal services and propaganda, has secured an injunction against the Federal Trade Commission in the Maynard case, preventing them from obtaining information concerning the production of coal, on the theory, among others, that the production of coal is an intrastate matter; while in Indiana the same association, joining with others, has secured an injunction against the Indiana Food and Fuel Commission preventing them from functioning, on the theory, among others, that the production of coal is an interstate matter.

There are many honest men in the coal business who are endeavoring to conduct their business in a way that will attract public favor, but others have taken advantage during the past year of conditions brought about partly by shortage of transportation, partly by our largely increased exports, and partly also by the panicky attitude of certain governmental departments here in Washington, altogether creating a situation whereby the people of America were mulcted of a sum estimated at from six hundred to fifteen hundred million dollars during the year 1920.

My coal bill is not designed to bring about Government operation of the coal mines. It is a simple coal regulation bill which requires everyone engaged in the coal business, both operator and dealer, to file with the Federal Trade Commission at regular intervals a statement of the business done by the corporation or individual, the amount of coal produced, to whom sold, and the margin of profit. It levies a tax upon the coal dealer who sells to another dealer. The purpose of this provision is to drive coal direct from the producer to the consumer. Public utilities and manufacturing plants buy their coal in the main directly from the operators, but the householder's coal usually passes through several hands before it reaches its final destination. The householder has no one to look after him, and, in my opinion, the tax on the wholesaler's profits would result in a reduction of the price to the consumer. The bill also provides that the President may take over the coal business whenever an emergency arises. Operators insist that this means in the end permanent governmental control, and others contend that in case of an emergency, brought about by a labor controversy, the Army will be used to move the coal. For my part, I am strongly in favor of the power being placed in the President's hands to protect the public interests in an emergency. I live in the city of New York, one of the great coal-consuming centers of the Nation, where 6,000,000 people reside within a limited area; and I doubt if at any time within the confines of that city there is a supply of coal for the industries, the public utilities, and the householders for a greater period than two weeks. An emergency might occur that would warrant the Government's putting its strong hand on this business so as to assure the very life of the people being protected. I am in favor of that being done, regardless of whether or not it interferes with the operator, the dealer, or the worker, and I am certain that the great mass of the people, if the question were submitted to them, would agree with me.

The Committee on Manufactures has reported a bill which deals only with one part of this question. I regret that it did not report this measure with some of the provisions the committee has eliminated, but I do not complain, for in their effort to secure legislation on the subject at this session they have, perhaps, pursued the best course. As reported by the committee, the bill provides that every man engaged in the coal business whose annual sales exceed $50,000 shall file at regular intervals a report of the coal produced, the cost of producing, the amount obtained for it, and to whom the coal is sold.

The coal dealer is compelled to furnish the same information. This data is collected by the Federal Trade Commission, and the commission is required at regular intervals to advise the public as to the cost of producing coal in the various communities and other facts which, in my judgment, will tend largely to aid the people in securing coal at a fair price. If the commission has reason to believe that any operator or dealer is engaged in unfair practices it can make the facts known to the public by a majority vote of its members.

This legislation recommended by the Committee on Manufactures will be a step forward, and it may be the solution; and I hope the Senate, even at this late day, will see fit to pass it. No reasonable objection can be raised to it. The country ought to know the facts concerning the mining and distribution of the anthracite used in the larger cities of the East. Eighty per cent of this commodity is produced by seven companies which are directly connected with the railroad companies that enter into the coal fields of Pennsylvania. I submit, Mr. President, that the American people have a right to complete information concerning this basic commodity. Failure to legislate at least to this extent will bring down upon Congress the condemnation of the country; and if the men interested continue to fight this effort to obtain light on the subject, they will themselves bring a public demand which will lead to complete Government control.

The American people, Mr. President, are deeply concerned in this subject. They are waiting to hear what action Congress will take, and while I am not in the habit of warning Senators concerning their conduct here, I submit we are dealing with a question most momentous, and in our disposition of it we must have in mind, above all, the public good. Witnesses appearing before the committee of which I am chairman have testified that there are enough coal deposits in the country to last 5,000 years, notwithstanding that last year we made a record by mining over 620,000,000 tons. Europe will need more coal from us this year than before, and we will also require more for our own business needs. Some Senators argue that the price of bituminous coal is not excessive to-day, and that statement is true; but, Mr. President, this condition is brought about by the fact that one-half of our industries have shut down and the very mild winter has reduced the need of the householders of the country. With the extension of our foreign trade, however, the return of the business of America to normal, and with the continued shortage of railroad transportation, which is bound to last for several years, immediate action is required to prevent a recurrence in 1921 or 1922 of the conditions which we endured in 1920. We should get ready to forestall any such outrageous profiteering as existed last year.

I urge upon the Senate serious consideration of this subject. It will, in my opinion, go a long way toward furnishing relief.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVES BURNETT AND BLACKMON.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Senate by order has set apart the hour of 3 o'clock for eulogies on two late Representatives from the State of Alabama, and as that hour has about arrived, if there is no objection, I will ask that the Senate proceed under that order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I submit the following resolutions and ask for their adoption:

The resolutions (S. Res. 469) were read and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of the Hon. JOHN L. BURNETT and the Hon. FRED L. BLACKMON, late Members of the House of Representatives from the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the families of the decedents.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, we stand in the closing hours of a dying Congress. The hour is fast approaching when friendships of many years' standing must part and go their separate ways. We can not but feel in our inner hearts a note of sadness as we realize the ties that bound many of us together are about to sever, and in this hour we halt the column in its march along the legislative highways to recall the memory of our friends and colleagues who served loyally with us in life and passed to the great beyond within the life of this Congress.

The State of Alabama asks you to halt the legislative battle for an hour to do reverence to the memory of two of our honored sons, JOHN LAWSON BURNETT, who was elected from the seventh district of Alabama to the Sixty-sixth Congress, but died before it convened, and FRED L. BLACKMON, of the fourth district of Alabama, who served until a few weeks ago, when he was called to his fathers.

JOHN LAWSON BURNETT was born at Cedar Bluff, Cherokee County, Ala., January 20, 1854. When he was only 4 years old he lost his father, and his widowed mother had three children to care for and the burden of life to face unaided. As soon as he was able to do so, Mr. BURNETT went to work to aid in the support of his mother and two brothers. He was not afraid of labor and worked in the coal mines and the fields of Alabama, studying at night to obtain the rudiments of his education. Finally he was able to attend the common schools of Cherokee County, and then amassed sufficient funds to carry him to the Wesleyan Institute in Georgia, where he received his early education. Finally, after hard work and study, he was able to enter the Vanderbilt University, graduated at the age of 22, and was admitted to the bar. If there ever was a truly self-made man, JOHN L. BURNETT was the man, striving as he did from his early youth through hardship and privation to attain ultimate success. He was an excellent and successful lawyer, obtaining prominence among the best in his native State. His sterling worth and high character were early recognized by his home people, and at the age of 30 he was elected to the house of representatives in the General Assembly of Alabama, and two years later was elected to the State senate, serving in both with distinction. Shortly afterwards he was named by the Democratic Party as their standard bearer and elected by his people as a Member of the Fifty-sixth Congress. He was reelected for the 10 succeeding terms and served for 20 years before his untimely death. During his Membership in the House of Representatives he was recognized as a staunch and unyielding Democrat, ably sustaining the great principles of his party; but he was more than that: He was an American first, last, and all the time, always ready to serve and sacrifice for our common country rather than yield to the call of political expediency. He was a hard and faithful worker in Congress, a student of the principles of government, and he never undertook to espouse a cause without a thorough understanding of it.

We who knew JOHN BURNETT best loved him for his sturdy and rugged character, his honesty of purpose, and his faithful friendship. He has gone to the great beyond, but his memory will always be cherished by his colleagues.

Mr. President, the delegation from Alabama mourn the loss of another friend and colleague, who died but a few weeks ago. FRED L. BLACKMON was born in Lime Branch, Polk County, Ga., on the 15th day of September, 1873, and when he was 20 years of age he moved to Calhoun County, Ala., and made that his home to the day of his death. He served with distinction in the General Assembly of Alabama, and was elected to the Sixty-second Congress and served for nearly 10 years, up to the time of his death. He was a lawyer of excellent ability and high attainments; a representative of the people, in whom all had confidence in his high integrity, honesty of purpose, unbending loyalty to the principles in which he believed, and devotion to his people unrivaled by any. He was a Democrat in political faith, not merely by the accident of birth or environment but because he had a full understanding of the fundamental principles of his party and unyielding faith in those great principles being the beacon star of our national life. He had the courage of his convictions. He never sacrificed principle for the sake of expediency. He was ready to sustain the cause he advocated regardless of the cost to himself. He was an excellent debater and earnest worker and loyal friend. But above all things he stood to the world four square as a real man, a staunch friend, and true American. Honesty of purpose and loyalty of character always marked his course in life. We who knew him best loved him most. His passing from us left a deep sorrow in our hearts and an abiding love of his memory that will rest with us always.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senate has scarcely known a busier time than that through which we are now passing. We pause in the midst of important duties to pay tribute to the memory of two departed friends. Both of them served with ability and distinction in the House of Representatives.

JOHN L. BURNETT, of Alabama, enjoyed the cordial friendship of all his associates. He was active, diligent, and capable in the performance of his duties as a Representative in Congress. It is seldom that anyone has enjoyed a more liberal experience than was the lot of Mr. BURNETT. Trained in hardships, he proved himself equal to every task which he assumed. He was never known to betray a friend or to neglect a duty. Mr. BURNETT's service extended over a period of many years. It was his privilege as well as his duty to deal with some of the gravest problems that have come to Congress during the last 25 years. I bear witness to the fact that he never failed to give careful study to the questions upon which it was his duty to reflect, and that he never feared to speak and vote as he was prompted to do by a sincere conviction of duty.

Another Representative from the same State recently has been called by death. The Senate honors itself in paying just and appropriate tributes to the names and services of JOHN L. BURNETT and FRED L. BLACKMON.

Mr. BLACKMON fell in the very prime of life. His personal characteristics endeared him to everyone with whom he came in contact. He was genial, sincere, loyal, and able. As a lawyer he earned distinction at the bar of Alabama. As a legislator his services were characterized by independence of thought and fearlessness of action. He belonged to the old school of statesmen who believe in the preservation of the respective powers of the States and of the Nation. He witnessed with regret the constant growth and multiplication of Federal agencies and the expansion of Federal activities. We are all conscious of the fact that Federal agencies during the last 20 years have multiplied in numbers and that Federal activities have been so greatly increased Congress is now almost constantly in session. Throughout the future it is probable that Congress will be in continuous performance.

Mr. BLACKMON enjoyed many intimate friends throughout the period of his service in the House of Representatives. He was interested in many important measures of legislation. As a speaker he was forceful, clear, and direct. He was always prompt and diligent in the performance of his duties. His people trusted him and repeatedly returned him to Congress. He rewarded their confidence with faithful devotion to their interests and with conscientious performance of duty.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, when I first came to the House of Representatives, some 10 years ago, one of the strong men of that body was JOHN L. BURNETT, to whose memory we pay tribute to-day. At that time he was chairman of the Immigration Committee of the House, and at that time the immigration question was probably one of the leading questions of the day. An immigration bill providing for restriction of immigration by a literacy test had been passed by both bodies during President Taft's administration, as I recall, and he had vetoed it. Under the leadership of Mr. BURNETT another bill of similar character and having a similar purpose was passed by both bodies in Wilson's administration, and vetoed by President Wilson. The Senate and House overrode the veto of President Wilson and the bill became the law. That fight was led by Mr. BURNETT in the House of Representatives in a masterly way.

He was a forceful speaker. Of the question of immigration he was a great student. He went to Europe and studied the question from that viewpoint as he studied it from every viewpoint here and when he spoke he spoke as a man of authority.

He was an authority upon that great question, and did much to solve it. It was he who first in an official way brought the dangers of unrestricted immigration straight home to the American people. The law on that subject that we have recently passed is quite largely an outgrowth of his earnest and steadfast work on that subject. His work in the House was of the most effective kind. His services to his State were of the same character. He was a diligent, faithful, intelligent, and efficient legislator.

Mr. President, Mr. BURNETT was a man of the deepest conviction of right, a man of the highest purposes, a man who was unafraid in the performance of every public and private duty. The word "fear" was not known to JOHN L. BURNETT. His life was an open book. He was kindly, genial, and pleasant, especially to the younger and newer Members of the House. He was friendly to all, esteemed and respected by all for his splendid worth, and for his many genial and lovable traits of character.

I know of no man who impressed himself on his fellow Members as a more genuine, a more sincere, a more honest, or a more upright man than JOHN L. BURNETT.

In every phase of life he took a man's part. A kindly, gentle, splendid man he was and I honor and respect his memory. I am glad that the Senate of the United States has paused long enough in this busy session to permit a tribute to be paid to his life and character.

Alabama has sustained a great loss in his death. His friends miss his kindly fellowship. The House has been deprived of an able and splendid Member.

Mr. President, Alabama has indeed been unfortunate lately in the loss of her distinguished sons. Mr. Burnett's death was followed by that of Congressman FRED L. BLACKMON, a Representative from the fourth Alabama district. His death was sudden and unexpected. He died while away from home.

Mr. President, I was born in the State of Alabama, in the district that was represented in the House of Representatives by Mr. BLACKMON for so many years. He lived near my home. He was educated by my eldest sister. I think the most of the education that he received was received at her hands. He was a splendid young boy. He was a good student. He had a splendid mind. When he arrived at manhood's estate, he became a lawyer, having received his legal education at the University of Alabama. He made a distinguished record there, and afterwards at the bar he quickly assumed a commanding position. He was successful in all that he attempted.

Turning to politics while still a young man, he was elected to the House of Representatives and was reelected five times, his period of service extending over 10 years. Popular in his own district, no one could defeat him. Though it was frequently tried, he always won by his ability, by his geniality, by his honesty and sincerity of purpose.

He did not always agree with probably most of his constituents; he frequently disagreed with them. I remember on the subject of prohibition his views did not accord with the majority views of his district, but in that manly, upright, honest, straightforward way of his, he voted his own convictions, and the people, while disagreeing with him upon that important question, always stood by him.

I knew him intimately in the House of Representatives. I loved him, and I think everyone else who knew him loved him—a kindly hearted man, a man of a noble soul, a man who had nothing of guile in his nature, a man who loved men because they were men, a man in whose word every one of his fellows had the most implicit confidence. His word was always as good as his bond. He stood high in the House. He was a member of the Post Office Committee in that body. He took an active and effective interest in all that came before that committee. He did much for roads and much for the building up of all the various branches of the Postal Service. I deeply regret his death, and shall ever cherish the memory of my departed friend.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the Senators from Alabama and other States have spoken and will speak of the career of FREDERICK L. BLACKMON as a citizen of Alabama and as a faithful and capable Member of Congress. To me he was not only my associate in the Halls of Congress, but his birthplace and mine were in the same county in Georgia, and I can think of him only as a Polk County, Ga., boy who was living near me in my earliest years and who was among the best and closest friends since I came here as Director of the Census in 1913.

Because he was born and bred in my county and my State I wish to make a brief reference to the family, the community, and the county that gave him the natural endowments, the social standards, and the patriotic impulses which enabled him to win his way to such distinguished service in his day and generation. A man is always the product of his nature and his nurture, of his inborn powers, and his experiences with the world about him—in short, of his heredity and his environment. It is through his family stock that he receives his nature, his inborn powers, and it is his home and community and State that make the nurture and provide the experiences which train him. If we would answer the question, How shall we account for the high achievements of our dead friend? we must go to the family stocks from whence he sprung and to the home and community in which he received his early training.

FREDERICK L. BLACKMON'S mother was Sarah Ann Ross; his father was a physician, who lived on his farm in a community called Lime Branch, which is within 6 miles of Cedartown, where lived my own father, who was also a physician. Our fathers were personal friends and coworkers in the great profession which seeks to promote the health and strength of humanity.

Dr. Augustin Blackmon, the father of FREDERICK, was given the name of Augustin as a mark of admiration for a remarkable man, Augustin Young, who was a near neighbor and the grandfather of many noble men and women in my county and also the grandfather of the Hon. JAMES YOUNG, the very able and conscientious Member of Congress from Texas.

It was an unusually fine type of family stocks who lived as neighbors of Dr. Augustin Blackmon and cooperated with him in building that community spirit at Lime Branch which gave its schools, churches, roads, farms, and homes a standing far above that usually found. These families were, as their names will show, all derived from that Scotch-Irish strain that had settled Virginia, the Carolinas, and Georgia, driving back the Indians, cutting down the forests, building the homes, bridging the rivers, making the laws, and giving a church and school to every community. The children and grandchildren of the settlers of Virginia and the Carolinas went to middle Georgia by the thousands between 1750 and 1800, and scarcely a generation had passed before thousands of their descendants had moved to western Georgia. As it was usually the most daring and the most enterprising of the younger generation that moved the empire of the white race westward, it was from the best of the human stocks of middle Georgia that came the young men and women that made the pioneer settlements in western Georgia. The very names of these families who settled in Lime Branch between 1830 and 1860 show that they were but the advanced lines of that great Scotch-Irish strain which left Europe to find freedom and the fortunes awaiting them in America. As you listen to these names you will find them all Anglo-Saxon or Scotch-Irish. Those who made the early settlers at Lime Branch were the Blackmons, Youngs, Coxes, Caseys, Pittmans, Hickses, Sewells, Hoggs, Willinghams, Cleavelands, Merritts, Brewsters, Garners, Winkles, Wrays, and many others. Their forefathers and descendants have distinguished themselves in all the wars from the Revolutionary through to the World War.

Three miles south of Lime Branch lived William F. Janes, who as a member of the legislature introduced the bill creating Polk County. His son, Charles G. Janes, was judge of the Tallapoosa circuit for many years. The late Robert W. Everett, a successful teacher and farmer, who so ably represented the seventh congressional district in Congress, lived near by and taught many of those who lived in the Lime Branch neighborhood and other sections of Polk County.

These and others were the family stocks that gave prestige to Lime Branch and Polk County by their traditions and churches and schools, and which trained every child to the best ideals of manhood. It was the Blackmon-Ross marriage, both Scotch-Irish names, that gave to FREDERICK BLACKMON the ability and the training that secured for him the confidence and the leadership of the congressional district in Alabama to which his mother moved before his youth was completed. Mrs. David Lowry and Mrs. Samuel Hogg, two splendid women of Polk County, Ga., are sisters of FREDERICK BLACKMON.

I trust that the Senators will not think it improper for me to speak of these facts and names that apparently belong to one family and one county, for reflection will convince them that it is well to give honor to those firesides and those community influences which produce strong and noble men like FREDERICK BLACKMON.

> From scenes like these old Scotia's grandeur springs,
> That makes her loved at home, revered abroad.
> Princes and lords are but the breath of kings—
> An honest man's the noblest work of God.

A boy born and bred in a rural community in Polk County, Ga.; moved in his youth to Alabama with his mother, who continued there the same inspiration to noble deeds, the same respect for right and duty, the same urge to high achievements as had made the spirit of the home in Georgia; and the boy became the servant of his State and of all the United States in the halls of Congress. This is the continuing glory of our country.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the custom of holding memorial services out of respect for and in honor of a Member of Congress who died in the service is indeed a beautiful and praiseworthy custom. Here we are in the closing hours of the session and yet Congress halts its pressing, important business and lays aside its legislative program long enough to pay a tribute of love and esteem to two able and faithful Members who have so recently served here. Death has invaded the ranks of the Alabama delegation three times during the Sixty-sixth Congress. Three able and faithful servants of our people, one Senator and two Members of the House, have gone from these historic halls to their last resting place. When memorial services were held in the House in honor of Congressman Burnett I was a Member of that body and delivered one of the addresses on that occasion. I now desire to say a few words about my good friend and recent colleague in the House, FRED L. BLACKMON, who died just a few days ago while serving the fourth Alabama district in the Congress of the United States. He was only 48 years old when the summons came. In the midst of a brilliant and useful career, just in the prime of life, death called him and he left us to join that innumerable throng over yonder where there is no death, but life forever more.

Mr. President, years ago he was elected by the good people of Calhoun County to represent them in the Alabama State Senate. He had before coming to Congress legislative experience and training which wonderfully well equipped him for service in the lower House. He was elected from the fourth district of Alabama, the district adjoining the fifth, the one that I had the honor to represent for more than 16 years in the other branch of Congress.

The people of that district delighted to honor him and to have him as their representative in the greatest law-making body in the world. For 10 years the people of that district commissioned him as their representative and he had been elected to represent them in the Sixty-seventh Congress. After his last triumphant election he announced his intention to retire at the expiration of the Sixty-seventh Congress and go back into the practice of the law at Anniston, Ala. He was a splendid and a wonderfully successful lawyer, and had for years enjoyed the reputation of being one of the very best trial lawyers in our State. He was exceedingly popular with both judge and jury. He was a brave, manly man, a devoted friend, a good citizen, and an able and faithful Representative in Congress.

Mr. President, he will be missed and mourned by a large circle of devoted friends in Alabama and by those with whom he served so ably and well here in the Capitol of the Nation. In the brilliancy and buoyancy of a useful life, death touched his dreamless slumber to his eyelids and he fell asleep. He leaves a charming and devoted wife and two splendid children, Fred L., jr., and Sara B. Blackmon, to mourn his loss. In his death Alabama has lost a distinguished, valuable, and popular citizen, and an able and faithful Representative in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the resolutions submitted by my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts in the chair). Without objection, the resolutions offered by the senior Senator from Alabama will be unanimously agreed to.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE BROWNING.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
May 16, 1920.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that an opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, late a Member of the House of Representatives from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant, the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk be instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for their adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolutions (S. Res. 470), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sorrow of the death of Hon. WILLIAM J. BROWNING, late a Representative from the State of New Jersey.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be now suspended in order that fitting tribute may be paid to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives, and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, nearly a year ago the irresistible hand of death brought to a sudden close the career of a distinguished statesman, WILLIAM J. BROWNING.

In the fullness of years, at the zenith of a profitable life, with the harness on, he went to his reward.

The late Representative from the first district was in every respect the architect of his own fortune and the source and inspiration of his whole fruitful career.

When yet a lad, hardly out of the period of infancy, he became an orphan, his father dying while yet in the early meridian of life. I mention this as a "handicap," yet I am not sure that I use the word wisely. It may be that this great loss, when the lad was still very young, was the child's gain. As he advanced along the pathway of life, even in those early years, he was thrown upon his own resources entirely, and thus developed those characteristics of industry and initiative which he might never have acquired had he been entirely dependent in boyhood upon a father's care and protection.

This lack, in the case of young BROWNING, toughened the fiber of his being and produced in him certain qualities which made for success in after life.

Fortunately, while the head of the household was removed, the mother remained, a woman of great strength of character, possessing a well-disciplined mind and actuated by the sterling principles of the Society of Friends, to which she belonged. She played a dual rôle, being father and mother in one, and aided materially in shaping the son's subsequent career.

Educated at Friends Central High School, Philadelphia, working during recesses on his uncle's farm in New Jersey, he entered a mercantile house in the Quaker City as office boy, he being then about 15 years of age. Upon attaining his majority, he became a member of the firm.

But the lure of public service seems to have fastened its hold upon him in early life in spite of his Quaker training. Early participating in the political movements of his day in his native city—Camden—he soon became a leader among the young men of his neighborhood.

The first important post held by him was that of member of the city council. Then he was made a member of the board of education, and became chairman of the same, performing, with satisfaction to the community, the duties of that responsible post. In due time, under the Harrison administration, he was made postmaster at Camden, and here, too, he served the public, and the Government as well, with full credit and acceptability.

His entrance into the domain of national affairs took place in December, 1895, when he was chosen Chief Clerk of the House of Representatives. This station he filled for 16 years.

He performed the duties of that office with a degree of efficiency never surpassed, and in so doing won the unanimous friendship of practically every Member of that body.

Upon the death of his friend and immediate representative, Congressman Loudenslager, August 12, 1911, BROWNING was chosen a Member of the Sixty-second Congress. In due course he was reelected to the Sixty-third, Sixty-fourth, Sixty-fifth, and Sixty-sixth Congresses. In 1912, during the Democratic upheaval, resulting from the split in his own party, BROWNING was the only Republican who carried a congressional district in New Jersey, though in the Sixty-seventh Congress but a single Democrat will represent the State.

In the House BROWNING'S service was preeminently valuable by reason of his long identification with that body as Chief Clerk and Member. Quiet and rather conservative, he was nevertheless indefatigable in his attendance upon the sessions of Congress and of the committees upon which he served. He had a wonderful propensity for detail and for the minutia of legislation, having everything at his fingers' ends.

Coming to the Senate four years ago, entirely unfamiliar with the methods of Federal legislation at the outset, I found Congressman BROWNING helpful at all times, ready with advice and suggestion in the work of parliamentary procedure.

He was a safe and able representative of the material interests of the important district which honored him with a seat in Congress, and his death was a great loss to his party, his State, and the Nation which he so honorably served.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I simply want to add a word in tribute to the memory of the late Congressman BROWNING. It was typical of his conscientious service that he passed away, as it were, in the saddle, actually in the Capitol itself.

It was my good fortune to be very intimately acquainted with Congressman BROWNING. I lived for many years in the adjoining county. His earnest work in public life was always an inspiration to me, and I have followed his career with great interest and great benefit. I consider that Congressman BROWNING represented a type of public man who considered public service perhaps somewhat different from the accepted scope of the responsibilities of the day. He was one of those men who appreciated the importance of the little things. He looked upon every case presented to him by constituents, whether it was some small pension matter, some officer of the Government who perhaps had made an error, or some difficulties in connection with the service of the soldiers in the late war, war insurance, or other detail matters—he looked upon any of those cases referred to his office as in themselves individual responsibilities, big matters, because they were big matters to whoever presented the particular applications. His work was one of great detail, and to-day I think the average Member of Congress, perhaps pardonably so, makes an effort to get away from detail.

Mr. BROWNING, as well, was a member of a very important committee, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and served on that committee from the commencement of his services in the House until the time of his passing away. I know from personal contact with him that he was deeply interested in the development of the Navy of the United States, worked zealously as a member of the committee; and residing, as he did, in the State of New Jersey, right on the Delaware River, near the navy yard—and even when Congress was not in session he was continually actively engaged in the development of that river and yard.

New Jersey, in losing Congressman BROWNING, lost an efficient, conscientious, representative public servant. New Jersey mourns his loss, because they respected him. The first congressional district mourns his loss, because they loved him.

Mr. President, in performing this sad duty, I am glad to have the opportunity of paying this tribute to the memory of so conscientious a public servant.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15975), making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill for action on the committee amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to raise a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand that the naval appropriation bill is before the Senate as the unfinished business, and I desire to make a point of order against its further consideration, under the second paragraph of Rule XXVI, which provides that—

All reports of committees and motions to discharge a committee from the consideration of the subject, and all subjects in which the committee shall be discharged, shall lie over one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

This being the same legislative day on which the naval appropriation bill was reported to the Senate, it has not yet laid over one day since it was reported by the committee to the Senate. I therefore make the point of order, and object to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the bill has been considered by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; but the Chair must maintain the ruling that has heretofore been made by the present Presiding Officer, from which an appeal can be taken, and the Senate will then definitely settle the question. The Chair has heretofore ruled that except upon unanimous consent, a bill may not be considered on the same legislative day on which it was reported. The Chair accordingly sustains the point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? The Chair may be permitted to remark that he thinks it important that this question should be settled, and settled now. The ruling of the Chair is in strict conformity with the rulings in similar situations in the House of Representatives.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not think I quite understand the point. The naval appropriation bill is now the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; it is the unfinished business—made so, however, upon a motion, and made so on this legislative day, and reported to the Senate on this legislative day. The Senator from New Mexico objects, and the rule says that if there is an objection, it can not be taken up the same day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not so understand the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. An appeal has been taken from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I have the privilege of making a remark for a moment in regard to it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington has taken an appeal, and it is open to discussion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to call attention to the language of the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is fair for the Chair to state that the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] made identically the same point of order against the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] yesterday.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I beg the Chair's pardon. I did not make the same point of order against the Senator from New Mexico, for the reason that the conditions were entirely different from the conditions under which the pending naval appropriation bill is situated in the Senate in a parliamentary sense. This bill has been under the consideration of the Senate for several days by order of the Senate. Consequently, it has been "otherwise directed," within the language of the rule, as to the consideration of it upon the same day upon which it was reported.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The "otherwise directed" provision of the rule relates to unanimous consent. The express provision of the rule is that "unless the Senate shall otherwise direct by unanimous consent," which, of course, implies that it can not be done by a mere majority vote.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There was no objection. Consequently it must have been by unanimous consent that we have proceeded with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. There was objection, and a vote was taken on it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know; but we have had several recesses since then and have proceeded since with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. We have not had any adjournment, however.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; but we have had recesses.

Mr. BORAH. I tried to get an adjournment and could not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; that is true. These are not the same at all as the conditions under which the bill of the Senator from New Mexico is presented, and for this reason—and that is all I desire to call attention to—that the bill he wished to have considered had not been taken up and had not been under consideration. The naval appropriation bill has been taken up at repeated sessions of the Senate, continued by recess from time to time, and to-day it was taken up without objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word on the point of order. I do not think there is any question that the ruling of the Chair should stand as the decision of the Senate. The Chair has decided that the point of order is well taken, but an appeal has been taken from that ruling of the Chair. It seems to me that the interpretation of the rule is not only correct, but it is a good rule.

There is no reason why we should not have an adjournment in order that the Senate may take a vote upon whether it will consider another committee report or not. It was apparent to me on yesterday and on the day before that there was little likelihood of the naval appropriation bill becoming a law at this session. I made an attempt to get up for the consideration of the Senate the soldiers' bonus bill or adjusted-compensation bill. It was ruled by the Chair, and I think properly ruled, that the motion was out of order because the report of the committee had not been before the Senate for a legislative day.

I have no special antipathy toward the consideration of the Navy bill if it can be done in a regular and orderly way, but I believe there should be an adjournment so that the Senate may have an opportunity to vote upon the question of taking up for consideration the report of some other committee. An adjournment will provide an opportunity for recent reports to lie over for a legislative day.

I shall not take occasion to read the precedents on the question, but it has been the uniform ruling, so far as I have been advised, that a point of order of this kind can be made at any time. Rule XX provides:

A question of order may be raised at any stage of the proceedings.

The objection or the criticism of the Senator from Washington that the point of order should not be made now can not be well founded.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it seems to me the only question of law involved in the ruling of the Chair is whether he has correctly considered the requirements that all reports from committees shall lie over one day unless unanimous consent be procured for their consideration, the question turning upon the meaning of the word "day." The Chair has construed it to mean a legislative day. In one or two instances at least that I recall a different construction has been placed upon the rule, and the word "day" has been held to mean calendar day. I think, however, that the weight of precedents and the weight of argument support the ruling of the Chair.

We all know the object of a legislative day. We know why that fiction has been created making a legislative day at the pleasure of the Senate extend over a period of many calendar days. It is to obviate the very difficulties which in many instances would arise if we conformed our proceedings to the calendar day. There is no question in my mind that the Chair has ruled correctly on the subject. There is a way out of the difficulty which the Senate will readily see, if it chooses to take it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a further view of the matter. The rule is against taking up a report of the committee. It reads:

All reports of committees and motions to discharge a committee from the consideration of the subject, and all subjects in which the committee shall be discharged, shall lie over one day for consideration, unless by unanimous consent the Senate shall otherwise direct.

The bill did not lie over. Whatever may have been the process by which it was arrived at, it did not lie over, and it was under consideration and is before the Senate at the present time, so that a different stage has been reached from that which is referred to in the rule.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until 20 minutes after 4 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., Wednesday, Mar. 2, 1921) adjourned until Wednesday, March 2, 1921, at 4.20 o'clock p. m.

WEDNESDAY, March 2, 1921.

The Senate met at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was not sufficient time to send for the Chaplain of the Senate. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of February 24, 1921.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what was the motion?

Mr. LODGE. That the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts requests that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. BORAH. I object.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the motion be put.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I make the point of order that the motion is out of order, that the Journal must be read on objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the only way to dispense with the reading of the Journal is by unanimous consent, it being the right of each Senator or any particular Senator to have the Journal read if he so desires. The Secretary will read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, February 24, 1921, and after having read for some time,

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I renew my request that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with, so that we may have the morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand there are some other bills to be taken up which may be considered in the morning hour, and I shall not make any objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to dispensing with the further reading of the Journal? The Chair hears none, and the Journal will stand approved. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

Mr. McCUMBER presented a resolution of the State Senate of the Legislature of North Dakota, which was referred to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution on metric system, introduced by Mr. O. C. Gross by request.

Whereas there is in the United States a deplorable lack of uniformity in weights and measures, and the units used are unscientific, cumbersome, and unrelated, constituting an actual hindrance to education, industry, world trade, and the activities of daily life; and

Whereas the metric system of weights and measures is a decimal system, simple, logical, and easy to use, so that its adoption will result in an incalculable saving in time and energy; and

Whereas the metric system has been adopted by the vast majority of enlightened nations, and its adoption by the United States is calculated to promote friendly relations and commerce with all the world; and

Whereas the State of North Dakota, by reason of its great commercial and industrial activities, is vitally interested, both as a State and in behalf of its citizens, in the speedy adoption of world-wide uniform standards of weights and measures: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the State Senate of the State of North Dakota respectfully urges that the units of the metric system be adopted by the Congress of the United States as the legal standard of weights and measures after a transition period of 10 years, as proposed in bills now before Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That copies hereof be forwarded to the President of the United States of America and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of North Dakota in the Congress of the United States.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Sam A. Kozer, secretary of state of the State of Oregon and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the annexed copy of senate joint memorial No. 3 with the original thereof adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Thirty-first Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, and filed in the office of the secretary of state February 23, 1921, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

Done at the capitol, at Salem, Oreg., this 24th day of February, A. D. 1921.

SAM A. KOZER,
Secretary of State.

Senate joint memorial 3.

Whereas the salmon industry is the third largest within the State of Oregon, and returns to the State many millions of dollars annually, which at once becomes a part of its taxable assets through the regular channels of trade; and

Whereas the streams of Oregon and the Columbia River, over which Oregon and Washington have concurrent jurisdiction with respect to the fish therein, have been rehabilitated as salmon streams; and

Whereas said rehabilitation has been the result of the propagation of salmon fry; and

Whereas the streams and waters of said State were until the year 1914 showing the effects of the destruction of natural spawning beds and areas on the upper reaches of the streams within the State and other causes; and

Whereas since the year 1914 the pack of canned salmon on the Columbia River and the coast streams of Oregon has increased more than 250 per cent, due to artificial propagation of salmon fry and the liberation of the same in the waters of Oregon; and

Whereas the life of the industry is now being threatened by the use of purse seines and similar devices at the mouths of the rivers and streams of Oregon and in the waters of the Pacific Ocean; and

Whereas said purse seines destroy annually untold numbers of immature and young salmon on the feeding grounds offshore at the mouths of the rivers of the State of Oregon; and

Whereas such destruction of the young salmon is inimical to the industry, and if permitted to continue is apt to result in the complete inability of the hatcheries to provide an adequate return run of salmon in the streams after they have reached maturity on the feeding grounds in the waters of the Pacific Ocean; and

Whereas it is of the utmost importance, not only to the State of Oregon but to the States of California and Washington, the Territory of Alaska, and the Province of British Columbia, that means be devised to protect the salmon on its feeding grounds all along the coast of the United States and the Dominion of Canada bordering on the Pacific Ocean; and

Whereas Hon. CHARLES MCNARY, representing the State of Oregon in the Senate of the United States Congress, has introduced a resolution calling upon the President of the United States to negotiate a treaty between the United States and Great Britain to protect the salmon in the waters of the Pacific Ocean bordering on the United States and Dominion of Canada: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be memorialized to use their influence to secure the passage of legislation to the end that a treaty may be entered into between the two high contracting parties herein mentioned to prevent the use of the destructive forms of gear heretofore mentioned and to protect the salmon upon the feeding grounds and preserve for all time this important industry to the Territory of Alaska, the States of Washington, Oregon, and California, and the Province of British Columbia, and that a copy of this memorial be transmitted to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Oregon.

Adopted by the senate February 19, 1921.

ROY W. RITNER,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house February 21, 1921.

LOUIS E. BEAN,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. McNARY presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Oregon, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OREGON,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, Sam A. Kozer, secretary of state of the State of Oregon, and custodian of the seal of said State, do hereby certify:

That I have carefully compared the annexed copy of house joint memorial No. 12 with the original thereof adopted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Thirty-first Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon and filed in the office of the secretary of state February 23, 1921, and that the same is a full, true, and complete transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof, together with all indorsements thereon.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed hereto the seal of the State of Oregon.

SAM A. KOZER,
Secretary of State.

House joint memorial No. 12.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America:

We, your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that:

Whereas House bill 15854 provides for the establishment of the grade of lieutenant general in the Armies of the United States.

Whereas the commander of the American fighting forces in the field during the World War held the grade of lieutenant general.

Whereas the commander of the First Army of the American Expeditionary Forces, who stopped the German Army on the Marne and forced a collapse of the German Empire in the Argonne, was reduced to the grade of major general upon his return to the United States.

Whereas such reduction was made by reason of legal limitations in the organization of the Army, which laws did not contemplate the proper recognition of the commander of the First Army.

Whereas the reduction in grade of the commander of America's First Army abroad was inconsistent with the gratitude of the American people for services so rendered.

Resolved by the House of Representatives of Oregon, the Senate concurring, That we memorialize Congress immediately to enact into law House bill 15854, in order that the rank of lieutenant general of the Army may be restored to Maj. Gen. Hunter Liggett, who won his promotion by conspicuous and gallant military service and devotion to duty.

Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Oregon be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to transmit a copy of this memorial, under the seal of his office, to each Member of the Oregon delegation in Congress, and to the presiding officers of the Senate and House of Representatives, and the chairmen of the Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate and House of Representatives.

Adopted by the Senate February 21, 1921.

(Signed) ROY W. RITNER,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the House February 19, 1921.

(Signed) LOUIS E. BEAN,
Speaker of the House.

Indorsed: House joint memorial No. 12. Introduced by Messrs. Leonard and Hammond. W. F. Drager, chief clerk. Filed February 23, 1921. Sam A. Kozer, secretary of state.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of Galveston, Tex., favoring the recognition of the Irish republic and also the immediate recall of the loan made to Great Britain during the World War, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

WASHINGTON MARKET CO.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9036) to repeal and annul certain parts of the charter and lease granted and made to the Washington Market Co. by act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington Market Co.," approved May 20, 1870, and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BALL. I report back favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, the bill (H. R. 9036) to repeal and annul certain parts of the charter and lease granted and made to the Washington Market Co. by act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington Market Co." approved May 20, 1870, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. MOSES subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 9036, reported by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL].

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was an objection. Is there further objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

Mr. KEYES, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 232) permitting Chinese to register under certain provisions and conditions, reported it without amendment.

Mr. LENROOT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon, which were agreed to, and the bills were indefinitely postponed:

S. 1260. A bill for the relief of Elijah Stroud;

S. 3765. A bill for the relief of Rhodilla Silvers; and

S. 3990. A bill placing Lieut. Col. Charles C. Teare, of the Judge Advocate General's Department, on the retired list and to retire him with the rank and pay of a lieutenant colonel on the retired list.

Mr. CALDER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5044) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge acoss the Savannah River near Halleys Ferry and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga. I report it without amendment and submit a report (No. 827) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. There is absolutely nothing in the bill but merely the permission to build the bridge.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The bill we have been trying to get passed for several days, and which the Senator has been insisting on defeating, is nothing at all but the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. What is that? I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let the Senator read the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Did I understand the Senator to say that I was here attempting to defeat the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I said the Senator had occupied a great deal of time and had participated in defeating the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I absolutely repudiate that as being altogether unfounded and uncalled for.

Mr. LODGE. The regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any other reports of committees? Concurrent and other resolutions are in order.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 255) admitting Emil S. Fischer to the rights and privileges of a citizen of the United States, reported it without amendment.

CREDITS UNDER LIBERTY LOAN ACTS.

Mr. REED. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report the following resolution in behalf of the committee, and I ask that it be read. I then shall ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object to its reading, Mr. President.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it is only a resolution to authorize carrying on an investigation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I appreciate that, and I do not know that I have any objection to it; but there is a great mass of similar business, and if we give way in the right we have under the rules to one, we shall be compelled to give way to all. That is the situation in which we have been placed for three days in trying to get consideration for an appropriation bill. So I am compelled, as much as I regret to do it, to object, with this suggestion to the Senator, that there will undoubtedly be an opportunity before the adjournment of this session of Congress to bring the matter up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair can wind this up. The resolution calls for an expenditure of money and will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. REED. I thank the Senator from Washington for permitting me to report the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 471) was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to investigate and ascertain what credits have been established and what commitments, advancements, and payments have been made or are claimed to have been made by authority of the four Liberty loan acts, the Victory loan act, or any other acts of Congress granting the Secretary of the Treasury authority to accept the obligations of foreign Governments for moneys, munitions, or supplies furnished them by the United States Government and the reasons for making said credits, commitments, advances, or payments; and

That the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the present session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, or during the recesses between the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses; and

That the committee or any subcommittee thereof be authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost of not to exceed $1.25 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with this investigation; and

That the expenses contracted thereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GRONNA (by request):

A bill (S. 5046) to tax the privilege of dealing on exchanges, boards of trade, and similar places in contracts of sale or purchase of grain for future delivery, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 5047) to provide for the relief of certain employees of the Government who have become eligible for retirement under the provisions of the retirement act of May 22, 1920, and have thereafter been continued in the service or reemployed therein; to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 5048) to survey the Yazoo River, Miss., with a view to the control of its floods; to the Committee on Commerce.

FUTURE CONTRACTS FOR FARM PRODUCTS.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina submitted a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 40), which was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the officers in charge of the exchanges and markets where future contracts for farm products are dealt in are requested to suspend speculative short sales in farm products from notice of this request until August 1, 1921.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 15975, the bill making appropriations for the naval service.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, we had made considerable progress on this bill, and had adopted the first amendment, I think. I ask that the reading for action on the committee amendments be continued.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 3, line 14, under the item "Pay, miscellaneous," to strike out "$250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$400,000," so as to read:

And not to exceed $400,000 for telephone rentals and tolls, telegrams and cablegrams; postage, foreign and domestic, and post-office box rentals; and other necessary and incidental expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 17, to strike out:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the expense of any naval district unless the commandant thereof shall be also the commandant of a navy yard, naval training station, or naval operating base.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 22, after the word "provided" to strike out the word "further."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 3, after the word "exceed" to strike out "$750,000" and insert "$850,000," so as to read:

That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards and naval stations, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, shall not exceed $850,000.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. In view of the renewed motion to take up the bill for consideration following the adjournment, I should like to ask whether that affects the previous action of the Senate on the amendments that have gone before?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not. Whatever has been done has been done.

Mr. KING. I ask the Senator having the bill in charge the reason for an increase in that item over the amount of $100,000 as contained in the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. POINDEXTER. One reason is that the Senate committee has based the appropriation upon a navy personnel of 120,000, instead of 100,000. Of course, if the question of the personnel of the Navy should remain as the basis of these appropriations, the appropriation would be less than that recommended by the Senate committee. During the war the expenses for this item amounted to about $11,000,000, and for the current year the expenditure for that purpose is $1,000,000. The Navy Department was very urgent in its request for a larger sum than that which is allowed by the Senate committee.

Mr. KING addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I beg pardon for interrupting the Senator, but I would like to ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its session to-day it shall take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its session this afternoon or this evening it shall take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KING. Let me tell my friend that I would have concluded before this if it had not been for interruptions. I have been led into so many digressions that I have been unable to conclude. When I rose I intended to occupy perhaps only half an hour.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have been very much entertained by the Senator's speech.

Mr. KING. It is very kind of the Senator to say that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. KING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15943) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes; that it had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 12, 53, 70, 71, and 84, and agreed to the same; that it had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 10, 22, 34, 54, 106, and 113, and agreed to the same; that it had insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 18, 23, 104, and 105, requested a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. SLEMP, Mr. DENT, and Mr. SISSON managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1551) to amend an act approved March 3, 1891, incorporating the National Conservatory of Music of America.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 5032. An act for the construction of a bridge across Rock River at or near Shirland Avenue, in the city of Beloit, Wis.; and

H. R. 13225. An act providing for the allotment of lands within the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes.

SAVANNAH RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5044) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River near Haileys Ferry, and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a bill, which I understand will require no debate whatever, being a mere routine bridge bill. I have no objection to its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to J. J. Smith and J. E. McGee, both of Starr, S. C., and their assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Savannah River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, near Haileys Ferry, and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 12, 53, 70, 71, and 84 to the bill (H. R. 15943) entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," and agrees to the same.

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted by the Senate, insert the following: "$21,100,000: Provided, That not to exceed $4,000,000 from this appropriation may be expended for pay and expenses of civilian employees other than those employed in experimental and research work; not exceeding $250,000 may be expended for experimentation, conservation, and production of helium; not exceeding $4,300,000 may be expended for experimental and research work with airplanes or lighter-than-air craft and their equipment, including the pay of necessary civilian employees; not exceeding $500,000 may be expended for the production of lighter-than-air equipment; and not exceeding $350,000 may be expended for improvement of stations, hangars, and gas plants: Provided further, That not less than $5,500,000 shall be expended for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories: Provided further,

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: ", and shall also furnish to each transportation in kind from the place of discharge to the railroad station at or nearest to the place of acceptance for enlistment, or to his home if the distance thereto is no greater than from the place of discharge to the place of acceptance for enlistment, but if the distance be greater he may be furnished with transportation in kind for a distance equal to that from place of discharge to place of acceptance for enlistment; and the Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 12 of the matter inserted by said amendment, before the word "enlisted," insert "officers and."

That the House insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 18, 23, 104, and 105, and asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. SLEMP, Mr. DENT, and Mr. SISSON be the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to amendments of the Senate numbered 10, 22, 34, 54, 106, and 113.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments numbered 18, 23, 104, and 105, and ask for a further conference.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator kindly state the subject matter of those disagreements?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can make a statement very briefly which will describe the situation accurately, I think.

The only matters in disagreement between the two Houses at this time are, first, the item of the appropriations for pay of the enlisted men of the line and staff. That amendment is amendment numbered 18, and an amendment which goes with it, and is dependent upon the settlement of amendment numbered 18, is amendment numbered 23.

Amendment numbered 104 is the amendment adopted by the Senate providing for the promotion to the grade of lieutenant general of Gens. Liggett and Bullard.

Amendment numbered 105 is the amendment offered to the bill by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], having to do with decorations resulting from service during the War with Spain.

It may be fair and accurate to state that the principal item in disagreement is the pay of enlisted men, line and staff. The Senate appropriation is $83,000,000. The House appropriation is $72,300,000, in round figures. This item is the item which controls, to a large degree, the size of the Army for the fiscal year 1922. The Senate appropriation would permit of the pay of an Army, including the Philippine Scouts, of 175,000 men for one year.

The House appropriation would permit the pay of an Army averaging 150,000 men for the year. Under the Senate proposal the Army, starting upon July 1 next at a strength of 207,000, which it is estimated it will be at that time, as the result of the expiration of enlistments that are now taking place, would be reduced, by the end of the next fiscal year, to a figure in the neighborhood of 160,000 or 162,000, ending the fiscal year with an Army of that strength. Under the House appropriation, starting on July 1 next with a strength approximately of 207,000 men, the Army would be reduced to a strength of 122,000 men at the end of the next fiscal year.

I think it fair and proper for me to say to the Senate that when this matter of reducing the Army of the United States to a strength of 122,000 at the end of the next fiscal year was discussed in conference, the proposal was made, and sustained with argument, that under the House appropriation the strength of the Army need not be decreased to 122,000 at the end of the next fiscal year; that it should be the policy of the War Department, between now and July 1 next, before the beginning of the next fiscal year, to reduce the Army to such a strength at the beginning of the fiscal year as to make it possible to have an average of 150,000 men during the next fiscal year.

If that were done, and that theory carried into practice, between 85,000 and 90,000 men would have to be arbitrarily discharged from the Regular Army between now and July 1 next, resulting, in the judgment of the Senate conferees, in utter disruption of the Army we now have, making it impossible for any unit of that Army to take the field upon any undertaking or activity whatsoever for months and months to come; amounting, in fact, to this, that not only would the Army be decreased by the normal expiration of enlistments, but beyond that, the War Department would have to step down the ranks of the men, figuratively speaking, touch man after man upon the shoulder, and say to him "Get out," breaking their contracts and interrupting their training.

The Senate conferees—up to this point, at least, and I imagine they will stand upon this question—can not consent to the arbitrary discharge of 90,000 men in any such short period as that, the conferees being convinced that not only during the period between now and July 1 next, but for many months thereafter, we would have no Army at all; and when I say that, I mean an Army competent to do anything in the matter of active service.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have not the bill before me, but am I to understand that there is a provision in the bill which would permit of the resignation of soldiers, or withdrawal from the Army, if they so desire, so as to reduce the number to the 175,000 to which the Senate has sought to limit it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. There is, and that item has been agreed upon in conference, and a legislative provision expediting the discharge of men upon their own desire.

Mr. POMERENE. I asked that question especially because I know that the Army has now in excess of 175,000, and I happen to know some soldiers who are anxious to get out, and have been advised that there was no authority under the present law to release them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. We give the authority, and that matter has been agreed upon.

Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon these amendments, and that the House be asked for a further conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. NEW, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. MCKELLAR conferees on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The READING CLERK. The pending amendment is the amendment of the committee on page 4, line 3, to strike out "$750,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$850,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 4, line 10, to strike out "$3,500,000," and to insert in lieu thereof "$4,000,000," so as to read:

Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in navy yards and naval stations, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, shall not exceed $850,000, and for necessary expenses for the interned persons and prisoners of war under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, including funeral expenses for such interned persons or prisoners of war as may die while under such jurisdiction, and for payment of claims for damages under naval act approved July 11, 1919; in all, $4,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am glad that after three days' discussion we have at last reached the point where there can be some real consideration of the items in the bill. The pending item is one that, in my judgment, ought to remain where the House placed it. The Senate committee amendment ought to be rejected.

There are only two classes of appropriations in the bill—one class dependent upon a policy that shall be adopted with regard to construction and with regard to personnel, and another class of appropriation not dependent upon either the construction or the size of the personnel of the Navy except to a very limited extent.

Some of the items of appropriation in the bill fall under one class, some under another, and some of them include both classes. The amendment now pending is one of the class that is not dependent upon construction. It is not dependent upon personnel. It is an item where the cost will be practically the same whether we have an enlisted personnel of 100,000 or 120,000. Moreover, it is an item, or an aggregation of items, where there is an opportunity for the department to use economy, which is not true, of course, of many items which are in the nature of fixed charges, such as pay of the enlisted personnel and the officers of the Navy.

Under this heading, if we will apply the same rule to the Navy Department that we have applied to the War Department, as other committees have applied to other departments of the Government, this increase of $500,000 will not be agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, can the Senator tell us the amount that was appropriated for this purpose last year?

Mr. LENROOT. The amount appropriated for this purpose last year in the appropriation bill was $3,500,000. The other day in the deficiency bill there was an additional appropriation of $650,000, which makes a total expenditure for this fiscal year under this item of $4,150,000. But out of that $4,150,000 there is being expended this year $232,000 for the transportation of funds for which the department says next year they will not require more than $50,000. So that according to the department itself, eliminating this item of something like $180,000 for the transportation of funds, the committee proposes to give to the Navy under this item as much money as they are spending this year.

As I said, in every other department of the Government, especially where civilian employees are involved, we have been cutting them down. One of the gross extravagances of this administration in all departments is the overhead expense. In this very item there is included $1,000,000 for compensation of clerks. I have forgotten the number, but I think it is something like 600.

Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. We had exactly the same kind of proposition before that committee as to cutting down the overhead, and we cut it down. We were effecting economies in the cost of running the Army; and in the present condition of the Treasury it would seem to me that we ought to compel the different departments of the Government to cut out a very considerable percentage of their overhead. We on this side of the Chamber especially have taken the position that there have been gross extravagances by the different departments of the Government, and we have promised that we are going to eliminate those extravagances; yet when we come to the very first item in the naval bill which involves these various matters, where economies may be effected if they can be effected anywhere in the Government, the committee proposes by this amendment to give as much as the department are spending this year. If every other committee shall follow the same policy as has been pursued in the case of this item, there will be no way on earth under which the expenses of the Government may be lessened or reduced, and the promise which the Republican Party has made can never be redeemed.

More than that, Mr. President, it is not fair to the Army to compel the Army to cut down its overhead and get upon an economical basis and then say to the Navy, "So far as your overhead is concerned, we are going to give you just as much as you have had in the past, which we have heretofore condemned."

Furthermore, in 1916 the appropriation for this item—which is, I say, not dependent except in a very small degree upon the size of the personnel—the appropriation for this item which the committee now proposes to raise to $4,000,000 was $1,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. When was that?

Mr. LENROOT. That was in 1916, and there was also a deficiency that year of $200,000. So the total expenditures for the items the appropriation for which the committee now proposes to raise to $4,000,000 in 1916 was $1,200,000.

That has nothing to do with the increase of the Navy, and has very little to do with the increase of the personnel of the Navy. In fact, I believe at that time we had something like eighty-four or eighty-five thousand men in the enlisted personnel in the Navy. Now, if we are going to keep on increasing the overhead expenses of the different departments of the Government by 300 per cent or more—and that is what it is proposed to do in this instance—where are we going to stop? Where is this thing going to end? Mr. President, this has nothing to do with the policy whether we are for an enlisted personnel of 100,000 or 120,000.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to follow the Senator's argument. I ask the Senator what this item carried in 1916?

Mr. LENROOT. It carried $1,000,000 and there was a deficiency of $200,000; so that the total expenditure for 1916 for what we now propose to appropriate $4,000,000 was $1,200,000.

As I have said, Mr. President, it is not fair to the other departments of the Government to cut them down as we have and to let the overhead of the Navy go right on as it is going. As I said a little while ago, the estimate proposes $1,000,000 for clerk hire on this one item alone. In that connection, speaking of the overhead of the Navy, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to what we are paying this year for certain classes only of civilian employees. Turning to the Book of Estimates, I find that for salaries of clerks, draftsmen, inspectors, chemists, messengers, watchmen, and so forth, in the navy yards, naval stations, and so forth, we are proposing to spend this year $20,220,000. I do not believe there is anyone—and I make the statement because of the investigation I have made of expenditures in the War Department—who will investigate the subject who will not say that that item can not be cut in two without any injury to the Government. So, Mr. President, I do not think there is any justification for the increase of $500,000 in the item.

May I add that, if the Senate is going to keep up this overhead, this unnecessary expense, that adds nothing to the efficiency of the Navy, that has nothing to do with the size of the Navy, the very friends of an efficient Navy will find in the future that the country in its opposition to these enormous expenses is going to charge it all up to the size of the Navy and the personnel of the Navy, just as they are doing as to the Army. If a larger personnel is desired, if a larger Navy is desired, the best way to secure them is to cut out every dollar of unnecessary expenditures. That can be done by cutting out this overhead. So, Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I simply want to say a word in regard to this item. It is 33⅓ per cent lower than the amount which was estimated by the department. The item of $3,500,000 in the House bill was estimated upon the basis of an enlisted strength of 100,000 men.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] says that the item is not affected by that. It is true that it is not affected directly, but it is affected to a considerable extent indirectly, in that the services which are provided for by this item will be increased if the enlisted strength of the Navy is raised from an average of 100,000 men to an average of 120,000 men, as it is at present. It is much less than the expenditure that was incurred last year. The appropriations recommended by the amendment proposed by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs are based upon the supposition that the Navy will be maintained at the same strength that it was last year and the same strength as it is during the current year.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator point out any item under this heading that is affected by the size of the personnel?

Mr. POINDEXTER. For 120,000 instead of 100,000 men, more clerks are necessary in keeping the accounts of expenditures. That item is included in this provision.

Mr. LENROOT. How much is that item?

Mr. POINDEXTER. One million dollars was estimated last year and $1,250,000 was estimated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not true that the hearings show that the clerks were mostly used in keeping up the records of the Naval Reserve?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They showed that, to a considerable extent, they were used for that purpose.

Mr. LENROOT. That work is not affected by the size of the personnel.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; but that is not the entire employment of these clerks.

Mr. LENROOT. No; but a very large proportion of this expense is for mileage of officers and expenses of that kind that are not affected by the size of the personnel.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is true; I did not say that it was entirely controlled by the size of the personnel.

Mr. LENROOT. A very small part of it is affected by the size of the personnel.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is impossible to estimate, without much more examination than the Senator and myself have been able to give it, exactly how much. It is a minor part, but still a considerable part. Most of these items are items which are very accurately fixed by the charges that it is necessary to meet for the services which are rendered; for instance, the traveling expenses of officers.

Mr. LENROOT. As to the traveling expenses of officers, I will say we found in the case of the Army that the traveling expenses of officers can be very largely controlled by the amount appropriated. It is not necessary on some slight pretext to send an officer from the city of New York to San Francisco and another officer to take his place from San Francisco back to the city of New York, when that money could be saved, and it would be saved, if the appropriations are kept down. It will not be saved unless the appropriations are kept down.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am aware there are extravagances in these various services; I do not defend that for one moment, but I think the Senator will find upon examination that there has been a great deal more recklessness in expenditures in the War Department than there has been in the Navy Department. When the committee reduced the amount that was required by the various items included under the heading for which this appropriation is made from $6,000,000, which it was insisted by the department was necessary, to $4,000,000, we thought that we were acting in the interest of economy.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Can we expect to retrench expenditures if we are going to give the various departments as much money as they are spending for the current fiscal year? That is what we are doing in the case of this item.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not entirely as much.

Mr. LENROOT. What is the difference?

Mr. POINDEXTER. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no.

Mr POINDEXTER. I ascertain that it is $50,000 less than the amount expended this year; but the strength of the Navy and the services to be rendered will be the same. Of course, the saving, if any, will have to be made by an enforced economy in the organization and in the manner in which these services are performed.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, is not the Navy personnel larger to-day than that for which it is proposed to appropriate for the next fiscal year?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is just about the same.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; there are nearly 135,000 men now.

Mr. HALE. The present number is 128,500.

Mr. LENROOT. Then that is more than it is proposed to appropriate for during the next fiscal year, and, therefore, if this has a material bearing on the expense and is unsupported by reason of the personnel, under the Senator's own statement they need less money next year than they had this.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator is speaking about the strength of the Navy at the present time. These appropriations are based upon an estimate of the average strength of the Navy throughout the year, and there is that difference. We do not expect that in the fiscal year for which these appropriations are made the Navy will remain at a fixed strength, in view of the expiration of enlistments and the difficulty of recruiting, any more than it has in the present year.

CREDITS UNDER LIBERTY LOAN ACTS.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington permit me to report a resolution from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just to report it?

Mr. CALDER. And ask for its consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall have to object to that.

Mr. CALDER. It will not lead to any discussion. It is a unanimous report from the committee, and simply authorizes the Committee on the Judiciary to conduct hearings.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What committee is it?

Mr. REED. The Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If that is the matter in which the Senator from Missouri is interested, I have no objection to that. I understand that it will lead to no debate at all.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably Senate resolution 471, authorizing the Committee on the Judiciary to conduct hearings, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be read by the Secretary.

The reading clerk read Senate resolution 471, reported by Mr. REED from the Committee on the Judiciary, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary or any subcommittee thereof be authorized to investigate and ascertain what credits have been established and what commitments, advancements, and payments have been made or are claimed to have been made by authority of the four Liberty loan acts, the Victory loan act, or any other acts of Congress granting the Secretary of the Treasury authority to accept the obligations of foreign Governments for moneys, munitions, or supplies furnished them by the United States Government and the reasons for making said credits, commitments, advancements, or payments, and

That the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the present session of the Sixty-sixth Congress, or during the recesses between the Sixty-sixth and Sixty-seventh Congresses, and

That the committee or any subcommittee thereof be authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost of not to exceed $1.25 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with this investigation; and

That the expenses contracted thereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning on page 4, line 11.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 4, line 17, after the word "Navy," to insert "and for such purposes as he may deem proper," so as to read:

Contingent, Navy: For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, $50,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to make any objection to this, but is this a usual clause in an appropriation bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It has always been in the bill—at least, for a number of years.

Mr. BORAH. I see that it was not in the House text.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was stricken out of the House bill on a point of order under the new rule of procedure they have there, where there was a difference between the members of the Naval Affairs Committee and the members of the Appropriations Committee. Simply for the purpose of showing the effect of that new rule several items were stricken out of this bill on which the Appropriations Committee and the Naval Affairs Committee were agreed; but, because a Member made the point of order, they were stricken out.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that it was in the appropriation bill for the Navy Department last year; but is there usually found in appropriation bills a clause authorizing the heads of departments to spend money in any way that they want to?

Mr. POINDEXTER. This particular clause is intended to vest discretion in the head of the department in connection with the specific purposes which are mentioned. The entire amount is comparatively small.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There are some small items, of course, that he has to meet out of this appropriation for the various objects which are specified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire whether amendments to the text are permitted now under the unanimous-consent agreement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Only committee amendments are in order now. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 5, line 9, after the numerals "1921," to insert "and to continue the construction of rigid dirigible"; and in line 10 to strike out "$440,000" and insert "$1,440,000," so as to read:

Aviation, Navy: For aviation, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, as follows: For aircraft and accessories in course of construction or manufacture on June 30, 1921, and to continue the construction of rigid dirigible, $1,440,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before a vote is taken upon that amendment I should like to ask the Senator from Washington, in view of the rather lamentable experience of other nations that have tried these rigid dirigibles, and in view of the development of the airplane, whether he regards it as wise to continue an appropriation for that purpose? I ask in the utmost good faith, because I will say frankly that a number of men who I think not only claim to know but actually do know have represented to me that this is an absolute waste of money; that the experience of other nations, of Germany and our allies, with respect to these rigid dirigibles ought to forbid us from expending further moneys for experiments of that character.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, of course there are some differences of opinion about this matter, I assume, just as there are in regard to other branches of the naval service. This increase in the appropriations is to enable the Navy Department to continue the construction of one dirigible, which is now about half completed, at Lakehurst, N. J. The information that I have is not altogether to the effect that the Senator from Utah speaks of. I think that dirigibles have been put into considerable use in Europe, even for commercial purposes, quite recently, and the immediate situation we are confronted with as to this item is that we are engaged in the construction of this dirigible, and the appropriation is for the purpose of completing it, or continuing its construction.

Mr. KING. I was not challenging the advantages and utility of dirigibles for possible commercial purposes, but my criticism was leveled against their utility as instrumentalities of war. Scientific men of character and standing have communicated to me and with me, and their representations are unanimous that as an instrument of war it is an absolute failure; that with the aircraft, the scouting planes, as well as the other forms, the dirigible becomes a target of such magnitude that it is impossible to escape, and to claim for it any advantage for military purposes is absolutely at variance with the facts. I have no expert knowledge. All I know is what I read in reference to the matter, and what I am told by those who claim to know. It does seem to me, Mr. President, that this is a waste of money, and I was appealing to the Senator to ascertain whether or not, with his larger experience and broader knowledge, he would dissent from the view which I have expressed, and consent to eliminate this item.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator from Utah really would seriously urge the abandonment of this dirigible. We have only two in the entire Navy. One was bought from Great Britain, and we have recently sent a crew to bring it to this country, and we are constructing this one, and are now in the middle of its construction, having expended a million dollars on it, and in view of the opinion of the aviation officers as to the usefulness and value of dirigibles, and also the experience of the Germans—of course it would take a long time to discuss the details of the use of the Zeppelins during the Great War, but they were a considerable feature of the German offensive during that war—I do not think the Senator would object to completing the construction of this one dirigible.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall not object if the Senator in charge of the bill feels that it ought to be completed. But I do want to say, if the Senator will pardon me, that this is an exhibition of the reactionary and archaic policy which has been announced by the General Naval Board, a policy which Admiral Sims, in his testimony before the Senate Naval Affairs Committee, characterized as rather of that description.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would not like to have the Senator leave an impression, which I know he does not intend to convey, that Admiral Sims spoke about dirigibles.

Mr. KING. No; I was speaking about the general policy. That matter was not called to the attention of Admiral Sims, so far as I know. But he was speaking of the general policy of the board and the report made by the board in response to the resolution which was offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What Admiral Sims urged was to increase our general development of aircraft, and what he rather discouraged was reliance upon battleships, although he did not advise the continuance of the battleship construction.

Mr. KING. So that I may do no injustice to Admiral Sims I want to put into the RECORD just exactly what he did say. He stated:

I think the report is very largely mistaken. It looks to me very much like a report the arguments of which are drawn up to prove what they originally believed. It looks to me like a document of that kind. As I stated informally a little while ago, so conservative are military people in their attitude toward new incidents that that is the first development we always have.

I think, Mr. President, that the criticism of Admiral Sims with reference to the policy of the General Board would apply to the recommendation of the General Board for the continuance of appropriations for rigid dirigibles for war purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was on page 5, line 10, under the item for "Aviation, Navy," to strike out "440,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,440,000," so as to read:

and to continue the construction of rigid dirigibles, $1,440,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I understand that this paragraph on which we are working now covers the entire question of the aircraft as provided for in the bill?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It does.

Mr. BORAH. Increasing the appropriation about $11,000,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I am very much in favor, so far as I am concerned, of increasing the aircraft, but I notice below, at the foot of the page, that there is a vast amount of the money to be used for building new buildings and improvements, air stations, and so forth. Those are all amendments which were put in by the Senate Committee. Were they stricken out in the House under the same circumstances?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; the circumstances in regard to those were that it was regarded apparently by the appropriations committee as being subject to a point of order, and they were provided for in a bill favorably reported by the Naval Affairs Committee of the House, which was on the House Calendar, but not in this bill which came from the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. KING. I had some conversation with a member of the Naval Affairs Committee—perhaps the Senator from Washington may have been advised—with respect to one or two items embraced in this appropriation bill and also the item of $1,500,000 for Alameda.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What was the first item the Senator mentioned?

Mr. KING. Perhaps the Senator was advised of some informal talk which I had with one member of the committee respecting one or two items embraced in this aggregate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator mean the aggregate for aviation?

Mr. KING. Yes; and some aviation bases on the Pacific coast, and in connection with those items the question of the $1,500,000 for Alameda was considered.

In that informal conversation I made certain statements, and I would like to have this amendment go over until we reach the Alameda amendment, and if what I stated to the member of the committee shall be agreeable to the Senator, then we can simply recur to this, and I shall have no objection to its being adopted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Which amendment is it the Senator asks to go over?

Mr. KING. The items under aviation generally.

Mr. POINDEXTER. All the items under the head of aviation?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well; I will agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment relating to aviation being passed over? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 15, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the word "and," before Corpus Christi, in line 11 of section 1 of the act entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1911, be stricken out, and following the words "Corpus Christi," in the same line, insert the words "Tampa, Fla., and Portland, Me."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 8, after the word "seamen" to insert "and applicants for enlistment"; so as to read:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

Transportation and recruiting: For travel allowance of enlisted men discharged on account of expiration of enlistment; transportation of enlisted men and apprentice seamen and applicants for enlistment at home and abroad, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof.

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 2, to strike out "$3,500,000" and insert "$4,500,000" as the total under "Bureau of Navigation."

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Wisconsin, I think, wanted to be present when this is considered. I ask that it be passed over for just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 2, to insert:

The Bureau of Navigation, Navy Department, is hereby directed to furnish to the proper officers in the several States, Territories, insular possessions, and the District of Columbia, on or before December 31, 1921, statements of the services of all persons from those several places who served in the Navy during the war with Germany, and for that purpose an additional sum not to exceed $100,000 is hereby appropriated for obtaining the necessary material and the employment of the necessary clerical force.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Washington whether, with the very large clerical force which has been provided for the Navy Department, it is deemed necessary to allow a hundred thousand dollars additional?

Mr. POINDEXTER. This is not additional. This is an entirely different service, specified in the paragraph. The Senator has read the paragraph and understands what it is for. It is for supplying "to the proper officers in the several States, Territories, insular possessions, and the District of Columbia, on or before December 31, 1921, statements of the services of all persons from those several places who served in the Navy during the war with Germany."

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I entirely approve of the plan to furnish the information which the amendment contemplates shall be furnished.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The word "additional" there is not necessary. The previous appropriation was for the preceding year. This is to continue this work, which was not completed. The money that has heretofore been appropriated for the previous year has been expended. It is not a permanent service, the Senator will understand. The paragraph provides for its completion December 31, 1921. It has been in progress, however, for some time. There was an appropriation made in the bill which passed last year. That has been expended, and it is proposed now to continue and complete the work.

Mr. KING. The inquiry I made was this: A very liberal allowance has been made for the Navy Department. I was wondering if, with the large personnel which has been furnished the Navy Department for its clerical work and the work of a clerical nature which comes properly under the cognizance of the Navy Department, sufficient provision was not made to do the work so as to avoid the necessity of employing additional men. If the Senator after investigation feels that the amount we have allowed to the Navy Department is inadequate or insufficient to perform the work, then I am in favor of it, but it seems to me we have made such a large appropriation for the Navy Department that it ought, with its large personnel, to perform the work.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, but the appropriations for clerical services in the Navy Department are all based upon estimates and testimony as to the cost of the services of the regular organization. This is a special service outside of the permanent organization of the Navy Department, and the sufficiency of the appropriation to which the Senator refers and which he says is liberal, but which was $2,000,000 less than asked for by the department, was supposed to be entirely used for the purpose of the regular organization of the department, and consequently there would be nothing for this special work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may we now recur to the item on page 9, line 2?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will recur to the item mentioned, and the amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 9, line 2, strike out "$3,500,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,500,000."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this item is dependent to a very large extent upon the size of the enlisted personnel of the Navy, and that question therefore comes up indirectly at least at this point, because if we are to have a personnel of 100,000, such as is provided by the House, it would be admitted that there would be perhaps no increase necessary, and certainly not so large an increase as is proposed by the committee, which is $1,000,000.

In this connection we have heard a great deal about the carrying out of the 1916 program. Some Senators seem to think that program was divinely inspired; that there can be or should be no change whatever with respect to it. But it is a little curious that whenever the carrying out of the 1916 program involves more money and more expense they appeal to it, but whenever the carrying out of the 1916 program involves less expense than is proposed by the committee, we hear nothing of the 1916 program.

What is the 1916 program, and what was it with respect to personnel of the Navy? The figures were given when the 1916 program was adopted, that with every ship constructed and in commission under that program it would require only 96,775 men. They now say 100,000 are not sufficient, when the 1916 program, in so far as new ships are concerned, has scarcely begun, with only one or two ships in commission under it. The authorized strength of the Navy, it is true, is 143,000 men. We now have in the Navy about 128,000 men. The pending bill appropriates for 120,000 men throughout the year, and I have no doubt that many Senators assume from that fact that it is proposed during the next fiscal year to hold the enlisted personnel of the Navy down to 120,000. However, that is not true at all. Under the appropriations that are proposed by the Senate committee the enlisted personnel of the Navy at the end of the next fiscal year will be somewhere between 130,000 and 140,000 instead of 120,000. With reference to the Army we have appropriated for an average of 175,000 throughout the year, and that will bring the Army down to 162,000 at the end of the year. But it so happens here, where Senators would naturally think the same rule would prevail, that appropriating for 120,000 throughout the year will bring the Navy very nearly to its full authorized strength at the end of the year.

What reason is there for that expense? Does any Senator believe for a moment that there is the slightest possibility that during the fiscal year beginning on the 1st day of next July our Navy will be called into action with any first-class power in the world? No Senator on this floor believes it. I can not believe that there is a Senator on the floor who believes that there is even a possibility of the Navy being called into action with a first-class power during the next fiscal year. I can well understand the attitude of those Senators who believe the Navy should be kept up to its full fighting strength at all times, so that in the future we shall be ready whenever the time may come, although we may be certain it is not within the next year or two years or three years; that the policy should be to keep the Navy up ready to fight at any moment, although during any given fiscal year we may be absolutely certain that there will be no occasion to use it.

Comparisons, so far as personnel is concerned, have been made between our Navy, the British Navy, and the Japanese Navy. The British Navy to-day, large as it is, conceded to be superior to ours in effectiveness, has only 107,000 enlisted men against our 128,000, but it is said the English seaman, the English sailor, the English gunner, has better training, has had longer training than our American boys. Is there a Senator on the floor to-night who would admit or who would make the statement that, although they may not have had so long a training, it takes six American boys to match five English boys? Perhaps there is, but I am not one of them. By the same reasoning Japan to-day has a personnel of 70,000 in her navy. These gentlemen would have the country believe that it takes two American boys in the American Navy to match one Japanese. Does anyone seriously contend that?

I am in favor of keeping up our Navy to a high state of efficiency. I am not in favor of abandoning the 1916 building program. I am in favor of our aviation program as contained in the bill, in so far especially as research and betterment are concerned, but in view of the condition of the United States Treasury, in view of the certainty that the Navy will not be called into action with any first-class power during the next fiscal year, in view of the need of economy, I do not see how the amendment can be justified that will bring the personnel of the Navy up to over 130,000 at the end of the next fiscal year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this item, with the items on pages 30 and 31, are the items that bear directly upon the question of the size of the personnel. I do not desire to be calling for a quorum every few minutes, but I should like to have a quorum here when we pass upon that very important question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to suggest that if we can pass this particular item until we take up the item on pages 30 and 31 we could possibly get enough Senators here to have a quorum to give consideration to the bill for a few minutes. I ask that that may be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent to pass over the pending amendment for the present. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Naval Affairs was, on page 10, line 5, in the item for gunnery and engineering exercises, to strike out "For the maintenance of established shooting galleries, target houses, targets, and ranges, and for transporting equipment to and from ranges, $100,000," and insert:

Prizes, trophies, and badges for excellence in gunnery, target practice, engineering exercises, and for economy in fuel consumption, to be awarded under such rules as the Secretary of the Navy may formulate; for the purpose of printing, recording, classifying, compiling, and publishing the rules and results; for the establishment and maintenance of shooting galleries, target houses, targets, and ranges; for hiring established ranges, and for transporting equipment to and from ranges, $100,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there are many provisions in the pending bill which command my approval. I recently presented in a minority report upon the Borah resolution some of my views concerning our naval program and certain international questions cognate thereto, and the views there presented are pertinent to the discussion of the pending measure. Upon a number of occasions I have contended that not only the interests of the United States but of the world required the creation of a vital and functioning international league or association of nations devoted to world peace and world disarmament. It was apparent that a treaty following the armistice and which would impose indemnities and reparations upon the defeated nations would not alone solve all postwar problems or bring full and satisfactory international fellowship and cooperation into the world. Great statesmen, philosophers, humanitarians, and the people throughout the world, horrified by the war experiences of the past and sincerely desiring the dawn of a brighter and sweeter day, asked of their political leaders for some program, some rational plan, that would promote world peace and justice.

This Nation in the World War became the leader not only in material but in moral things. The disinterestedness of the American people, their well-known desire for justice, their unselfish contribution to the World War, gave them a preeminence denied to all others, and so victors and vanquished turned to America for guidance in the dark days that it was recognized would follow when the momentous problems created by the war would call for solution.

As I recall the attitude of our allies and of the world during the peace conference, there was no distrust of our Nation or jealousy because of its primacy. It seemed the natural and proper thing for the peoples everywhere to turn to this mighty Nation for leadership and inspiration. I shall not discuss the causes which prevented the United States from entering the league nor the world-wide disappointment, indeed despair, resulting from our action. I shall not consider what is involved in our abandonment of our allies and our refusal to assume those imperative obligations resulting from the war, affecting not only the peace and welfare of Europe but, indeed, the peace and welfare of the world. I express, however, my profound regret at the course pursued by this Nation, and repeat what I have heretofore declared, that, in my opinion, we have been guilty of punic faith, and history will record that we deserted our allies at a critical period, and refused to accept the opportunity to perform a high service for humanity; a service which would likewise prove of inestimable value to the people of our own land. Refusing to become a member of the League of Nations or to join in the world movement for limitation of armaments, we have retarded world peace and have become an impediment to the realization of a policy for which the world is crying out, a policy of disarmament, which would bring a measure of relief from the staggering burdens of taxation under which the world is now struggling.

Our purposes will be misunderstood, and this misunderstanding will be the basis of demands upon the part of other nations who desire disarmament, for the maintenance of military forces and the building of more powerful navies. Our example in refusing to associate with the world to bring about world peace and world disarmament, followed by a naval program the most pretentious and ambitious ever devised by any nation, will inevitably react upon other nations and produce disquiet, distrust, and, indeed, animosity, which it may prove difficult for this Nation to allay. When the world is crying out for peace and looking for moral leadership, we demand isolation and project a naval program which will involve in the immediate future the expenditure of more than one billion of dollars. The despairing people of the world cry for bread and we give them a stone.

However, Mr. President, in view of the position which our Nation has taken, I shall support a policy which will give us an adequate Navy. I have outlined in the minority report, to which I have referred, what I conceive to be a suitable and proper naval policy to be pursued.

In the consideration of the pending naval bill I have been impressed with the thought that the overhead expenses of the Navy Department are entirely disproportionate to the amount appropriated for construction purposes and for meeting the compensation allowed officers and enlisted men. The same thought was also suggested to me when we were considering the Army bill. As I recall, the amount appropriated for the Army for the next fiscal year was more than $400,000,000, yet of that stupendous amount but $36,000,000 was carried for the compensation of the enlisted men. By far the greater part of this huge sum was for overhead expenses. An examination of the pending naval bill reveals that the amount to be paid to the enlisted men in the Navy is insignificant measured by the total sum asked in the bill.

The bill before us carries approximately $500,000,000. As I have explained in the minority report, to which I have referred, the completion of the 1916 naval program will involve a further direct expenditure of more than $500,000,000, and several hundreds of millions more will be required immediately for plane carrier ships, submarines, and so forth, to provide a Navy which is symmetrical and which will be necessary to round out and properly supplement the Navy called for in the 1916 program. And with the completion of this program we will still be called upon to appropriate approximately $500,000,000 each year for the maintenance of the Navy, and the additional amount that will be required annually for new construction will be enormous, aggregating tens, if not hundreds, of millions of dollars.

I repeat, the overhead expenses in both the Army and the Navy are too great. There is too much waste and extravagance both in the Army and the Navy. There are too many organizations and agencies, too many plants and machine shops and posts and military and naval stations. There are too many civilian employees and too many officers and men within the military and naval service engaged in insignificant and unimportant duties. The time has arrived to reorganize naval and military administrative methods. Economies must be practiced. Better work must be done. A higher standard of efficiency must be attained. There are needed in the Army and Navy men of executive ability, of courage, of vision, men who live in the present and not in the past, and who will adopt improved business methods and apply high standards of efficiency and service. The war made for extravagance and profligacy in the expenditure of public funds, and radical reforms are imperatively required in the Navy as well as in the Army. I protest against an appropriation of approximately $500,000,000 for the maintenance of the Navy for one year, an insignificant part of which is required to meet the compensation due the enlisted personnel. It seems that the war spirit which developed an appetite for enormous appropriations in all branches of the Government is still controlling us. We are still carried by those giant waves which covered the land and gathered all within their powerful sweep. We seem unable to extricate ourselves from these mighty influences and return to the paths of economy and safety and national sanity.

As I have stated, in view of the attitude of our Nation, I favor a rational, and, if I may be permitted to say, a progressive naval program. I am opposed to an archaic navy; and if we are to have one, I desire that it shall be modern and represent the most valuable and enduring lessons revealed by the Great War through which we have just passed. I am not advocating a "little Navy" or a weak Navy or an obsolete Navy, but an efficient and adequate Navy.

I confess to disappointment at the adoption of a policy which generates international suspicion and may be provocative of war. Without desiring to be critical or partisan, I am constrained to express my regret at the action of the Senate yesterday in halting proceedings during the consideration of the naval bill and entering into an executive session. While the session was presumed to be a secret one, Senators knew that the newspapers of the following day would contain reports, more or less accurate, on the proceedings. It is clear that the situation under which the secret session was called would provoke not only national but international comment and interest. It was known that there was some opposition to the naval bill and to the stupendous appropriations which it carried. It was known that there was a feeling among some people in the United States that there should be a suspension, partial or complete, of the 1916 naval program, pending negotiations not only for disarmament but for a league or association of nations. It was also known that England had suspended the construction of additional capital ships, and that in Japan, outside of what might be denominated the military party, there was an insistent demand that the Japanese people be relieved from further naval burdens. A secret session of the Senate which was considering these enormous appropriations for naval purposes would unquestionably be regarded by other nations with anxiety and suspicion. I believe, Mr. President, that the secret session of the Senate yesterday will be interpreted by Japan and Great Britain, as well as other nations, as a movement, if not in the interest of imperialism on the part of this Republic at least as a veiled threat against one or more nations. I am afraid that nations that desire our friendship and wish to live in amity and peace with the United States will regard not only the secret session of the Senate but this bill as a challenge to the world.

In my opinion it is not the proper time for the United States to wield the "big stick" or announce a policy of jingoism. There should be a subsidence, not a revival, of the war spirit. We should be for world peace and for a reduction of armaments, for fraternity and fellowship. We should breathe the spirit of mercy and charity and love, and seek sincere cooperation, not only with our allies but with all nations to bring about world peace and usher in a new order of social justice and international harmony. Never before has this Nation had an opportunity so great for beneficent and enduring service for civilization and humanity. But there are those in our midst who demand that we shall have the largest Navy in the world; that a plan projected in 1915 which will involve the expenditure for construction purposes of approximately $1,500,000,000 shall be carried to completion regardless of the teachings of the war or the despairing condition of the world or the psychological effect that such action will produce everywhere. The reactionaries and materialists would strip from our Republic its crown of leadership, its moral habiliments, and return to the old conflicts with their deadly passions and struggles. They seek not only to control our domestic policies but our international policies, and preach the same creed, imperialistic and sinister, the same philosophy of force, which found enthusiastic propagandists in German military and educational circles for more than a quarter of a century preceding the recent war. They refuse to believe that moral progress in the world is possible, or that there can be relief from the military and naval burdens which have oppressed the world. These forces while professing a desire for world peace are insisting that war is imminent, and they are demanding larger appropriations both for the Army and the Navy than were ever granted by Congress except during the two years' participation of this Republic in the recent World War.

When appropriations have been sought for military or naval purposes there have always been the loud cries of the jingoes who have warned of approaching war and appealed to the passions and prejudices and national vanity of the people.

Mr. President, in my opinion the United States should communicate to the nations of the world its purpose to aid in relieving humanity from naval and military burdens. The American people should manifest their faith in God and in His purposes, and seek not only in their domestic but in their foreign relations to exemplify the teachings of the Nazarene whose influences Christian nations recognize and whose principles if sincerely adhered to will establish peace and righteousness and justice throughout the world.

This false philosophy, this crass materialism to which I have referred, would condemn humanity forever to the treadmill of war and preparations for war. Is there to be no amelioration from the tragic conditions that have afflicted the world in the past? Are we forever to tread the pathways which have been macadamized by human bones and cemented with human blood? Is the future to be merely a repetition of the tragedies and sorrows of the past? Is humanity forever to be chained like Prometheus, to be preyed upon by the vultures and the beasts, that a materialistic world from which God and morality are banished will create? Are we to devote our resources and dedicate our energies, our genius, and all that we have to preparations for the destruction of humanity and the devising of means to wage devastating war on land and sea?

A few days ago a distinguished admiral testified before the Senate Naval Committee, and his statement seems to find expression in the naval appropriation bill now before us and to support the jingo policies which are being advocated by some in our midst. He contended there would be no "cessation of war," and that those who came after us must devote themselves to the construction of battleships and to preparation for war.

Unfortunately Mr. President, some naval and military officers are zealous propagandists of big armies and big navies. They see danger upon land and upon sea and find foes lurking where only friends appear. These officers, as well as many who write upon military and naval questions, adopt the premise that if a nation shall enjoy peace, it must maintain the biggest army and the most powerful navy. Under the guise of preparedness, they inculcate a spirit of war and seek the creation of a military régime. International peace, in their view, is possible only through armaments and military and naval forces. They seem oblivious to the fact that this competitive system of international armament has obtained in the past and has resulted in cruel and devastating wars and in deluging the world with the blood of uncounted millions of human beings. Each nation must arm and the world be converted into an armed camp; thus will peace and righteousness and love and fellowship prevail in the hearts of men. It is a false and wicked philosophy. We have denounced it and its apotheosis in Germany and have accepted the view that the World War resulted from this policy.

I inquire, Mr. President, are we to return to the darkness and the horrors of the past and take Germany's place as the exponent of military power in the world? Are we to cast aside moral leadership for military leadership, and drive the impoverished distracted people of the world back into the shadows from which they have emerged, and force upon them a cruel, oppressive, and reactionary policy, one that makes for war, and war with all its attendant evils?

Returning to the testimony of the admiral, let me read a few of his sentences:

> All this talk of disarmament is absolutely and scientifically wrong. It is not in accordance with the teachings of history. It is euphemistic, to start with, and any argument that can be made against unpreparedness can be made against disarmament. Disarmament in a great country always precedes a toboggan slide every time. That is the first symptom.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] after this statement had been made, suggested to the admiral that his position commanded a very able advocate in Bernhardi.

The teachings of Bernhardi, following the materialism of modern German philosophy, are familiar to the American people. He accepted and supplemented the philosophy of Nietsche, who said:

> And you have heard men say, blessed are the peacemakers; but I say unto you, blessed are the war makers, for they shall be called, if not the children of Jehovah, the children of Odin, who is greater than Jehovah.

This view was not confined to the military cabal of the German Government, but it permeated all intellectual circles, controlled the universities and eminent professors whose names were known in other lands, influenced the clergy, and found supporters in all ranks of society. Nietsche and those who possessed similar views sought to impress their philosophy upon the political leaders of Germany, believing that the ideals and purposes by which they and the military leaders would be guided, would, in the end, determine the thoughts and lives of the people. If the philosophy of force could be made the policy of the Government, it was believed that it would soon shape the conduct and furnish the ideals of all the people.

There can be found historic examples justifying their belief. Often the lives and thoughts of the masses are reflected in the conduct and policies of their political leaders, but in many nations and in various ages those possessing political and military power have molded public thought and established the paths trodden by the people. This barren and destructive philosophy of Germany, which was a negation of the vital and living forces operating in the world, fired the imagination of the German people and filled them with mad ambitions and desires for conquest and world hegemony.

Treitschki was an exponent of the philosophy of force, and he stated that the establishment of an international court of arbitration as a permanent institution is irreconcilable with the nature of the state. "To the end of history, weapons will maintain their right and precisely herein lies the sanctity of war." Another statement by him is the following: "A living God will take care that war shall always return as a terrible medicine for the human race." And again he speaks of the "moral majesty of war."

Von Moltke, guided by the same spirit, in a letter to Bluntschli, wrote: "Perpetual peace is a dream and not even a beautiful dream. War is an element of the order of the world established by God. The most noble virtues of men are developed in it. Without war, the world would stagnate and lose itself in materialism."

Returning to the testimony of the admiral, this question was propounded to him:

> So you do not look forward, then, to any decrease whatever in the burdens of the people of the world in maintaining these great armaments? You feel that those have got to be borne and they have got to increase continuously? You do not look for any relief whatever in that direction.

This was the reply of the admiral to that question:

> I put it this way: I do not like to appear as a prophet, but will say that according to history that is the way it has always been. If there is anything to change the current history, then, of course, that will have a bearing.

This answer would imply that because history is replete with the record of wars, the future is to be found in the vortex of war; that any efforts to reduce armaments would be unwise and would be conclusive evidence of national decadence and a sure precursor of national death; and further, that bloodshed and international conflicts were to continue forever.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have listened with interest to the extract which the Senator from Utah has read from the testimony of the admiral, and I want to suggest to the Senator if he does not think that the admiral has in mind, when he states the consequences of disarmament, the consequences that would devolve upon a nation which disarmed unless other nations also disarmed?

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President, I do not think that the admiral had that in mind, because at another point in his testimony he said, in substance, that if there were agreements to disarm they would be absolutely ineffective and that nations would continue to arm and war would be the companion of humanity. If not the substance of his statement, that is the legitimate inference to be derived therefrom.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The admiral may have thought that some nations might not keep their agreements, as some nations frequently have not kept their agreements; but I do not deduce from anything the Senator has read the inference that the admiral was in favor of war per se, for the love of war, or that he thought that universal war was a good thing for the people; but that he thought that a nation that disarmed when other nations remained armed was, as the admiral said, "on the toboggan slide"; and I agree with him.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the position of the admiral is not precisely that taken by the able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. I might add, however, by way of parenthesis, that the argument suggested by the Senator from Connecticut has always been urged by militarists in favor of military preparations and of costly armaments. The Emperor of Germany repeatedly declared that he was the greatest peacemaker in the world and that his purpose was to establish peace; but while avowing his devotion to peace he was building a powerful navy and drilling a mighty army. When his attention was called to the inconsistency between his declarations for peace and his feverish preparations for war he replied that preparedness made for peace and that his policy was to insure against war. Even if it be conceded that he did desire world peace, it is apparent that the very course which he pursued not only was the precursor of war but inevitably would lead to war. The course of Germany inspired fear upon the part of some nations and compelled them to increase their appropriations for military and naval purposes for years preceding the wanton attack of Germany upon France. The French people lived in constant fear of the descending sword of Germany and the marching hosts of the Kaiser's legions. They were compelled to increase their taxes, strengthen their armies, and devote a large part of their resources to defensive military preparations. The efforts of the Czar of Russia to promote international good will and establish international tribunals to settle international controversies met no hearty response from the military leaders of Germany; and accordingly the military burdens of Russia were increased and the Russian people lived in constant fear of Prussian aggression.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield further?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, I am not attempting to defend those who have pretended to be for peace but have really been for war. Here in this bill we are making a proposition to the other two great naval powers to meet for a conference for the purpose of reducing naval armaments. It seems to me that the Senator from Utah is not justified in saying that the admiral from whose testimony he has just read is in favor of this country being at war or being ready to wage war except in so far as is necessary for the defense of the country.

Of course, I admit the Senator has a right to draw his own inferences from the testimony, just as I draw mine, but I assume that an adequate Army and Navy as prescribed in our Constitution mean adequate for the defense of American interests. However, I do not want to vote for and I shall not ever vote for any appropriation which I think is meant for an attack against other nations. I think the whole world recognizes that this Nation has no imperialistic design upon other nations, but that its sole idea, as I think its proper duty, is to have sufficient force in the present condition of the world to protect its own property and its own citizens in their rights.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am in accord with the statement of the Senator, that the United States should maintain an Army and Navy adequate for the defense of American interests. There may be differences, however, as to what constitute an "adequate" Army and an "adequate" Navy for such purposes. There are those in the United States who insist that we require an Army of at least 500,000 men, and there is strong support for the proposition that we should have the largest Navy in the world, in order to protect American interests. Indeed, there are some who insist that our Navy should be as large as the combined navies of Great Britain and Japan. They effect to see dangers to this Republic unless a Navy of that magnitude is maintained by the United States. I desire it to be distinctly understood that I am not arguing against the maintenance of an adequate Navy and an adequate Army. I do protest, however, against the effort to militarize and navalize this Republic. I protest against the mischievous propaganda abroad in the land that the interests of this Nation are imperiled by Japan and Great Britain, that war with one or both of these nations is imminent and that for the protection of American interests we must spend hundreds of millions if not billions annually for war purposes. This talk is midsummer madness. It is fraught with danger. It is an insult to the American people and an affront to the nations of the world. If these views should be crystallized into legislative action, it would inevitably result in deep-seated fear upon the part of other nations as to the purposes of this Republic, and in turn fear would be supplemented by resentment.

The Senator says that the world recognizes that we have no imperialistic designs. I hope that statement is true. I feel sure that the overwhelming majority of the American people have not designs against any other nation, nor do they desire a single foot of soil belonging to any nation under the sun. There are those in the world, however, who read American history somewhat differently from the Senator and myself, and who ascribe to this Republic ambitions for world power, if not for territorial gains. They refer to our conquest of Mexico and the vast territory which came to the United States under the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo; nor do they forget to point to the territory acquired under the Treaty of Paris after the Spanish-American War. We acquired the Philippine Archipelago, more than 10,000 miles from our shore, as a result of that war, and we lowered forever the flag of Spain that had floated for centuries over the island of Porto Rico. It is averred by these critics that Cuba is not a free nation, but an appendage to the United States.

Our beneficent purposes in China have been misinterpreted. Because European nations sought to dismember China our appearance in the Orient has been regarded by some as an effort to there secure a sphere of influence incompatible with the freedom and independence of China or to interfere with claims asserted by other nations. Our attitude under the Monroe doctrine has also brought us under suspicion, and some peoples have unfairly attributed to the United States a purpose to control the Latin-American Republics indirectly, if not directly. Of course, these criticisms and suspicions are unfounded. We desire the independence and freedom of all peoples. We welcome into the international arena the smallest nation and rejoice in all movements which emancipate those who have been in bondage and lead humanity to higher levels and to peace and prosperity.

Referring to the testimony of the admiral and the statement of the Senator as to the deductions to be drawn therefrom, I distinctly disavow any purpose to place an interpretation upon his words at variance with that which they clearly imply. But what I was particularly attempting to emphasize was that the admiral seemed to accept the theory that there were not moral forces in the world, nor would there be in the future, nor any other factors—educational, scientific, religious, or social—that would terminate war, but that the future promised unending sanguinary conflicts and that they were as inevitable as the movements of the tides or the coming of the dawn.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the admiral may have been right or wrong about that; I do not know; that is a question of opinion. I do know, however, or I believe, that there is not sufficient moral force in certain nations to keep them from breaking the peace and pursuing their own selfish interests.

I am led to make these observations simply by the fact that I do not think the admiral, whose name I do not remember, if it was mentioned—and I do not care to ask the Senator to mention him—had in his mind anything which justifies the Senator comparing him to the German, Bernhardi, who justified war for war's sake, and who claimed that it was necessary, as I read his writings, for the physical and moral upbuilding of the man. I admit that military and naval training have their athletic value and give a man a setting-up and that sort of thing, but I would not think that even the acquirement of those accomplishments would justify war, and neither do I think that the admiral would. Bernhardi apparently did, but I do not think the Senator ought to compare the testimony of this American admiral with that of the advocate of war in Germany, to whom he has referred.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] desires to interrupt me, and I will now yield to him for that purpose, but will reply to the Senator from Connecticut when the Senator from Missouri has concluded.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his courtesy. I was going to ask a question, which is not apropos of what he is just now saying; but a moment ago he spoke about the admiral apparently not thinking that there was any moral force in the world to restrain men from making war, and I thought the Senator had in mind that there was such a force. I admit its value among advanced peoples, but just what moral force does he think would restrain a Turk? What moral force would restrain the present Government of Russia and lead them to deal justly and equitably with the remainder of the world? While there are nations in the world that disregard moral questions or construe them according to their own interests, what defense is there except the good old defense of being able to take care of yourself? I do not know whether I can treat that as a question, but I have tried to convey an idea.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri is a practical man and a practical statesman, and I think he appreciates the limitations of human nature and the weaknesses of humanity, perhaps, as clearly as any man in public life. At the same time the Senator from Missouri, in my opinion, believes that humanity has a brighter day before it than the present or the past, and that the ethical forces in the world are more powerful than ever before, and are operating to bring about a higher civilization and a reign of justice and peace.

Mr. REED. I wish to inquire when that day is going to get here and what is going to happen to us while it is coming?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the practical attitude of my friend toward all questions always reasserts itself, I am afraid sometimes to the submergence of other influences which are controlling in the affairs of men. I am sure the last question which the Senator propounded was not intended by him to mean that humanity is forever condemned to pursue the pathway of travail and bloodshed over which it has traveled in the past and that there are not moral forces sufficiently powerful and enduring to lead mankind to a more perfect state.

My distinguished friend is a Christian and seeks to base his conduct as a neighbor, a citizen, and a statesman upon the precepts and the imperishable beatitudes of the greatest of all men. He so acts because he finds therein the sure foundation upon which individual character rests and civilization and progress abide. A sterile philosophy of negation has brought despair to human hearts and distraction to human endeavors. I submit that there is developing in the hearts of men a profounder faith in the mercies and providences and eternal purposes of an Infinite Father, and mankind are seeking with deeper humility and sublimer faith to know the will of God that they may learn of His ways and walk in His paths. They are discovering that there are fountains of celestial and spiritual force which convert the arid wastes of life into fruitful fields and introduce into the lives of individuals and nations higher ideals, more exalted purposes, nobler aspirations, as a result of which both men and nations are being cleansed of their selfish and cruel purposes and are striving to advance the dawn of a better day. This view is not the result of a baseless dream or a groundless faith, but it is becoming a vital force in the lives of the people and a powerful factor in determining their conduct and the conduct of nations. Of course, moral growth and spiritual development, as manifest in the social organism, proceed slowly, and humanity mounts with difficulty the heights crowned with celestial light. But God and nature work ceaselessly and without shadow of turning. The intellectual and moral progress of the world during the past two centuries is so startling as to seem unreal and, indeed, miraculous. As the forces of righteousness increase, reforms and progress move with greater celerity. Science, reason, religion, and God's revelations to humanity teach the same lesson, preach the same great truths, and prophesy the advent of the day of righteousness.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. REED. But that period, I take it, lies some distance in the future.

Mr. KING. I grant it.

Mr. REED. And I believe in preserving the life of the American Nation in the interval. I can accept the tenets of the Christian religion; but while I believe in God, I believe also in the rest of the maxim, to "keep your powder dry."

I recall the fact that 2,000 years ago there occurred the passion of the crucifixion, and what the Sermon on the Mount has not accomplished in 2,000 years is not going to be brought about by any idle dreams of the dreamers of to-day. The man who fails to recognize the practical side of this question dooms civilization to annihilation and postpones the glorious hour when the sun of the millennium is to kiss the horizon of time and its glory flood the world.

Mr. KING. The Senator has made an eloquent peroration to an eloquent speech.

Mr. REED. A very short speech.

Mr. KING. I will not say that its merit consists in its brevity; but, Mr. President, if I correctly interpret the Senator's position, I do not agree with all the implications arising from his premises. That civilization must be preserved is granted, but if the Senator means that the influences of Christianity have failed to ameliorate conditions in the world, I can not assent to his view. If the Senator means that to preserve civilization we must persist in military armaments, then I am not in full accord with his position. I am afraid when he speaks of "keeping our powder dry" his position will be construed as being in harmony with the attitude of the philosophers of force, who have sought to perpetuate a cruel and despotic militarism. Of course, we must meet the conditions of life in a sane and rational manner. The brutal, uneducated man may not be influenced and governed by the same forces and methods which control the intellectual and moral man. But this question reaches deeper than the statement of the Senator implies. The practical and utilitarian man fails if he does not reckon with the unseen but nevertheless vital currents which determine in the end the fate of men and nations. We may encase ourselves in armor made by human hands and deem ourselves invulnerable to the darts of the visible foe, but there will be an Achilles heel unprotected. All human defenses sooner or later fail. The genius of Napoleon could not save him at Waterloo, and Victor Hugo's prose poem of that mighty battle is impressive of the truth that there is a power greater than man's which shapes the end of all.

Mr. President, I believe in the universality of law, and that there is a moral law which is pervasive in the world and influences not only "advanced people," to use the Senator's expression, but it operates everywhere and in all ages. If we examine the curved line indicating humanity's rise, we sometimes are filled with gloomy forebodings because human progress appears so slow. And yet there is growth and progress and development, and the moral and intellectual accretions of the past become our glorious inheritance, and building upon what the past has accomplished, we can be assured that the future will increase in glory, in righteousness, and in those sweet and ennobling influences which come from God and lead to God. Because there is selfishness and wickedness in the world and peoples turn deaf ears to the inspiration of God, it should bring no discouragement to those who believe in the moral and spiritual values in life; but rather it should intensify their faith in the ultimate triumph of the truth and increase their devotion to the cause of righteousness and to the service of humanity. The débris gathering in the sluggish streams of life and impeding human progress, should be removed by those nations and peoples who carry the standard of justice. The arid wastes where wrong persists should be fructified by noble deeds and high and pure example. If the Turks and the Russians fail to keep step with the marching forces of progress, they must become the objects of solicitude and sincere regard. The conduct of the progressive nations must be purged of selfishness and vanity and pride, and a truly altruistic spirit must be exhibited by them. Such an example will add to the moral reservoir of the world and the water of righteousness will flow beyond the confines of that reservoir until all peoples will be baptized in its redemptive spirit.

I concede all the implications which may legitimately follow from the inquiry propounded by the able Senator from Missouri. I concede that the Turks have been guilty of atrocities which have horrified civilized peoples. I concede that Lenin and Trotski have established a military despotism in Russia and that under their cruel régime murder and rapine and cruelties which defy description have been perpetrated. I grant that appeals now made to the Otteman Turks and to the bolshevist commissars and rulers would make but slight impression. But with these concessions, Mr. President, it does not in my opinion justify all the deductions drawn by the Senator, nor successfully controvert the position for which I am contending. A proper regard for the spiritual and moral factors in the world does not require abstinence from those imperative requirements which self-protection demand. The highest conceptions of justice do not require submission to injustice, nor do they demand the eradication from the human heart of those high and manly attributes, the existence of which are contributing causes to man's moral advancement.

No one is demanding that this Nation shall not protect itself, or that it shall adopt a foreign policy pusillanimous and imbecile. But there is a broad distinction between a policy which visualizes the spirit of justice and adopts a course which is virtuous and manly, and one which proclaims the philosophy of force and seeks to build individual and national character as well as individual and national conduct upon a degrading materialism reflected in selfishness and aggression and devotion to military trappings and power.

Our country is not menaced. Its rightful authority in the world is not challenged. Its flag is respected throughout the world and its citizens are confronted by no nations who threaten their personal or property rights. There is a wide distinction between that attitude which adopts legitimate and proper means for self-protection and seeks to promote the peace of the world and that posture which creates apprehensions and fear throughout the world and leads by example and precept to crushing military preparations and war psychology.

The Senator asks what shall be done pending the arrival of that brighter day which will bring happiness and peace to the world. Mr. President, there is but one course open to the righteous man and to the nation seeking justice, and that is to do right and earnestly seek for the regeneration of others. We should, as Peter says, continue "looking for and hastening the coming of the day of God." I often think of those sublime words of Sir Oliver Lodge, who states that "by faith we may feel ourselves citizens of an eternal and glorious cosmogony of mutual help and cooperation, advancing from lowly stages to ever higher states of happy activity, world without end."

What we shall do in the meantime is answered by President Faunce, of Brown University: "The good man of the fifteenth century was Thomas à Kempis, whose 'Imitation of Christ' has no faintest allusion to any wrongs in this world to be righted. The good man of Bunyan's dream was one who thrust his fingers into his ears to stop the cry of wife and children while he started on his long flight through the world to the celestial gate. But the good man of our time is the one who turns back into the city of destruction and resolves never to leave it until he has transformed some portion of it at least into the enduring city of God."

This Nation is as a city set upon a hill, and its light can not be hid. It should be the leader in every movement conducing to man's advancement. Unselfishly it should strive for world peace and for the spread of those civilizing forces which so copiously abound in life. Our example should be for peace, not war, for confidence and amity, and not suspicion and distrust. We should realize that we are trustees under God, and that we must administer the trust in the interest of humanity. And this high commission will not destroy nationality or love of country or devotion to the flag. The highest love of family increases the capacity of man for service to his country, and the highest patriotism is compatible with love of all peoples. We are heirs of the riches of the past and hold in trust this great patrimony which must not only be preserved but transmitted to those who follow. We in America will add to this inheritance by greater service and higher devotion to the cause of humanity. The Neolithic Age possessed neolithic men, but humanity has traveled far since then.

The Senator speaks of Russia. Mr. President, I have heretofore expressed my views of the Russian people. I regard the Slav race as one of the powerful races in the world. The future has in store rich gifts for it. The Russian people will emerge from the tragic conditions which now oppress them and meet the responsibilities which rest upon progressive Christian peoples. No race will respond more readily to ethical and spiritual influences than the Slavs. Bolshevism is an ugly parasite which will soon be cast off, and the Russian people, strong and virile, emancipated from the degrading conditions of the present, will take their place by the side of this Republic and other progressive nations and aid in the support of the standard of justice under which humanity will march into broader fields and wider experiences. These bloody chapters will be closed. The Russian people will write a new page in the great volume of Russia's national and international life.

And shall it be said that progress and moral advancement are denied to the Turks? True, their record is dark and sordid, but they possess splendid qualities and have exhibited traits of character calling for the admiration of their Christian associates. It may not be inappropriate to suggest that the dealings of Christian peoples with the Turks have not always been honorable or exemplary. Christian nations have intrigued with them and taught them intrigues. Christian statesmen have practiced subtleties and deceits in their international relations with Turkey. I make no apologies for the Turkish nation and denounce the inhuman deeds which have characterized its national life. The Great War has brought new conditions to the Turks and they will, I believe, prove amenable to the civilizing agencies operating throughout the world.

Reforms are not wrought in a day or in a generation. Progress is not an exotic plant, but it is nevertheless an enduring one. We conquer evils and grow stronger by the victories gained. Emerson refers to the legend among the Hawaiian people who believe that the spirit of the vanquished foe takes possession of the victor, strengthening him for future contests. And so individuals and nations rise upon the "stepping stones of their dead selves to higher things." "Forward" is nature's watchword. It is God's command. And to go forward in the true sense means progress in the vital and enduring phases of life.

Physical power and martial greatness do not promise victory or enduring success. It is the moral, the spiritual, the divine "imponderables" which survive and which are the vital factors determining man's progress. The bloody pages of the past and the revolting records of humanity do not disturb my faith in the future. I have an abiding faith in the moral forces of the universe and affirm that they are operating in the hearts of men, in the social and political organisms under which we live, and these forces extending with the years will so powerfully influence the lives of men that ultimately the dreams and prophesies of prophets and poets and sages will be realized. The day of peace will dawn and righteousness will cover the earth as the waters cover the mighty deep.

But I do not wish, in anything that I have said, to be understood as advocating the destruction of our Navy. While I am pleading for world peace and for our Nation to lead the way for international amity and fellowship, I am not advocating that we make no military or naval preparations. Indeed, in the report which I submitted a few days ago I recommended the completion of six great battleships now in course of construction. I also recommended the construction of a battle cruiser, the cost of which will be approximately $50,000,000, and when completed will be the most powerful ship that will ride the waters of the deep. Later in the debate I may discuss the present status of our Navy and the kind of a Navy which we should maintain. So, Mr. President, if the Senator is proceeding upon the assumption that I am opposed to a Navy of adequate proportions for national defense, he misconceives my position. I should welcome an agreement between the nations for the restriction of naval and military armaments and regret that the United States has thus far failed to cooperate with the great powers for the purpose of limiting armaments and hastening world peace. But I have felt that if we should announce a militaristic policy, following our protestations of devotion to world peace, our sincerity would be questioned by other nations and our course would be provocative of increased military and naval preparations upon their part. I have believed and still believe that our Nation occupies a position in the world where its example will be controlling among the nations. If we declare for peace and for a limitation of armaments; if we, in good faith, associate with the nations to establish an international court, and to reduce, if not abolish, naval and military armaments, and to promote international peace and amity, it will restore hope to a distracted world and bring joy and, indeed, gratitude to millions who are now struggling beneath burdens which are almost beyond human endurance. I believe that we can reclaim our lost leadership, and that all nations will joyfully follow our footsteps.

When interrupted by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Connecticut, I was discussing what I conceived to be the materialistic attitude of one of the leading admirals of our Navy. I called attention to his statement that to talk of disarmament was wrong and would produce national retrogression. The Senator from Connecticut has indicated that I linked the admiral with Bernhardi. I read the statement of the admiral and called attention to the statement made by the Senator from Montana to the effect that the sentiments expressed by the admiral "would command a very able advocate in Bernhardi." I agree with the Senator from Montana that the position of the admiral was precisely the one assumed by Bernhardi and Neitsche and other German writers who lead the German people from the paths of peace to the heights of militarism, and from which they set out to dominate and control the world.

While I am referring to the testimony of the admiral, let me proceed a little further and call attention to other statements made by him at the same time.

The question was then asked:

So you don't look forward then to any decrease whatever in the burdens of the peoples of the world of maintaining these great armaments; you feel that those have got to be borne and they have got to be increased continuously; you do not look for any relief whatever in that direction?

In reply to that question the admiral made this statement:

I will put it this way—I do not like to appear as a prophet, but will say that according to history that is the way it has always been. If there is anything to change the current of history, then, of course, that will have a bearing.

Then he said that he did not believe that a reduction of armaments was possible, even "though nations should enter into agreements to that effect, because the agreement would not last very long." Then he added that it might last 20 years.

The following question was then propounded to the admiral:

If wars have existed from the dawn of history while governments have been armed, don't you think if they fail to arm, or if they reduce their armaments, or enter into an agreement for disarmament, that it might result in a cessation of war?

This reply was made:

No; I am absolutely sure, as far as I can be sure of anything in the future, and I am only basing it upon 5,000 years of history, and that is a good deal.

Then these questions were asked:

Q. In short you find no chances to escape from the burden of competitive armament?—A. I would like to see the burden made as light as possible, Senator, but I do not see on looking at it in the light of history, and the way in which we are going now; competition among the people and the tendency of overseas trade—there is hope for cessation of war.

Q. If you think that an agreement for the reduction of armaments would be entirely ineffective, you must equally agree that an agreement for the purpose of not increasing armaments—that is, holding them stable—would be equally ineffective. Am I right?—A. I am afraid it would be ineffective.

Q. So that the necessary conclusion at which we must arrive is that there is no possible escape from the burden of competitive armaments, and you can see no relief whatever in any line from the rivalry in which we are now engaged.—A. I am sorry to say it, but I think so.

Q. And that would mean that we have to continue our naval and military burdens indefinitely?—A. I think so.

Mr. President, I do not recall ever having read, in such bold and striking language, the proposition, hideous and ugly in its nakedness, that there is no relief from the burdens of naval and military armaments which now press upon the world, and under which humanity has struggled during the thousands of years of recorded history. I repudiate that doctrine. If I believed, as the admiral has expressed himself, I would sympathize somewhat with Huxley, when he said that if social and economic conditions were to continue unchanged he would hail, as a consummation devoutly to be wished, the advent of some friendly comet that would hurl this little world of ours into destruction.

The admiral has stated, Mr. President, that there is to be no "cessation of war"; there will be no relief from the burdens of war; that we are to tread the winepress of agony and bloodshed and sorrow to the end of time, using the genius with which we may be inspired to devise more powerful weapons for the destruction of humanity. We are not to build for the spiritual and moral development of humanity, but we are to dedicate ourselves to the policies of war, and preparations for war, for the purpose of continuing war.

Of course, it will be urged that preparations for war do not mean war or a continuance of war. Yet, Mr. President, whenever nations have armed, and have followed a policy of militarism, they have ultimately engaged in war. The argument which the able Senator from Missouri made is substantially the argument which is made by those who are the most earnest devotees of strong armies and big navies.

I have referred to the philosophy of force which led to the Great War. Mommsen, the historian, predicted what the result of such philosophy would be. He stated:

That there should be a care lest in this country, which has at once the power in arms and power in intelligence, the intelligence should vanish and nothing but the pure military state should remain.

It has been claimed by some that Admiral Mahan strengthened the hands of the disciples of militarism. Without arguing that matter I desire to call attention to a few sentences from his work. He states that "the armaments of the European States now are not so much for protection against conquest as to secure to themselves the utmost possible share of the unexploited or imperfectly exploited regions of the world—the outlying markets or storehouses of raw material, which, under national control, shall minister to national emoluments." This is a defense of his thesis that the causes of war are economic and material, and is in contrast with his statement of the purpose of armament in his article entitled "The folly of The Hague," where he contends that armament is the beneficent power which protects the quiet and the weak. These are his words:

> Armament is the organization and consecration of force as a factor in the maintenance of justice, order, and peace. It is the highest expression of that element in civilization—force—which has created and now upholds society, giving efficacy to the pronouncements of law, whether by the legislature or in the courts. Organized force, alone, enables the quiet and the weak to go about their business and to sleep securely, safe from the assaults of violence without or within.

It is believed that the author refers to police force in his defense of armament as the consecration of force in the maintenance of justice, order, and peace. Armament, however, goes beyond that field and is devoted usually to defense and attack.

The advocates of militarism have supported their views by appeals to biology as well as sociology. They have mouthed the words "survival of the fittest" and "natural selection," and have sought to apply to political institutions and to governments the theory that the strong nations alone should survive and that all governmental policies should be directed in conformity to that view and that big armies and strong navies were essential to achieve the desired ends. During the war we heard no defense of the German philosophy of force and no claim that the alleged theories of biological development should find complete duplication in social and political activities, but there now seems to be a recrudescence of teachings we then condemned and policies which met with reprobation, and efforts are being made by some to apply the principles of true philosophy and the expositions of Darwin and other biologists to the conduct of nations. These efforts are insidiously made and find support in some circles. I protest against the perversion of the philosophy of Darwin and of other great biologists and sociologists to the support of a brutal materialistic creed and a destructive militaristic policy.

The true Darwinian theory is that social progress depends not upon "force and collective homicide, but upon institutions and ideas." Darwin's position is that the most noble attribute of man is the moral sense of conscience. While he attributes this as a development from the social instincts, there are others who postulate a divine manifestation. Darwin's thesis is that the social instincts are the necessary and sufficient conditions for the evolution of a moral sense. The view of many Christian theologians accounts for the moral sense as a direct manifestation of the mercy and power and goodness of an everlasting Father. There is a practical scientific view which contemplates the extension of those social instincts and sympathies highly developed until they become the determining fountains of human conduct and will ultimately culminate in a federation of the world nations and peoples bound by the moral law. Darwin sought to find the cause of civilization's advance "in the social habits of man in cooperation and mutual aid for the struggle against the physical universe and in the moral law." Indeed, both Darwin and Wallace believed that the chief cause of social progress and human evolution is to be found in ethical factors. Even Huxley insists that social progress means a "checking of the cosmic processes and the substitution of the ethical processes," which means in the end the survival of those who are ethically the best. Huxley further states that the purpose of that which is "ethically best—that which we call goodness or virtue—involves a course of conduct which in all respects is opposed to that which leads to success in the cosmic struggle for existence." He insists that in place of "ruthless self-assertion" there must be self-restraint; instead of the destruction of competitors, that there shall be respect and help, and that its influence shall be directed rather to fitting as "many as possible to survive," instead of in behalf of the "survival of the fittest." The gladiatorial theory of existence is repudiated and the laws of moral precepts directed toward curbing the cosmic process and reminding individuals of their duties to the community. And, finally, Mr. Huxley says: "Let us understand once for all that the ethical progress of society depends not upon imitating the cosmic processes, still less in running away from it, but in combating it."

Both Wallace and Huxley emphasize the break between the cosmic processes of human society and attempt to bridge the gap between the ethical man and the natural man, and the former seems to feel "the need of deux deus ex machina" to solve the problem. But Darwin, "with no discontinuity finds the development in the moral law as a part of the great sweep of the cosmic principle," and this moral law he regards as the instrumentality which will bring human society toward a perfected state.

In analyzing the causes why one nation rises and makes progress more rapidly than others, he assigns as important reasons "the number of the men endowed with high intellectual and moral faculties as well as their stand of excellence."

There are some who support the position of Mr. Kidd as defined in his work, Social Evolution. He contends that there is antagonism between a large class of individual conduct and the interest of the social organism, and demands the submergence of individual interest in the interest of the mass. He finds no rational sanction for such action, and accordingly postulates an ultrarational sanction which he conceives to be the basis of religious belief. I submit that his hypothesis that there is antagonism between the individual and society is not sound. The highest interest of the individual finds expression in the highest development and welfare of the social organism itself.

Lord Bryce, in an address on April 3, 1913, as president of the International Congress of Historical Studies, emphasizes, in principle at least, Kant's theory of "universal history as the growth of a world community," reconciling the freedom of individuals and of individual States and the accomplishments for the common aim of mankind as a whole. The developments of science have had a binding influence upon peoples and nations and have brought into apposition, if not integration, peoples differing ethnically and between whom in the past strong antipathies have existed. Mr. Bryce states:

> The world is becoming one in an altogether new sense. * * * More than four centuries ago the discovery of America marked the first step in the process by which the European races have now gained dominion over nearly the whole earth. * * * As the earth has been narrowed through the new forces science has placed at our disposal * * * the movements of politics, of economics, and of thought in each of its regions become more closely interwoven. * * * Whatever happens in any part of the globe has now a significance for every other part. World history is tending to become one history. * * * The widening of the field is also due to a larger conception of history, which (through the aid of archæology) now enables us faintly to discern the outlines of a process of slow and sometimes interrupted development of mankind in the Old World during a period each one of the divisions of which is larger than all the time that has elapsed since our first historical records begin.

Humanity has grown in knowledge, in power, in social unity, and in effective organization, all of which tend to the acceleration of progress and a higher standard of civilization. We are learning the art of living together in close relation, which, as Henry George says, constitutes civilization, and nations are being drawn toward each other under compulsions not of force but of knowledge and social unity. Gregariousness does not stop with boundary lines, and so peoples of different nations and, indeed, of different races are coming together in the interest of peace and justice as well as for the promotion of self-interest.

I referred to science as a unifying and civilizing force. The demonstration of this thesis is unnecessary, because it is obvious to all. And the language of the poet is addressed to humanity. Knowledge is a solvent, and removes antipathies and racial prejudices and brings convincing proof of the solidarity of the human race and of the truth that the interest of one is the interest of all. When Darwin speaks all nations give ear, and the voice of preacher or prophet or teacher, no matter the country from which it comes, rings around the world, and the speaker becomes a world citizen.

Cosmopolitanism results from knowledge, and a corroding selfishness yields when closer contacts result between individuals, communities, and nations. It was Mazzini who said: "Thank God, the philosophy of Cain has passed out of this world forever. We are our brother's keepers." No longer do civilized people close their eyes to world conditions, and the cry of distress in the remotest part of the world finds a ready response. There is an effort to apply in international affairs and relations the principle which John Hay denominated as "the golden rule and the open door." Men everywhere are beginning to realize that they are trustees and their trust is a sacred and divine one. They are heirs of the riches of the past, but hold in trust this great patrimony which must not only be preserved but enlarged and transmitted to those who follow, beautified and augmented by service.

This is the age of science and literature and art, of religion and morals, and it is preserving the moral man. As humanity has developed, the sense of clan division has yielded to that of the guild, to the sense of class, and finally to that of national self-conscience, and the latter condition has been modified by softening influences and spiritual concepts so that nations now feel that they are a part of a great body of humanity and that bonds of internationalism encircle the peoples of all lands. The conglomeration of tribal forms yielded to national organizations through gradual development, and there is developed a unity based on pure culture. The road before us is still long and it is beset by dangers which imperil the advancing hosts throughout the world, but there are always those who see the summit above gilded by the light of God, and with courage they climb the dangerous and rugged heights, while below the masses, often with indifference, watch the retreating forms who seek to lift humanity to higher levels. But the call of these inspired ones gives courage to those behind, and so humanity marches ceaselessly forward.

Neither individual nor nation has reached or will reach perfection. There will be struggles and problems which will develop character and produce higher standards of moral excellence. Some of Rodin's immortal productions depict figures puissant and mighty emerging from the rough-hewn marble blocks. So humanity, still bound to the past but growing more beautiful as the years go by, is seen emerging from old conditions and assuming nobler proportions and possessing increasing moral and spiritual power.

Sophocles states that man with his boundless skill "moves on; sometimes evil and then again to good." He perceives the collective power of humanity and the combining forces of knowledge and social unity. Shelley stressed the power of collective human thought not only in penetrating the secrets of the universe, but in conquering evils and effectuating world fellowship.

It was Whittier who perceived the purposes of God for humanity's welfare in the development of electricity, and wrote these beautiful words:

> Weave on sweet shuttle of the world,
> Beneath the sea so far
> The bridal robe of earth's accord
> The funeral shroud of war.

It was Emerson who said: The arch-abolitionist older than John Brown, and older than the Shenandoah mountains, is Love, whose other name is Justice, which was before Alfred, before Lycurgus, before slavery, and will be after it.

And Kant declared that he adored two wonders—the stars above and the moral law within. Men are beginning to appreciate more and more that there is "an increasing purpose" running through the ages, and they are seeking to learn that purpose and to submit to those laws of union which are operative in the material as well as in the moral world.

Mr. President, the purpose of life is service and the canons of conduct prescribed in the teachings of Christ are based upon a true philosophy. If individual or nation would advance and achieve true happiness, they will find the royal road in service and sacrifice and loyal devotion to others. The compensations that flow from such conduct are beyond computation. Not only material compensation follows for their enrichment, but the moral power which becomes their portion brings to them enduring and eternal life. The lessons of the greatest teachers revolve around this great truth. The beatitudes are not concerned about conquest and power or self-aggrandizement or national authority. They glorify conduct guided by charity and mercy and purity. When we learn that there is an infinite force and power, perhaps indefinable, underlying human conduct and all the things of life, which operate ceaselessly for the triumph of those principles of justice, love, and mercy and righteousness which the utilitarian and the cynic often deny, life will take on a higher meaning and there will dawn that brighter day of which I spoke in answer to the suggestions of the Senator from Missouri. And this view is not Utopian or visionary, but it is founded upon the realest conception of life and upon the soundest experiences of individuals and nations. But speaking of Utopia, I am reminded of a statement by an English writer who came to a tragic end. He said: "A map of the world that does not include Utopia is not worth even glancing at, for it leaves out the one country at which humanity is always landing. And when humanity lands there, it looks out, and, seeing a better country, sets sail. Progress is the realization of Utopias."

Even Ibsen, whose pessimism seems to many a dominant note in his works, declared that "what is wanted is a revolution of the spirit of man"; and later he said: "I am also an optimist, for I firmly believe in the power of those ideals to propagate and develop."

I recall having read an address by W. W. Campbell of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, delivered in 1915. He there stated: "That which is purely practical, containing no element of idealism, may sustain existence and to that extent be valuable, but it does not civilize. I believe it is the idealism of pure knowledge, the idealism in applied knowledge, the idealism in industry and commerce, the idealism in literature and art, the idealism in personal religion, which leavens the life of the world and pushes forward the boundaries of civilization."

I am contending for no policy that would weaken nationalism or create an international government. I am seeking only to emphasize the fact that we must have ideals and appreciate the interdependence of States and nations, and earnestly strive for those international bonds of union and fellowship that will tend to the abolition of war and the devotion of the energies of the peoples everywhere to the arts of peace and genuine and enduring progress. I am complaining of the persistent efforts of some to perpetuate the war spirit and to sow the seeds of discord between this Nation and other nations.

Let me inquire, Mr. President, whether, since the armistice, our example has been such as to be promotive of world peace. We sent our boys across the seas to defend civilization and, if possible, to end wars. Mothers with profound sorrow in their hearts gave their sons, many of whom made sacrifice of their lives upon the blood-stained fields of Europe, because they believed that their blood would rouse throughout the world a new spirit for liberty, for justice, and for peace; and that following the World War there would be a world baptism which would endow the nations with higher purposes and divine inspiration. Two years have passed since the armistice and it is felt by some that we have not realized all for which we struggled and are not guided by that spiritual light to which our sacrifices entitle us. Is there a reversion to the old spirit? Are the moral values which we appraised to be lost? Is there a manifestation of atavism resurgent with us and in the world? I will not believe, Mr. President, that the moral victories gained will be lost. Undoubtedly there will be here and there a recrudescence of the old philosophy of force and the spirit of hate and national antipathies; but that very fact implies an obligation upon those who believe in the moral and spiritual attributes of the universe and in the controlling power of God, to greater service and higher devotion to the social and moral welfare of the world.

But we are told that Great Britain has a powerful navy and that Japan is strengthening her naval power, and therefore we must maintain the greatest Navy in the world. I regret that we did not become a member of the League of Nations, so that in cooperation with those nations and other members of the league a program for disarmament could have been adopted. Such a course would have removed suspicion and jealousies which are productive of war, relieve the people from pressing burdens of taxation, and hasten the advent of international peace. In my opinion, if the United States had joined the league and had adopted, in connection with the league, a policy for disarmament as therein provided, there would have been reflected in the national conduct of every nation in the world the spirit of that policy and we would not be called upon to follow a naval program which will impose upon the United States a burden of at least $1,500,000,000 within the next two or three years, to be followed by annual expenditures of approximately $500,000,000 for the maintenance of the Navy and needed naval developments.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt his very able speech?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. There were recently presented to the American people two alternatives, to wit, to enter the League of Nations and assist other nations in preserving the peace and bringing about reduction in naval and military armament or to reject the League of Nations and continue to protect our possessions and our coasts by our own Navy, as we have done in the past. It would seem that the American people having decided not to avail themselves of the opportunity for such armament reduction as the league would have afforded, and having decided by a majority that can not be gainsaid to preserve the peace of their own country by their own strong arm, that as sensible and patriotic men we must protect ourselves as we have done in the past, since we are not in the congress of nations. I wish to have the Senator's view on that point. Shall we say we decline to go into the League of Nations, and then require our citizens, their lives and property, to be exposed to those brutal and ferocious assaults that all wise statesmen know frequently imperil civilization? Innocence alone in national life is not a sufficient guaranty of safety. Serbia, Belgium, and France learned that.

We sinned away our day of grace when we refused to join other nations in reducing armament. What is left to us but to have a Navy to protect our 11,000 miles of seacoasts, our far-flung islands of the Pacific, our Alaskan possessions, our newly acquired islands in the West Indies, our Panama Canal, the key of our commerce in two oceans? We must approach the situation in a practical way. We are not to be in the League of Nations; ergo, we must have a Navy.

It was sea power that saved Rome from Greece; sea power saved Greece from Persia; sea power gave the Phœnicians command of the ancient maritime world; sea power built up the commercial empire of Carthage; it made Athens ruler of vast territories and made Rome empress of the earth. Sea power once gave the Moslem domination from Constantinople to Cordova. When Spain had great sea power she dominated Christendom and brought home the dazzling riches of Mexico and Peru, and her decline began when storms and British seamanship wrecked her great armada. The sea power of France turned the scales in our favor in our American Revolution. In the War between the States here it was the sea power of the North which enabled her to fling a line of 1,200 ships around the Confederate coasts and finally to overwhelm the Confederacy. In the World War, notwithstanding the superb valor of those who fought so bravely on land, it was sea power that transported the American soldier to Europe.

Call the roll of all the nations that have risen in the past; they rose when they had sea power. Call the roll of those nations that now are a schoolboy's tale and whose temples and palaces are inhabited by bats and owls; they fell when they permitted their sea power to weaken.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Arizona always illuminates by his generalizations and incisive statements and remarks——

Mr. ASHURST. Before the Senator proceeds, permit me to thank him for the opportunity granted by him to make this statement.

Mr. KING. I was about to say that the Senator from Arizona illuminates subjects discussed by Senators and makes contributions to matters under consideration by the Senate. With part of his argument I agree, but many of the premises which he assumes I deny; nor do I follow all the deductions which he is pleased to make from his assumed premises. It might be stated in passing that his arguments are similar to those which justify great military and naval armaments. Most nations when they build stupendous navies or maintain large armies profess the highest altruism. They contend that they are merely "insurers of peace" and have no aggressive purpose or imperialistic design. Napoleon's prodigious military operations were always for peace and defense.

It is impossible in the time at my disposal to review the historic examples that support what I have stated and negative many of the statements made and deductions drawn by the Senator from Arizona. But first let me reply to the statement made by the Senator that the people at the last election decided against entering the League of Nations or against the policy of assisting nations to preserve the peace and bring about a reduction in naval and military armaments. On the 28th of January of this year I discussed the reasons which contributed to the Democratic defeat and analyzed the position now taken by the Senator from Arizona. I then contended that the American people had not decided against the league or against an international agreement for the reduction of armaments and for the purpose of securing the material benefits to be derived from an association or League of Nations. I called attention to the fact that there were many factors entering into the contest which were more determinative of the results than the question of an international association. I referred to the fact that the Republican platform, as well as the statements of the Republican candidate for the Presidency, were construed by the overwhelming majority of the American people as being favorable to an agreement between the United States and the members of the League of Nations for the establishment of an international court and securing a reduction of armaments and in order that there might be closer and more friendly relations between all nations of the earth. Indeed, it was stated by ex-President Taft and Mr. Hoover and leading Republicans that only by the election of Senator Harding could the United States be brought into the League of Nations. The American people desired world peace and believed in the efficacy of the League of Nations to bring about that result. Many desired reservations to be attached to our ratification of the covenant of the league. Still others believed that no modification in the provisions should be made. But those who opposed any sort of an agreement between the United States and the other nations of the world to secure world peace and a limitation of armaments and to create international tribunals and organizations to settle international controversies and execute international obligations, were insignificant in numbers and powerless to secure the adoption of their views.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Utah be kind enough to allow me to inject another sentence into my interruption? A Senator near me has suggested that in our War of 1812 we won but few battles on land except the great battle which Andrew Jackson won at New Orleans. It was the sea power that brought victory to the United States in that war. My friend, the Senator from Utah, who has enriched the annals of the Senate this afternoon and yesterday afternoon with his splendid speeches, overlooks the fact that national safety may lie in sea power; and that while militarism, indeed, overthrows the liberties of the people, there is not a line in the histories asserting that naval power overthrows the liberties of the people. It sustains those liberties. Naval power is a moving, pulsing line of leviathans that protects and defends a country the while the civilians within that line pursue the arts of peace.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when interrupted in order that the Senator might make an addendum to his speech I was referring to his interpretation of the results of the last election. I have no doubt, Mr. President, that many who supported Senator Harding approved of the policies of President Wilson but believed that as the Senate was constituted it would be impossible to secure the ratification of the Versailles treaty in its present form, and they felt that Republican success would permit a modification of the treaty, not important enough to defeat its purpose, and that with such modifications the United States would enter the League of Nations. In the campaign the most reactionary Republicans did not oppose an agreement between the United States and other nations for disarmament and in the interest of world peace.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I recall seeing in the newspapers what purported to be a quotation from the lips of the distinguished governor of Massachusetts, who is soon to adorn the Presiding Officer's chair in this body, to the effect that in his judgment the American people had not in the last election repudiated the League of Nations. There are many of that opinion, especially in view of much of the talk that was had by the Republican candidate for President, and those who entertain that opinion, of course, agree somewhat with the view expressed by the Senator and have a right to look forward to something in the way of a substitute for armament, under the coming administration, to observe the world peace.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator from Delaware for his contribution to the discussion.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KING. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I have not any doubt there are some people who do not know this case has been tried and a verdict rendered and judgment entered. I have never yet seen a man convicted in court who did not think the jury was misled and who did not entertain a faint hope of success on another trial. The man who can not be convinced by a 7,000,000 verdict may have to be convinced by some more verdicts of that kind. Speaking as a Democrat I do not desire to go to trial again on the issue on which we went to trial this last time. It is an uncomfortable majority, not to say merely a decided one.

I do not care what any one man says in regard to it, I remember that the gentleman referred to made some statements during the campaign which indicated he was out of line with the candidate for President. I also remember that it created considerable consternation in the Republican camp. After the bosses got through dealing with the question, I did not hear any more such utterances from that distinguished gentleman until after the votes were counted. It may now be again safe for him to talk.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not fully agree with my friend the Senator from Missouri that the case has gone to judgment and that there has been a decision opposed to the principles and spirit of the covenant of the League of Nations. It may be that an issue was tried and a verdict rendered, but I still insist that the American people by their vote, notwithstanding the decisive majority in favor of the Republican candidates, did not decree that there should be no arrangement or agreement or understanding, whatever it may be denominated, between the United States and other nations for the purpose of limiting armaments, military and naval, and for the purpose of establishing international tribunals to which appeals might be made for the settlement of controversies arising among nations. It is my deliberate judgment that a majority of the American people to-day are anxious for the peace of the world; they desire no national isolation; they realize that this Republic is and must continue to be the dominant force and power for good in the world and that its influence for domestic peace and prosperity and for world peace and progress can best be exerted through genuine and hearty cooperation between it and the other nations of the world.

In my opinion the American people would welcome an agreement between this Nation and the members of the League of Nations having for its object the carrying out of the greater part of the provisions of the league and of the Versailles treaty. They realize that our peace and prosperity are inseparably connected with the peace and prosperity of other nations, and they will demand, in my judgment, a liberal progressive foreign policy which will place the United States in the vanguard of progress and in harmonious relations, the result of agreements and clearly defined and specified cooperative efforts, with all important nations of the world. This means no supergovernment nor a remission of our sovereignty or the establishment of a disintegrating internationalism.

I recall the statement of the Vice President elect to which the Senator from Delaware has just referred, and it confirms the statement which I was making that in the campaign leading Republicans proclaimed their devotion to the spirit and principles of the league and to the importance of an agreement for world peace between the allied nations and other peoples.

Returning to the statement made by the Senator from Arizona. The Republicans conducted a most subtle and intriguing campaign. In most parts of the United States the campaign was conducted upon the theory that the Democrats sought to create a supernation, whereas the Republicans desired all the benefits of arbitration, conciliation, and international union, including disarmament, but would preserve unimpaired the national sovereignty and power of the United States. In other words, they advocated a league of nations under which would be secured substantially the benefits and advantages which would admittedly flow from the League of Nations.

In those sections, and they were few, in which there was hostility to any international agreement, the views of the distinguished Senators from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and California [Mr. JOHNSON] were emphasized. In those States, in which there were a large number of American citizens of Irish descent, frenzied appeals were made to them to support the Republican Party because it would aid in the liberation of Ireland from British control and would present a frowning front to Great Britain's alleged imperialistic ambitions. Racial prejudices and antipathies were played upon and every possible effort made to create political groups along racial and ethnic lines. American interests and American questions were obscured in the unfair and sinister appeals to race prejudice and antipathies. The Italians were urged to support the Republican ticket because of the alleged opposition of President Wilson to the legitimate aspirations of the Italian people. Nothing was said about the broad sympathies of President Wilson for Italy and the gratitude felt by the American people for the great contributions of Italy to the cause of civilization. Nothing was said of the splendid work by President Wilson at the peace conference in behalf of Italy. And the most wicked and unfair appeals were made to American citizens of German ancestry. The claim was made that if the Republicans triumphed this Nation not only would not enter the League of Nations but would destroy the league and rewrite the treaty of Versailles. Germany was to be relieved of the indemnities and conditions provided in the Versailles treaty, and the United States was to enter into a union or an alliance with Germany under which the two nations would become the dominating force in the world. Every possible effort was made to create prejudices against Great Britain and Japan and to lead the minds of the people from the vital and imperative questions before them for determination.

Mr. President, there was no trial. It was a mistrial. There has been no judgment rendered upon the vital and living questions now before the American people. I repeat that the great majority of the American people are not the disciples of force and militarism; nor are they for a brutal and aggressive navalism or a narrow, provincial, isolated international policy. They know that this Nation is ordained of God to be a light in the world and to wear in these dark hours and in the coming years the scepter of moral and spiritual leadership in all the world.

The Senator from Arizona, as I interpreted his position, insists that the electors of this Republic not only decided against the League of Nations but against any effort to secure world disarmament. I am sorry the Senator has left, because I want to reply to this statement.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Utah would not do the Senator from Arizona an injustice. The Senator from Arizona did not leave, but is still in the Chamber.

Mr. KING. I apologize. I did not observe the Senator. I discover, however, that he is temporarily seated upon the Republican side.

I repeat, Mr. President, that in my opinion the American people, if a referendum were now taken, would record their verdict in favor of a limitation of armaments. They are opposed to this Nation becoming a military power or a naval power and of reflecting the imperialistic ambitions that have found expression in Germany and in other aggressive nations. I deny that the American people decided against a limitation of armament or in opposition to efforts to secure world disarmament. Republican Senators within the past 24 hours have voted in this Chamber for negotiations to secure a limitation in war preparations. Why? Because they appreciate the fact that the American people and the people of the world desire peace and full opportunity to return unmolested and unafraid to the toils and labors and responsibilities which their citizenship and their places in the world devolve upon them. The Senator from Arizona, as I understand him, takes the position that the election constituted a mandate that we should arm to the teeth and have the biggest navy in the world.

Mr. ASHURST rose.

Mr. KING. If I do not interpret the Senator aright, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I know the Senator is incapable of willfully misrepresenting my attitude, and I am anxious that if he quotes my remarks or deigns to pay any attention to them he shall do so from the viewpoint held by me. It is useless to try to enumerate the various reasons assigned for defeat last November, but I believe that all candid men, as the Senator from Utah is candid, will agree that the disasters we met came to us, in large measure, by reason of the covenant of the League of Nations; and I was a Senator who voted for the covenant of the league, and have no apologies to make for that vote. The defeat which came to the Democratic Party in my State was because of the covenant of the League of Nations, and I believe that is true as to the States of New York and Ohio, and I will tell you why.

There was no flaw in the record of the Democratic Party, so far as its internal policies were concerned. No party ever did more utilitarian work. No party in the history of our country ever did more to bring zest, grace, and usefulness into the common life of our people than did Woodrow Wilson, and I believe that those who are capable of correctly interpreting events will ultimately say that it was the covenant of the League of Nations that hurled the Democratic Party to defeat.

I am neither a militarist nor a jingoist—I simply say that having rejected the covenant of the League of Nations, it seems to me we are bound to carry out the naval policy which we adopted in 1916. A Democratic Congress adopted the policy of 1916, and a Democratic President approved it, and Congress went so far as to do the unusual thing of incorporating in the naval appropriation bill arguments therein—a rare thing in American legislative annals. And now, since we are not to enter the League of Nations, it seems to me we must carry out our naval policy which we heretofore adopted, and it calls for such war craft as are necessary to a modern Navy.

No one deplores more than I the necessity for naval expenditures. No one deplores more than I the necessity for military expenditures, but such expenditures are necessary in spite of my deploring.

Evil in this world sometimes must be conquered by superior force, and evil powers that assail civilization must be overthrown either by one forward-looking nation acting alone or by the various nations acting together. Surely he could be convicted of political strabismus who would say now, in the face of the last election, that the American people desire to enter the League of Nations. Having rejected the League of Nations, I fail to perceive what we can do other than to carry out the naval policy we adopted in 1916.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not think I misapprehended the position of my friend, and if I misstated it, of course I apologize to him.

The Senator, as I understand, takes the view that we must carry out a naval policy which was devised and recommended, not in 1916, as the Senator says, but in 1915; and, to recur to what he said a moment ago, I interpret his remarks as meaning that the election was a mandate that we should pursue the same national and international policy in the future as that which guided us prior to our entrance into the Great War. In other words, his position is that the war has taught us nothing; that we are to walk in the same pathway now and in the future as in the past; we are to employ the same weapons, possess the same ambitions, be guided by the same aspirations, and be governed by the same military policies as before. We are to take up the threads of our national and individual life at the same point where we stood when we were called to war in April, 1917; we must go back, turn the leaves of the record of years of sacrifice and service, and enter upon the same plans that were drawn in prewar times, regardless of the lessons and experience of the war.

Mr. ASHURST. What would the Senator have us do, since we are not in the league?

Mr. KING. That is a pertinent question, one which can not be answered in a word. I should like to first reply to other points made by the Senator; but though a departure from my purpose now, in order to answer the Senator's question, will give my remarks the appearance of hopeless discontinuity, I shall attempt to answer him. First, we should ratify the Versailles treaty, excising, if necessary to secure such ratification, the covenant of the League of Nations. By pursuing that course we would put ourselves en rapport with our allies.

Mr. ASHURST. Let me interject——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah further yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator says that we should first ratify the treaty of Versailles by taking from its context the covenant of the League of Nations. The Senator knows that that can not be done.

Mr. KING. Oh, well, the Senator is asking me what I think ought to be done. I am telling the Senator now what I think ought to be done.

Mr. ASHURST. I mean, what practical thing, in this situation, should we do?

Mr. KING. That is not impractical. The Versailles treaty contains numerous provisions relating to the settlement of the war, indemnities, reparations, the establishment of a court of arbitration, an acknowledgment of Germany's offenses and her responsibility for the war. It sets up new nations, contains provisions for the payment of indemnity to America, and leaves to the United States the disposition of the six or seven hundred millions of dollars in possession of the Alien Property Custodian. Part 1, treating of the League of Nations, while found in the treaty, is not an indispensable part of it. Germany is a party to the treaty but is not a member of the league. There is nothing impractical in our ratifying the treaty, excepting from the act of ratification the provisions relating to the covenant of the League of Nations. We would then be at peace with Germany and in association with our allies and competent to participate in those matters which we deem important for our welfare and for world peace. While not in the league, we would be technically, as well as actually, at peace with Germany, and diplomatic relations could immediately be resumed. Our consular agents could be sent to Germany and Germany's consular agents would come to us. Trade relations would be resumed and the economic conditions in Germany improved. Moreover, such a course would tend to stabilize Europe and unquestionably would promote the material welfare of all Europe as well as the United States.

Mr. ASHURST. I agree with all the Senator says and devoutly wish it could be done; but the Senator must know, for I certainly know, that it will not be done.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my friend may be a better political prophet than I am, but I can not believe that the Republican Party will miss the opportunity now presented for a settlement of those questions arising out of the war. As I have indicated, the Versailles treaty will not be defeated because we refuse to ratify it. Germany is not a member of the League of Nations, and there is nothing in the treaty or in the provisions of the covenant of the league to prohibit our Government from ratifying the treaty, excepting from the resolution of ratification the part dealing with the league. As Senators know, there are nations within the league who are not parties to the treaty, and, as I have stated, Germany (and the same is true of Austria) is a party to the treaty, but is not a member of the league. Whatever indemnities and advantages the United States claimed as the result of the war are set forth in the Versailles treaty. Germany assumed responsibility for the war and accepted the terms prescribed by the United States and the allied nations as conditions of peace. It would, in my opinion, be of the highest advantage for the United States to immediately ratify the treaty. While I would be glad to have the United States enter the league, with certain reservations, I realize that such a course is not at present possible; but there is every reason why we should ratify the treaty, even though we except the provisions of the league from our act.

I suggest to the Senator from Arizona, and for the consideration of other Senators, the difficulties that will be encountered in attempting to negotiate a separate treaty with Germany. Germany is bound by the terms of the treaty, and the allied nations will not renounce the obligations assumed by Germany. It has been suggested that we pass a resolution declaring the state of war at an end and immediately resume diplomatic and consular relations with Germany. That course is open to us, but the adoption of it would be unstatesmanlike and bordering upon the realms of absurdity. The practical thing to do, as I have stated, is to ratify the treaty. That will open the way for great changes in Europe and will do much to stabilize conditions and improve our foreign relations and increase our foreign trade and commerce.

I believe the new administration will seek to carry out a foreign policy that will tend to promote world peace and to bring the United States into most cordial relations with our allies, as well as all nations. The President elect is a splendid representative American. He is devoted to our country and desires that the progress of our Nation and of the world shall not be impeded. Judge Hughes, who has been selected for the portfolio of the State Department, commands the confidence of the American people. He is a man of wide experience, of sound judgment, and has demonstrated that he possesses intellectual attainments of a high order. I am sure that he will appreciate the importance of this Nation taking her proper place in the world, and he will seek an early opportunity to convince our allies and the world that this Nation is profoundly interested in the welfare of humanity and desires to cordially cooperate in all movements making for world peace. Moreover, I believe the administration will approach the great powers, if not all nations, with a view to securing a limitation of armaments. This course, Mr. President, is not impracticable. The achievement of what I have indicated is not only feasible, but, in my opinion, can speedily be realized, and this administration in a sane and practical manner, I feel persuaded, will address itself to the realization of the aims which I have so imperfectly outlined.

Certainly, it is not impractical for the United States to enter into agreement with other nations to limit military and naval operations. The Senator knows that European nations are now bending beneath debts aggregating scores of billions of dollars. Relief must be obtained from the burdens which preparations for war entail. France is spending hundreds of millions annually to maintain her army, and Italy is also incurring additional indebtedness in the maintenance of an army whose proportions can not be justified. Japan, with limited resources, can not without the utmost exertions, maintain her present military and naval force, and can not without oppression obtain revenues to build additional battleships and cruisers. The United States is owing more than $24,000,000,000. Our foreign commerce is declining and our domestic financial situation is precarious. There are financial clouds in the horizon and it is imperative that the threatened storm be averted. It is vital that the burden of taxation be removed; that economies be practiced and that Government expenses be reduced. Notwithstanding these conditions, we are called upon by the Republican Party to appropriate for the coming year approximately $1,000,000,000 for the Army and Navy. We are also called upon to carry out a naval program formulated in 1915 which already has cost nearly $500,000,000 and which will unquestionably require from $750,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 for its completion. The Republican Party is also demanding a naval policy which will impose burdens of from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000 and $600,000,000 per annum. It is also proposed that we enact what has been called the "bonus" law, the results of which no one can predict.

I stated a few days ago, Mr. President, that within the next 25 years we would be called upon to expend from $20,000,000,000 to $25,000,000,000 to meet charges, claims, pensions, and so forth, resulting from the World War, and this amount will be in excess of the $24,000,000,000 which we are still owing by reason of war expenditures. The Senator from Colorado stated a few days ago that less than 10 per cent of the billions which the Federal Government is collecting from the people is expended for the civil administration of the Government, and that substantially 90 per cent is expended to meet the obligations of the war and charges resulting from the war.

Mr. President, I can not agree with the Senator that the American people have decided against a League of Nations or an agreement between the nations, including the United States, to secure world peace and bring about world disarmament. The Republican Party dare not adopt a policy of isolation and nonintercourse with other nations. In my opinion, it will not construe the election as a mandate for continued armament and the assertion of military and naval power. If it does, it will be sternly rebuked by the people and there will come into power those who seek peace and justice and who will strive to initiate a new order and bring about better conditions in the world.

The Senator from Arizona conveys the impression that the advocacy of the limitation of armament or a modification of the naval program of 1916 means the abolition of the Army and the destruction of the Navy. I apologize for repeating, but I want to again declare that there is no proposition pending having that end in view. I am combating the contention that the American people have declared against cooperation and agreement between the United States and other nations in the interest of peace and arbitration and world disarmament. I am supporting a proposition that looks to the immediate negotiation of a treaty or an agreement, or a league between the United States and our allies and other nations, in the interest of world peace and to secure limitation of military and naval armaments. I favor a modification of the 1916 naval program. The recommendations which I have made involve the completion of six great battleships and one battle cruiser, their aggregate cost being nearly $350,000,000. My suggestions also called for the construction of one or two great airplane carriers at a cost of approximately $50,000,000. I have emphasized, if there is to be no agreement between the nations for disarmament, the importance of building naval aircraft and submarines and of responding to the impressive naval lessons taught by the recent war. I voted for an army of 150,000 men for the coming year, notwithstanding that the cost of maintaining this force called for approximately $400,000,000.

I know that the motives and attitude of those who are speaking for world peace will be misunderstood and that they will bring upon their heads bitter criticism. But, Mr. President, I feel that the forces of reactionism must not grip this Nation or control the international policies of the world. Now, more than ever, not only this Nation but all nations should be guided by the spirit of liberty and justice and fellowship and peace. We need statesmen who are not only practical but statesmen who have vision and whose hearts will respond to the quickening influences of righteousness that abound in the world and whose judgments will be guided by a desire to see social justice established everywhere. The munition makers and the manufacturers of war materials and the international bankers who would profit by international conflicts, and the military and naval braggarts who are guided by the philosophy of might and force instead of right and justice, must not take the reins of authority in this or in other lands and drive the people into fratricidal conflicts and again deluge the world with blood. I think that the Christian statesmen of the world and the liberal thought of the world should be dedicated to the promotion of the peace of the world.

The auspicious beginning of a world union signalized by the treaty of Versailles must not end in tragedy and defeat. A cry should go out from the hearts of the lovers of justice and peace everywhere demanding that political leaders and governmental authorities should cease all intrigues and disputations and, actuated by high resolves and humanitarian impulses, confer together in order that a rational plan may be devised, if one does not exist, under which the aspirations of the people may be realized and the cause of peace be made secure. We are here talking war and not peace and are exhibiting a bellicose attitude inconsistent with our declarations for international fellowship. We convene a secret session of the Senate, and the press and individuals of influence and position permit the impression to arise that we fear war with other nations and must spend a billion dollars for the coming year for military and naval appropriations. Such an attitude will arouse fear and dread and resentment in some parts of the world. Our explanations will be accorded but imperfect consideration, and the purity of our motives and the disinterestedness of our conduct, though proclaimed ever so vociferously, will need further corroborative testimony to find much support throughout the world.

Mr. President, it is a solemn duty resting upon this Republic to immediately take the lead in a movement for world peace and world disarmament. If we shirk it and become a stumbling-block to the realization of peace and all of its concomitant blessings, history will write damning words against us which all the ages can not erase.

Let us be just to the Allies and fair in the judgment which we form respecting other nations of the world. They concede our high motives in entering the war, but there is bewilderment in the minds of the world when they consider our conduct following the armistice. The American people have been foremost in pleading for an international league.

Ex-President Roosevelt in his speech at Christiania, Norway, espoused the cause of a world league; not a league which merely established an international court, but a league of all peoples of the world, one which had for its object the maintenance of the peace of the world. The covenant of the League of Nations was not stronger in its conference of authority upon the league than was the plan formulated in the great address of Mr. Roosevelt. When the peace conference met it was an almost universal prayer that a plan should be devised the operation of which would limit, if not prevent, wars and bring into harmonious and happy relationship the free peoples of the world.

The frightfulness of the great conflict, the sorrows and the agonies which had swept the world, prostrated humanity and led them to a world-wide faith which called for a new era. The allied nations and nearly every other nation of the world accepted the work of the peace conference. This Nation held aloof, and powerful political elements declared for a severance of all ties between the United States and other nations, and the adoption of a national policy without reference to the league or the conduct of other nations. Then followed the declarations of the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels, that we must build the greatest Navy in the world. With feverish haste we set to work to execute the naval program of 1915 and to construct 11 great battleships, 6 battle cruisers, and other war vessels at a cost of more than $1,000,000,000. Contracts were hurriedly let to great steel plants and other manufacturing institutions at prices 100 per cent or more in excess of those prevailing in 1915–16.

Public officials and the press discuss the island of Yap and Japanese immigration and urge that the situation is such as to imperatively require the expenditure of hundreds of millions to give us the greatest Navy in the world. The demand is made that we immediately appropriate $500,000,000 for the maintenance of the Navy and to carry on the program of construction for the current year. I repeat that this condition necessarily will arouse apprehensions in Japan and in other parts of the world. It subjects us to criticism and suspicion, and those who desire our friendship will attribute to the United States sinister designs and the lust for territorial expansion. Central and South America are building no navies. They want peace. Canada desires peace. The 3,000 miles of undefended boundary separating us from that magnificent territory is an argument in favor of peace between this Nation and Canada. Great Britain wants peace. Her people are struggling with forces which threaten her destruction. Oppressed by debt, unable to rally from the exhaustion caused by the war, threatened by economic and industrial ruin, they realize that only along the paths of peace can deliverance be obtained. Where are our foes? Against whom shall we arm, and toward whom shall we lift our mailed fist? Mr. President, we should begin, nationally and internationally, to preserve the fruits of the great conflict from which we have just emerged.

I return to the statements made by the Senator from Arizona when he interrupted me some time ago. As I understand his position, it is substantially the same as that taken by Capt. Mahan in his concededly strong book entitled "Influence of Sea Power on History." That work undoubtedly exercised a profound influence throughout the world. The claim has been made that it became almost a textbook for the Kaiser of Germany and Von Tirpitz and also strengthened the purposes of Great Britain to maintain naval supremacy. It is, of course, presumptuous for me to challenge the statements and deductions of this great naval writer, and yet I am constrained to declare that some of his statements of fact are not accurate, or, rather, all of the facts and circumstances are not indicated. He has traced causal connections where none exist and drawn deductions not warranted by a fuller and more complete knowledge of the circumstances and facts connected with vital issues which he was considering. For instance, in his discussion of the Punic Wars he attributes the triumph of Rome over Carthage to the former's control of the sea. As I recall, his position is that this control prevented Hannibal from landing troops in Italy and compelled him to send his Carthaginian forces to Spain, from which they were forced to march through Gaul under conditions which broke down the morale and, indeed, practically destroyed his army. This course prevented a union of the two Carthaginian armies and led to their defeat. There are many historical facts which controvert Capt. Mahan's position. There are many reasons to support the view that Carthage had sufficient naval strength to have conveyed her military forces either to Sicily or to Italy. There were periods during the Punic wars in which the supremacy of Carthage upon the sea was unquestionable, and during those periods victories were obtained by Roman armies. At the time referred to by Admiral Mahan, which I have just called attention to, the facts are that Carthage made full use of the sea and transported with but slight difficulty supplies and reenforcements to Spain. It is contended by writers that Spain was a military base and that many of the soldiers constituting the Carthaginian armies were obtained there and accordingly Carthage voluntarily chose to advance upon Italy from Spain. I believe that the second Punic war was a military campaign and that Rome's victories were but incidentally due to her sea power. Moreover, there is much to support the contention that the Carthaginian defeat resulted from the intrigues and dissensions of the Carthaginians and the refusal of the governing authorities to supply Hannibal with needed supplies and reenforcements. There seems to be no doubt but that in the second Punic war Hannibal could have taken Rome if he had received expected siege engines and reenforcements. The jealousy existing at Carthage against him prevented the dispatching from Carthage and from Spain the material and reenforcements which he required. Moreover, Hannibal expected, when entering Italy, to find revolts and receive accretions to his ranks in revolting Provinces. It could with great force be argued that his defeat, and therefore the defeat of Carthage, resulted from the lack of accurate information on his part or an imperfect judgment as to the internal conditions in the northern Provinces of Italy.

The Senator states that sea power saved Rome from Greece. History discloses that Rome conquered Greece, notwithstanding the failure of the Hellenic armies and the naval strength of the Hellenic peoples. There are those who will question the Senator's historical deductions when he avers that the sea power of Greece preserved her from Persia. True, Greece obtained naval victories, but the ultimate triumph of Greece over the Persian Empire are found in a multitude of causes. It will be difficult, if not impossible, to determine the causus causans of Grecian victory, or determine what was, as lawyers say, the "proximate" cause. It is claimed by some that the superior military training and the superior bravery and the remarkable military organization of the Hellenic forces brought Persia's destruction. There are some who say that the downfall of Persia began at the Pass of Thermopolæ. Still others attribute the victory of Greece to her intellectual supremacy and moral strength. The Senator states that sea power gave to the Phœnicians the control of the maritime world. The Phœnicians were a maritime nation and the Mediterranean Sea became to them almost a territorial possession. They founded mighty cities and by their trade and commerce enriched peoples and advanced the cause of civilization. The sea to them provided lanes for commerce, but the great naval power of the Phœnicians did not save their country, and the cities which she founded are now waste places, and, to use the expression of the Senator, "bats and owls inhabit her waste places and destroyed temples."

The philosophy of the Senator, Mr. President, is not invulnerable to attack, and in my opinion contains many fallacies. Many of the examples which he has furnished to support his thesis that naval power means peace and national perpetuity, if not immortality, may be turned against his position if we obtain the historic facts. The Senator has referred to Greece. He will recall that at the beginning of the Peloponnesian War Athens was a maritime State and the leader of a great confederacy. Her sea power was supreme. None challenged it. Corinth, which had been a strong maritime State, was surpassed by Athens in the rivalry which ensued. Sparta was a military State, with but little naval strength. For a number of years success attended the Athenians, but, ultimately, notwithstanding her naval supremacy, and her victories at sea, she was defeated. Undoubtedly the Senator had in mind the Battle of Salamis. That can scarcely be called a sea battle. Indeed, one writer denominates it a "land battle fought on shipboard." Superior naval forces have often been defeated by inferior ones, as superior armies have been defeated by smaller ones.

Notwithstanding the aphorisms of Napoleon and other military leaders about superior numbers, there are elements entering into battles, whether upon land or sea, that often determine the results, elements entirely disconnected from numerical strength. The naval Battle of Naupaktis was won by the Athenians over the Peloponnesians because of the superior tactical skill of Phormio, the Athenian commander. At a time when the Athenians were undisputed masters of the sea they attempted the invasion of Sicily. The Syracusians, with extemporized ships, defeated the invading fleet.

The Senator referred to the Moslem Empire and of the dominion which it exercised from Constantinople to Cordova. The Senator insists that the dominion of this Empire resulted from its sea power. Again, I think the Senator has not fully appraised all the facts which entered into the triumphs of Mohammedanism and the power of the Mohammedan Empire. The greatest battles waged by the disciples of Mohammed were not upon sea but upon land, and their greatest victories, as well as their most crushing defeats, occurred upon land. In seeking to find the causes of Mohammedan successes we must go beyond the mere physical surroundings and what might be called utilitarian elements. There was a religious fanaticism and an ineradicable fatalism which impelled the followers of the Crescent to almost superhuman deeds of valor. Great military leaders were developed and armies of enormous size were raised.

In my opinion, it is inaccurate to say that sea power gave the Moslem Empire its extensive dominion. Spain's sea power and the fate of the Spanish Armada have been alluded to by the Senator. In 1586 when the plan to invade Great Britain was fully matured under Santa Cruz, Spain, as I recall, possessed greater naval strength than Great Britain, and if the plan of Santa Cruz had been put into execution at that time perhaps the course of history would have been different. After the death of Santa Cruz a less competent commander took his place. With fewer ships and approximately with one-third of the number of soldiers provided by Santa Cruz he entered upon the great adventure. England had fewer ships than he and but slightly more than one-half the number of men than were commanded by the Spanish admiral. It is not necessary to review the disastrous results of Spain's impolitic, if not to say, criminal undertaking. Her great naval power won her no victory, and humiliation and defeat followed her upon land and upon sea.

Who is wise enough to say what led to the downfall of Spain, or the overthrow of any nation? The many historians who have learnedly written concerning the rise and fall of the Roman Empire differ as to the efficient and proximate cause of her downfall. Some attribute it to paganism; others to unwise colonial policies; others to her moral decadence and the sensual and voluptuous spirit which entered into the lives of the people. Still others attribute it to slavery and to the economic conditions which prevailed. Usury is named by some writers as a contributing cause to national decline. Still others insist that her political institutions were incompatible with progress and proper development. James Anthony Froude attributes Rome's disaster to the profligate and corrupt lives of the people, and states that she was "rotten from the Bosporus to the pillars of Hercules." Her naval power and her mighty legions did not and could not save her. She had been weighed in the balances and found wanting, and her doom was pronounced by the God of Justice because of her transgressions and her departures from the principles of righteousness and the moral and ethical laws governing individuals as well as the social organism. The lesson must be learned sooner or later that there are forces and influences, which may not be defined or fully comprehended, which are more powerful than big navies or mighty armies, and which vanquish the forces of men and bring to triumphant victory the weak and the humble things of life.

Mr. Fred T. Jane, in his work called "Heresies of Sea Power," admits that sea power is a factor influencing the course of events; but he inquires whether that influence is on a par with and of the same nature as the weather or military equipment; and many other things. He also asks whether sea power is the "sole cause for the success of a nation in a war involving maritime interests, or whether the victorious nation did not succeed merely because it happened to make use of the sea in winning."

I believe that his conclusions are that history will not affirm that the possession of sea power is a guarantee that the nation possessing it will win.

The Senator from Arizona states that if the roll were called it would be found that the nations which have risen in the past did so because of their possession of sea power. I concede that some nations have reached material greatness because of their maritime power. Other have become leaders because of their agricultural or manufacturing developments. Some races out of which nations have grown live upon islands or lands favorable to the development of an ocean-carrying commerce, and they have achieved success and power in the world because of their maritime activity.

Of course, their sea power added to their greatness. They became the carriers of the products and the commodities of their own and other lands and nations; but I submit this furnishes no argument in favor of a proposition that the greatness of a nation rests upon her fighting qualities as a naval power. It would be absurd to say that the health of an individual is determined solely by one organ. The proper functioning of all organs of the body, as well as the existence of many external conditions, are essential to bodily growth and to physical health and strength. One may not say that the flowers bloom and the plants grow as the result of one cause alone. Sunshine and showers and suitable soil—these and other things are necessary for the proper growth and development of the multitudinous products of the vegetable world.

So also with nations; the complexities in national and international life are such as to preclude the adoption of a formula which will insure progress and growth and greatness or produce certain decadence and death.

Many of the nations of antiquity rose to greatness without sea power. One might inquire, though, what is meant by a "great nation"? Measured by the duration of its existence, China is a great nation. Do we mean great in morals, in intellectualism, in art, literature, religious concepts, or in mere fighting qualities? There are nations who have assumed, if not world leadership, high and conspicuous positions in the world, who have not learned the arts of war, but who have, rather, sought the paths of peace, and there have been and are nations concededly great who have had no maritime strength or naval power. Germany was a great nation before she became a naval power. Indeed, there are many who believe that her decadence began when she entered upon a program for world naval supremacy. The progress of the United States since the Civil War in all the things that are the proper indicia of national greatness is without parallel in the history of the world, and yet we had no merchant marine and an insignificant navy. Brazil and Argentina occupy proud positions among the nations of the world. Their extended seacoast has not led them to naval expansion. They are great nations despite their love of peace and their refusal to spend their resources to raise mighty armies and maintain powerful naval fleets. Since Spain abandoned her oppressive naval and military policies and turned her attention to intensive development and to production and trade and commerce she has taken on new life and is recuperating her wasted strength and recovering from her exhausted condition.

We must distinguish between conditions confronting insular nations like Great Britain and Japan and those which great continental nations encounter. Great Britain is dependent upon other countries not only for most of her raw materials but for substantially her entire food supply. Her home market is limited. She must have ships to bring her food and raw materials and vessels to carry her finished products to the remotest parts of the earth. In view of world conditions in the past and, indeed, those which exist to-day Great Britain must maintain an adequate navy. Japan is in much the same condition as Great Britain. She possesses no raw materials and her inhabitants are dependent very largely upon China and other countries for food supplies.

I agree with the Senator that in many instances national safety not only may but actually does lie in sea power. Our Nation must maintain a strong and fighting navy, though we do not need it to the same extent as insular nations, until by international agreement a plan for military and naval reduction shall be adopted.

I do not agree with the Senator's contention that history furnishes no example of naval powers overthrowing the liberties of other people. I find nothing in the psychology of naval preparations to differentiate them from military preparations. Naval preparations may mask imperialistic and aggressive designs as completely as military preparations for warlike operations upon land. Navalism may be as sinister and as wicked as militarism; indeed, militarism embraces navalism. The possession of great battleships and war fleets may inspire the same covetous thoughts and criminal desires for territorial conquest as may result, or have resulted, from the possession of mighty armies and all of the material forces essential for military expeditions. Germany built her great fleet in order that she might overthrow the liberties of other people. Spain's war vessels were used to hold in subjection the Latin American peoples, the Philippine Archipelago, Cuba, and Porto Rico and other peoples and other lands. Napoleon constructed a mighty fleet to aid his military operations and to execute his ambitions to conquer Europe.

Mr. President, history records the fact that many nations have engaged in predatory warfare and sought the subjugation of unoffending peoples through the agency of their fleets and vessels of war. Let us not take the flattering unction to our soul that if nations reduce their armaments they have removed all fear of aggression or the assertion of imperialistic ambitions. Let us not subject ourselves to the charge of insincerity or hypocrisy by announcing a naval policy that calls for the most powerful navy in the world when other nations are seeking a reduction of naval armaments, and then loudly proclaiming that we have a small Army and that our stupendous naval expenditures and preparations are only intended to convince the world of our peaceful purposes and our humanitarian desires.

Mr. President, I have consumed more time than I had intended, but the thoughts suggested by the Senators from Connecticut and Missouri and Arizona have led me into a discussion of many matters—perhaps some foreign to the matter which I arose for the purpose of presenting. But let me say in conclusion that there is no sanctity in a naval program devised and recommended five years ago. No matter how competent naval experts were at that time, and no matter how perfect the plan appeared then, conditions now are materially different and naval warfare has undergone radical changes and modifications as the result of the experiences of the World War. Let us revise a program conceived five years ago, and which is now manifestly imperfect, and adopt one that meets the present and the immediate future requirements. Let us in the spirit of friendship and genuine fellowship approach the stricken and burdened peoples and nations of the world and agree upon a program for disarmament which will result in lifting from other nations as well as from the people of our own land a portion of the crushing weight under which they struggle.

Mr. President, I have read the testimony in the record so far as any is furnished covering this item. I can find nothing which, in my opinion, justifies the increase. Everything indicates that during the coming year there will be a general reduction in prices of substantially all commodities. It seems to me that those who prepared the estimates for the Navy—and the same may be said of those who submitted other estimates for the executive departments of the Government—failed to take into account the economic conditions in the world, the causes operating to lower prices, and particularly the financial condition of the Government itself, the very heavy burdens of taxation resting upon the people, nor do they seem to regard the diminishing revenues, the bankruptcy of the Treasury, and the prospect of a bond issue at an early date in order to meet the enormous expenditures of the National Government.

Officials of the Government in the executive departments who are called upon to prepare estimates upon which we base our appropriation bills evince a cynicism and callousness with respect to the burdens resting upon the people which to me is astonishing. Knowing that there will be a deficit for the coming fiscal year of more than $2,000,000,000, they demand appropriations for their departments aggregating an amount that will exceed our total revenues by at least $4,000,000,000. I appeal to the chairman of the committee to aid in reducing the burdens of taxation and in subtracting from some of these reported appropriations at least a moiety of the amount therein found. The sum of $850,000 for this item, in my opinion, is entirely too much, but it is only one item out of a multitude.

As I started to say yesterday when we were considering this measure, substantially every item in the bill is increased beyond the amount carried in the House bill. Usually the Senate in a great appropriation bill reports material reductions in many items, but an examination of the pending bill reveals the fact that there has not been a reduction in a single item.

It is possible some item has escaped my attention, but I have looked in vain for some evidence, no matter how slight, of a desire for economy. We have increased every item, and these increases have been of a material character. We have added to the bill more than $100,000,000, notwithstanding the prodigal grants made by the other branch of Congress. It would seem, Mr. President, that we were blind to the economic and industrial situation of our country and the serious financial condition confronting the American people. It would seem with a reduction in the personnel of the Navy and taking into account the conditions now existing in the United States as well as in the world, there should be not an increase but a reduction in appropriation bills passed by this Congress. The party in power pledged itself to an economic administration. It is violating those pledges and enacting legislation which places increased burdens upon the people.

After somewhat extended hearings the House Naval Affairs Committee reported a bill carrying approximately $100,000,000 less than the measure now before us. The Senate committee, with but brief hearings, added to the House bill approximately $100,000,000 more. Mr. President, we should revise the work of the Senate Naval Committee and reduce many of the items therein found. We should compel by limiting appropriations the practice of economy in the Navy Department. Many of the officials, in my opinion, do not comprehend the financial difficulties before the country and are indifferent to the value of money. Nearly $500,000,000 is too much as an annual maintenance charge for the Navy. Such extravagance can not be defended. We should not permit it.

Reference has been made to Japan's expenditure for the current year. Japan's naval budget did not exceed 246,000,000 yen, or approximately $123,000,000, and Senators will recall that there is great opposition in Japan to the appropriation of so large a sum. But we are asked to appropriate for the coming year several times as much as that which Japan proposes to appropriate for her naval program.

There seems to be an active campaign being carried on in various parts of our country in favor of a naval program devised five years ago and to commit the United States to a policy which will cost in the next three years more than two and a quarter billions of dollars. To whip this policy through Congress lurid statements are made concerning the naval program of Great Britain and Japan, and wild and extravagant statements are submitted that our country is in danger and that for protection against the aggressive purposes and designs of these nations we must spend at least a billion dollars immediately for naval construction and from four to five hundred millions annually for a number of years for the maintenance of the Navy.

Mr. McKELLAR. How does it appear as to the appropriations of England for naval purposes?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, Great Britain is not appropriating a single dollar for capital ships; that is, battleships or battle cruisers.

Mr. McKELLAR. How much is England appropriating for her navy?

Mr. KING. Our program prepared in 1915 calls for more than $1,000,000,000 for construction, and must be supplemented by at least two or three hundred millions more. We are appropriating for capital ships hundreds of millions, while Great Britain is not appropriating a single dollar for that purpose. We are appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars for battle cruisers, while Great Britain is scrapping or has scrapped the keels of three battle cruisers. Great Britain discovered, as a result of the experience in the World War, that the present form of capital ship may be impotent as a fighting ship in the future, and, profiting by such experiences, she scrapped three great battle cruisers of the Hood type upon which she had expended approximately $8,000,000. She has not laid the keel of a single battleship since the war and is not expending a single dollar in the construction of battleships or battle cruisers. Notwithstanding Great Britain's course, we feverishly entered upon a construction program devised in 1915, which called for 11 battleships, 6 battle cruisers, and other fighting craft, the cost of which will be more than $1,000,000,000. Realizing that the program of 1915 is somewhat archaic, and that many naval experts are questioning the wisdom of building more capital ships, our Naval Board has been compelled to recommend the construction of plane carriers and adequate seaplanes and submarines. Because of the war, work upon the program was suspended in part. Notwithstanding such suspension, we have appropriated in execution of the program of 1915–16 nearly $500,000,000; and it will cost $500,000,000 more, in my opinion, for its completion, so that the ships that were to cost $544,000,000 will require substantially $1,000,000,000 for their construction.

Moreover, Mr. President, it is admitted by the naval officers and experts who are urging the 1916 naval program that it will not supply us with an adequate Navy.

The experiences of the war have shown that the program of 1916 calls for a one-plan Navy, which all must concede is not sufficient at the present time and does not provide a complete and modern Navy. The experiences of the war seem to have taught the General Board of the Navy Department only one lesson: That we ought to go on spending additional amounts for the Navy; that we ought to keep up the capital ships which England is discarding; and then, in addition to that, we ought to appropriate annually, or at least for a number of years, hundreds of millions of dollars for aviation and undersea craft. So we come out of the war with only one lesson taught to us—namely, that whereas before the war we were to rely upon the capital ships, now we must have the capital ship, costing forty or more million dollars for each vessel, and expensive cruisers, each of which will cost $50,000,000, and in addition undersea craft and aircraft, the cost of which it is impossible to determine.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that Great Britain spent $765,000,000 last year on her navy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator that Great Britain spent that much on her navy. I repeat what I said a moment ago, that Great Britain since the armistice has not spent a dollar upon battleships or cruisers. But contrary to her policy, we have gone on and propose to continue building capital ships, the utility of some of which is seriously questioned by naval experts of international standing. As stated, our 1916 program calls for $1,000,000,000 in capital ships—that is, battleships and cruisers, and a few auxiliary craft.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I will yield in a moment. Great Britain, profiting by the lessons of the Great War, has quit spending money upon capital ships, and what money she is spending aside from maintenance—and it is a limited amount for the current year, let me tell my friend—is being devoted to undersea craft and to airplanes and plane carriers. I am willing to vote for a large appropriation for aircraft and submarines and plane carriers, and also the necessary amount to complete six capital ships. We have enough torpedo boats—300 of the best in the world—and there is no necessity for building any more at present. We should provide a suitable appropriation for undersea craft and for aviation, but we should suspend a part of the program of 1916 so far as it relates to capital ships. Now I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, we know that Great Britain spent at least one-third more on her navy last year than we did; we know perfectly well that she is going to spend a great deal more this year than we shall spend; and we know that Japan has very ambitious designs in connection with navy building. In view of these circumstances, would the Senator, before we have an agreement as to disarmament, be willing to let those other nations continue to build up great navies while we stand still? What is his attitude on that subject? Does he want us to stand still while the two other great nations continue to build, or shall we all stop together when we stop?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator had done me the honor to read the minority report presented by me upon the Borah resolution, or if he had listened to what I had to say this afternoon, he would not have propounded either of the questions just submitted, because both were answered. If, however, the Senate will pardon me for detaining them, I will reply to the Senator and try to explain to him the position which I take with respect to these matters.

In the first place, I do not admit his premise. Whatever naval program Japan has, it is, in part, the result of the naval program which we have adopted.

Mr. McKELLAR. How does the Senator know that?

Mr. KING. If I had time, I would read to the Senator from data which I have on my desk supporting what I have said; of course, I could not convert him; he has such an antipathy to Great Britain that it would be impossible, in my opinion, to convince him of the sincerity of the constant avowals of Great Britain for a policy of disarmament, but if I had time——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Let me complete the sentence.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. KING. I would read to the Senator statements which show that the naval policy announced by the United States has reacted upon Japan, as every person of common sense must have realized that it would. When the World War ended Europe was exhausted in a material and financial way, and Japan was suffering from serious financial and economic disturbances. European nations as well as Japan signified a desire for disarmament and joined with President Wilson in an effort to secure the adoption of a league of nations and they planned for the limitation of world armament in the interest of universal peace. The United States professed a sincere desire to reduce armaments and to provide a judicial system for the determination of international controversies. But now, in the face of all our professions of altruism and desire for disarmament, Great Britain and Japan behold our Nation appropriating more for naval preparations than ever before and witness the most feverish efforts to construct the largest and most powerful Navy in the world.

I submit to the Senator that the attitude of the United States can not be very impressive upon other nations, or, rather, it can not be reassuring as to our future intentions. When Japan learns, as she has learned, that Senators have denounced her as a menace to this Nation and to the peace of the world, and when the Japanese people read the war-like and jingo statements made in various parts of our country, and in some of the newspapers of the United States, and when they learn of the declarations made by Americans that war is imminent between the United States and Japan, and, therefore, that this Government must immediately arm for its protection against Japan, and when they further learn that it is claimed by some American people that the only possible foes that the United States has on the sea are Great Britain and Japan, I submit that her statesmen and her people may not be too severely criticized if they adopt a naval policy which may be regarded as necessary for their protection.

I now yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I just want to say that the Senator does me a great injustice when he talks of my antipathy to Great Britain. I am a great admirer of Great Britain; but the fact that I am a great admirer of hers is no reason why I should want her to control the world, by her navy or otherwise. I am one of those who believe in America.

The Senator has misrepresented my position, and I want to explain it.

I believe that we should rather imitate Great Britain in the matter of our national protection and defense. England, we all know, is building a great navy, and we all know that Japan is following in her footsteps as rapidly as possible. I agree entirely with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that it would be well to have naval disarmament. I voted for his resolution on that subject, or, rather, for the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], which was practically identical with it, but I am unwilling to take steps toward disarmament as long as these two nations are continuing to arm. Whenever these other nations get ready to disarm, then I am ready to join them; but as long as I see them building guns I think in self-protection my country ought to build guns, and that is the reason why I am for this Navy.

Let me call the Senator's attention to the situation that exists in France to-day, and let us follow the example of France. She has just gone through a great war with Germany, in which Germany was defeated. Suppose France had absolutely disarmed, as the Senator would now have us do in the Navy, how could she have protected herself against Germany? Germany has told her what she is willing to pay. How is she going to make her pay? Only because of her great army and navy. She is a prudent nation. She is looking after the interests of France, and we can but admire her; and so it is with our country. As long as these two other nations—rivals of ours in the commercial world; rivals of ours on the sea, the one already having a greater navy than ours—continue to build, who can say it is not a matter of prudence, a matter of self-protection, a matter of common defense that we should build?

I think the Senator is wholly mistaken in his view that we ought to lie down upon our building program now, tuck our tails, and run.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee talks about my having done him an injustice. All I need to do is to invite the attention of the Senate to the statements made by him repeatedly concerning Great Britain. Of course I accept his statement now that he is a great admirer of Great Britain. I confess, however, that if the expressions with which he has favored us in the past in the Senate are an exhibition of his great admiration for Great Britain, I wonder what they would be if he hated Great Britain.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I want to say this, if the Senator will allow me to answer his question——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah further yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. Yes. It was not a question, however.

Mr. MCKELLAR. When I see England undertaking to take away American rights, when I see England unfair in her trade relations with this country, I want to say to the Senator that I am on the side of America. When England is undertaking to gobble up the rights of other nations I might side with her sometimes, because we are kin to her; her people are our people; but when she begins to assert not rights but powers over this country, I am unwilling to submit to the assertion of such powers, not because I do not admire England, but because I believe in my own country first.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator's statement now fully confirms what I said. It manifests beyond all shadow of a doubt his supreme admiration for Great Britain. I am not here to defend Great Britain's naval program. She does not need any defense.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes; she seems to have a number of champions about that want us to quit building a navy, and depend upon England to protect us. I am not that kind of an American. The Senator may be if he likes. He may stand on the floor of the Senate and urge that we build no navy, and that England, in her goodness and kindness and generosity, will furnish a navy for our protection. I have heard him argue on this floor that during the war England's navy stood as our protection. I do not want to be put in that humiliating position. I want this country to have a navy that can protect our country, without depending upon England or any other country for protection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is always a pleasant thing to affirm one's devotion to one's country. If I were unparliamentary, I might say that that was rather a cheap way of demonstrating one's patriotism.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I am going to demonstrate it by my vote right along.

Mr. KING. I would not be unparliamentary; and my friend may say as harsh and as unfair and as wholly undeserved things as he has just uttered, but I entertain for him a friendship that will not be shaken by criticisms which, upon mature reflection, I know he would not offer. However, he does me a very grave injustice in imputing to me a desire to "destroy" the Navy. I suggested at the outset of these remarks, when the Senator interrupted me, that if he had read the minority report which I have filed he would not have asked the questions submitted; and I now state if he had he would not offer the groundless criticisms which have just fallen from his lips.

Mr. President, I am pleading for a Navy—a well-rounded, suitable, adequate, modern Navy. I never have suggested, I never have dreamed of the destruction of the American Navy. I never have said that we should surrender our rights to Great Britain or that she was our sword and our defense. That question never was discussed by me upon the floor of the Senate, and the Senator is entirely mistaken. There is not a syllable in any of my remarks that justify his statement.

However, I am willing to say now that in the beginning of the war Great Britain with her powerful navy and with the brave soldiers which she threw into the war not only constituted a wall of defense to the British Empire but to the cause of the civilization of the world; and I am willing to accord to Great Britain all honor for her heroic efforts and her services in behalf of world freedom. She is entitled to the gratitude of the lovers of liberty everywhere for drawing the sword when Germany invaded Belgium and in casting her lot with France and Russia and with bleeding Belgium in behalf of civilization and to rescue the world from the menace of a military autocracy.

The Senator says that Great Britain is attacking our rights. I leave him and the people of this country, who are fair and dispassionate, to determine that question for themselves. I am making no charges against her nor am I defending her. I am discussing a naval bill, and referred to the naval policy of Great Britain in so far as it was shown in her abandonment of further work upon battleships and battle cruisers. When the war was over she had four battle cruisers upon the stocks. One of them—the Hood—of 40,000 tons, was completed. The other three were scrapped, because the British Admiralty reached the conclusion, as I interpret naval literature, that the capital ship of the future will not be the proud battleship or battle cruiser but the airship carrier, and that the naval contests of the future will be rather under sea and in the air than upon the surface of the sea. So Great Britain is building no capital ships. We have to-day battleships that outrank any battleship that Great Britain has, more powerful—I am not referring to battle cruisers like the Hood but battleships—more powerful, of greater tonnage, and more effective as engines of destruction and as weapons in naval warfare.

The Senator says I would destroy the Navy. Upon the contrary, while Great Britain is building no capital ships, I have advocated that we complete six great battleships at a cost of forty-five to fifty million dollars each, and I have advocated that we complete one battle cruiser costing the same amount, and that we construct one and perhaps two airplane carriers at a cost of approximately $52,000,000. I have advocated the construction of larger and better submarines. I have not advocated the construction of additional torpedo-boat destroyers, because we have 300 of the most efficient in the world. I am for a modern Navy. My friend is for an archaic Navy. My friend wants to go back to 1915, and resurrect a program devised then, as was stated by one of the admirals, and recommended then and crystallized into law in August, 1916, and adhere to that program. Great Britain, in the plenitude of her experience, guided by a wise naval policy and by a naval board ripe in experience, is discarding capital ships and putting greater reliance upon airplanes, torpedo-boat destroyers, submarines, mines, gases, and auxiliary craft. I am suggesting that we should consider, in the light of this course, the propriety of modifying the capital ship program of 1915. I am for a better Navy than the Senator from Tennessee desires. He wants an archaic one; I want the one of to-day.

But, Mr. President, beyond and above that, I desire what I know the Senator from Tennessee wants—an international agreement for the limitation of armaments. Both of us voted for the League of Nations. Why? Because we believed in world disarmament and in the establishment of international agencies to promote peace and permit swords to be sheathed and cannons to be destroyed, and to enable humanity to march forward into the light of a better day.

I am still for a League of Nations. I am still for a policy that seeks for a limitation of armament first and disarmament ultimately. I would pursue a course now that would not be regarded as a challenge to other nations for military or naval supremacy. I would pursue a course of conciliation, of amity, of friendliness.

My friend, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], apparently forgetting the eloquent speeches which he made for the League of Nations, would throw the glove of defiance into the faces of other nations.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have to go to a conference, and I have just a word to say in answer to the Senator from Utah. The Senator has said he is for a large Navy.

Mr. KING. No; an adequate and a modern Navy.

Mr. MCKELLAR. He said he was for a larger Navy than I am for. I am for the one proposed by the bill. If the Senator is for a large Navy, or an adequate Navy, he is taking a remarkable way of showing it. He is fighting this bill. This bill has been prepared by the committee and reported out by a majority of the committee, and it seems to me that, inasmuch as in 1916 we, by a bill, provided that the President of the United States should hold conferences with representatives of other nations for the purpose of seeing if we could not disarm, and inasmuch as no other nation has ever met us or has ever approached us on it, and inasmuch as we have already put into this bill an amendment providing that the United States, Great Britain, and Japan shall get together looking to disarmament, it seems to me we have done as much as we should do, and as long as these other nations are continuing to build it seems to me there is but one thing for us to do, and that is to continue with our program.

If the Senator is a friend of the measure, if he believes that we should be adequately defended, I urge him to stop fighting this bill and taking up the time on this bill, but let it pass, so that we may be adequately defended.

I think we ought to pass this bill, and pass it to-night. We ought to go ahead with the work. We are perfectly willing to join these nations whenever they are willing, but if we ever get an agreement out of them it will be because they fear us, and not because they want to do us a favor.

[At this point Mr. KING yielded to Mr. OWEN.]

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] that had it not been for the interruptions of the Senator from Tennessee I would have concluded my remarks within a few moments, but I am now compelled to ask the indulgence of the Senate in order that I may reply to some of the charges made by the Senator from Tennessee. The Senator alleges that I am fighting this bill. As a part of my remarks I ask that the report which I submitted upon the Borah resolution, and which discusses our naval policy, be inserted at the close of my remarks and as a part of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am opposed to some of the provisions of this bill and I am sure that the Senator from Tennessee is wholly unacquainted with many of its provisions. I am opposed to the enormous appropriations for the maintenance of the Navy. I have stated, and repeat, that a wise and economical administration of the Navy Department would not require for the coming year $500,000,000. It is not fair to charge that Senators are "fighting" the bill because they are seeking to improve it and to secure the adoption of a policy that will secure the best results for the country.

There is no sacredness in the report of the committee. The Senator says that we should pass this bill to-night. That is the difference between the Senator and myself. I am not willing to vote for measures merely because some committee has recommended them. I want to satisfy my own conscience and my own judgment that the measures are right and the policies reflected in them are sound and for the welfare of our country. It is the duty of Senators to familiarize themselves with proposed legislation and to exercise their own judgment with respect thereto. It is particularly important at the present time that appropriation bills should be examined with the utmost care. We are appropriating hundreds of millions of dollars more than we are deriving from our revenues. We are plunging the country into debt and making expenditures with a prodigality that is inconceivable in the light of the economic and industrial conditions of our country.

I conceive it to be my duty to fight bills that I think are wrong, and I shall not be deterred in my opposition to measures because of unjust charges or unfounded criticism. I have repeatedly stated since this bill has been before the Senate, and I have stated it as clearly as I knew how, in the report which I have just offered, that I was in favor of an agreement between nations for a limitation of armaments, but that in the absence of such agreement I would heartily support a naval program that would provide this Republic with an adequate modern navy.

In the report which I have submitted I recommended a scientific, modern, fighting, efficient navy. The recommendations submitted involve an expenditure of between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000. When completed we would have the most efficient Navy in the world. Japan's naval power would not be more than 50 per cent of that which we would enjoy.

In the face of these recommendations, the Senator says that I seek to destroy the Navy, and he intimates that I am championing the cause of some other nation and have favored a policy of permitting Great Britain to protect the United States. The statements of the Senator are so unfair and so unfounded as to do an injustice to his own virtues and his sense of right and fair play. The Senator says that he "believes in America"; the implication is that because I do not support this bill in all of its particulars that I do not. It is not necessary to reply to this innuendo. It is easy to declare one's patriotism to his country. I feel sure that I am best serving my country in pursuing the course which I am advocating. The Senator would swallow without any change whatever an antiquated program and a policy condemned by some of the greatest naval experts in the world.

The pending bill carries into effect a program devised five years ago. We have learned much since then in naval warfare. The 1915 program paid but scant attention to submarines and seemed to be utterly oblivious to the importance of fighting air machines. The Senator is perhaps unaware of the fact that some of the greatest naval experts, since the lessons of the war have been made known, have declared that the capital ship of the future is not the battleship or the battle cruiser, which constitute the body of the 1915 naval program, but the fast plane carrier that conveys airships over the seas and contains decks and mechanism permitting their being launched into the air, there to do deadly and destructive work against foes either upon land or upon sea. The Senator and others ignore the lessons of the war, close their eyes to the experiences through which the warring nations have just passed, and propose to execute an obsolete plan without modification, at a cost of a billion dollars to the United States. The naval program which I have recommended would provide a better Navy and a more efficient Navy and a more powerful Navy than the one which the Senator is so loudly clamoring for. I would not say that he is not the friend of America because of his advocacy of an archaic and more or less obsolete Navy.

Admiral Fullam, one of the most distinguished American naval officers, testified before the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate and he condemned the 1915–16 program. He insisted that it was a one-plane program—that is, that it gave us a navy which, if not obsolete, was obsolescent, and one which was not adequate or suitable for this Nation. He insisted that we should have a "three-plane" Navy, and that it was the height of folly to expend $1,000,000,000 upon a navy which when complete would not be modern or suited to naval warfare. He recommended the completion of the six battleships, which were more than 70 per cent complete, but opposed the completion of any battle cruisers. I have gone beyond this distinguished admiral and have recommended that we complete one battle cruiser. He contended that we should devise a program that would give us a fighting force in the air and a fighting Navy beneath the surface of the sea. Sir Percy Scott and other recognized naval authorities have supported a naval program of this character. I am in favor of a modern, scientific, up-to-date naval program. Those who are violently and fatuously and stubbornly supporting the 1915 naval program are reactionary and behind the times, and their criticisms of those of us who oppose that policy and offer a better and superior one will, in my opinion, find little response among thoughtful, patriotic American citizens. I have mentioned a number of times, but the statements of the Senator compel me to repeat, that Great Britain, applying the lessons of the war, has abandoned the building of battleships and battle cruisers. She had four battle cruisers upon the stocks when the armistice was signed, and destroyed three and completed but one. Great Britain is not spending, as the Senator states, more money for naval construction than the United States, nor is it true that Japan is spending as much or more as the United States. The facts are that our naval-construction program calls for nearly 300 per cent more than the amount which Japan proposes to spend.

I have no doubt, however, that the belligerent attitude of some Americans and some Senators and the menacing and warlike talk that echoes here in this Chamber and elsewhere in the United States will result in Great Britain and Japan revising their naval programs and will induce them to spend more than they had planned to devote to naval purposes during the current and future years.

When we declare that they are "rivals on sea," and that "war is imminent," and that they are a "menace to our peace," we must expect that this hostile attitude will react against us and result in their pursuing a naval and military policy more extensive and elaborate than they desire or have contemplated. When we talk war and when we denounce other nations and declare that they are our rivals and are menacing us and that war is imminent, we must expect that other nations will become alarmed and feel constrained to adopt measures which they conceive to be essential for their protection.

Mr. President, the Senator takes the incongruous and inconsistent position of asserting that, having declared in the act of August, 1916, in favor of the President of the United States appointing a commission to confer with other nations for the purpose of limiting armaments, we have done all that duty to humanity requires, and that we may sit quietly by and wait for other nations to seek a conference with us, and that if they fail it is our duty to continue arming and building warships and taxing the country billions of dollars for military and naval armaments.

Mr. President, the inconsistency of that position is reflected in the fact that the Senator himself voted for the League of Nations notwithstanding the act of 1916, to which he refers, which he says foreclosed us from doing anything else until advances were made by other nations. He voted to join the League of Nations and to adopt a plan of disarmament. Because we failed to enter the League of Nations, to do our part there for disarmament, his contention is that our duty is ended, and we must wait for other nations to come to us. Have they not come to us? Were we not importuned to enter the League of Nations? Did not the League of Nations communicate with this Government, and ask that even in a consultative capacity we send representatives to confer with the committee or the commission that was seeking to bring about a reduction in armaments?

I entirely agree with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] when he expressed last evening regret that the President of the United States did not respond to that invitation that we should join with the nations of the world, members of the League of Nations, for the purpose of their securing a reduction in the military and naval armaments of the world. I presume that President Wilson felt that he ought not to embarrass the next administration by adopting a policy which it might oppose. In other words, he wanted to leave to President Harding a clear field to determine the international policy which should be pursued by the United States with respect to the League of Nations and all cognate questions, including disarmament or a reduction of armament. But, Mr. President, that is not all. The League of Nations, including Japan and Great Britain, though we were not members of the league, and signified no purpose to join with them in disarming, appointed a commission, as I have stated, for the purpose of adopting or recommending a plan for disarmament. What have we done? What are we doing to evidence to the world a desire to disarm? It is true that we passed a resolution last evening which signifies our willingness to consider this question.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. REED. The Senator asked the question, "What are we doing?" and he prefaced it by the statement that the League of Nations invited us to enter into a scheme of disarmament. I can answer the Senator. We are trying to carry out a program which was adopted before this war, and which will increase the United States Navy so that it will not be helpless. What are they doing? Since the League of Nations was formed Japan has been increasing her naval force as fast as men and her money will do it. Since the League of Nations was formed and since the resolution was passed England has been pursuing exactly the same policy as Japan. Since the League of Nations was formed, and since the resolution referred to by the Senator was passed, France has been strengthening her Army, and the papers told us in last night's telegrams that she was preparing to invade Germany. So it appears that notwithstanding they have their blessed League of Nations all to themselves, to play with as they please, every one of them is increasing her armament, and not one of them dreams of relying upon this dream.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri was one of the first men in public life in the United States to lift his powerful and eloquent voice against the League of Nations. He has fought it with a consistency, and ability, and I was about to say with a bitterness, but I shall not use that term, that does credit to his skill as a parliamentarian, as a great debater, and as a protagonist of any cause. I differ from the Senator from Missouri upon this question. I believe that my friend from Missouri took a view of the League of Nations that was not entirely warranted. His opposition undoubtedly contributed to the strength attained by the anti-League movement in the United States, and he can be credited with having aided in compassing the defeat of the Versailles treaty in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri calls the League of Nations a dream. If it is a dream it is a noble dream. The enduring and worthy things of life have been the result of dreams and visions and ideals. When there is no vision the people perish. This was said of old by one who spake with prophetic voice. It was true then; it is true now. Men of vision and of ideals and who respond to the inspiration of a power greater than man are needed in this hour when the problems of the World War remain to be solved and questions affecting the present and future welfare of humanity demand intelligent and wise consideration.

The practical and utilitarian man is likewise needed. The post-war problems can not be solved by the mere announcement of precepts no matter how beautiful they may be or the policies of mere doctrinaires. There must be, of course, big men to deal with these big problems; men who know the philosophy of life, the psychology of human nature, and who have a comprehension of the concrete and utilitarian things that lie in our pathway. But no man can bring order to this distracted world and lift humanity out of their despair and chaos who fails to appreciate the great moral and vital powers which lie at the base of genuine progress and definite, enduring advancement.

A league of nations is not a wild and visionary scheme or the product of a disordered mind. Some of the most practical statesmen and leaders who have guided humanity have earnestly sought the establishment of a league of nations. Practical men, guided by high ideals, inspired by the thought of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, will sooner or later put into operation a plan which will result in a league of nations or a practical working scheme of international cooperation which will secure disarmament and the substitution of courts and judicial tribunals for the sword and the battle fields. The future is full of promise and the dreamers and the prophets and the inspired of God will lead humanity to higher planes of service and of achievement.

It implies no lack of devotion to a strong and proper spirit of nationalism to support a policy looking to international fellowship and international agreements. Already there are hundreds of international organizations cooperating and working for the welfare of the peoples of all countries. Of course, no one desires what Dr. Butler has described as a "colloidal" internationalism. National integrity and national prerogatives must be preserved, but their preservation does not forbid international union in the interest of peace and the happiness and welfare of all. The work of great men, of the spiritual leaders and philosophers and idealists of the world, have furnished the charts and the compass which have guided humanity. It was Pericles who said to the Athenians, "The whole earth is a sepulcher of famous men, and their glory is graven not only in stone but on their native earth, and lives on far away without visible symbol, woven into the stuff of other men's lives." The great poet of democracy, Walt Whitman, spoke with inspiration when he said that what the past was not, the future will be.

The Senator refers to the fact that notwithstanding the League of Nations, nations are arming and "not one of them dreams of relying on the dream of the league." Mr. President, no one believed that the world could pass from the shadows of the war into the sunlight of peace without convulsions and serious difficulties and perhaps conflicts. Time, no matter what agreements might have followed the war, was and is necessary to bring adjustment and to secure international confidence and the necessary cooperation for peace and amity. In my opinion, however, if the United States had entered the league, its work would have been far more efficient and the progress of the world toward peace and readjustment would have been infinitely greater. It was not contended that the league would immediately bring international good will and perfect peace. Everyone recognized that suspicions and national antipathies would persist to a greater or less degree and for an indefinite period, but it was felt that an international organization functioning along legitimate and proper lines, would be an effective agency toward world harmony and world regeneration.

The principles of international law announced by Grotius did not immediately bring the benefits and blessings which international law are calculated to secure, but there has been improvement in international relations as a wider acquaintance with the principles of international law has been obtained. And a union between nations to secure peace and disarmament and to promote the welfare of the people of the world can not immediately, following its organization, realize all that was hoped in its behalf and which in the very nature of things could only be realized in the future.

It must also be remembered that there were serious matters to be undertaken by the league, and the settlement of questions committed to it every reasonable person anticipated would result in temporary disturbances and possible controversies if not conflicts.

The conditions in Europe are not in my judgment an argument against the wisdom and feasibility of a League of Nations. Rather they furnish reasons for an efficient and suitable international organization. The Senator, I believe, is in error when he states that none of the members of the league dreams of relying upon what the Senator denominates "a dream." All members of the league are anxious for this Nation to take its place with them in the league in order that the purposes for which it was organized may be fully realized. And they are developing the plans of the league and putting them into operation. Most nations are longing for peace and disarmament and for world cooperation. With or without a league it was to have been expected that the enforcement of the terms of the Versaille treaty would result in controversy and perhaps resentments. Everywhere statesmen who have advocated a league have realized that occasions might arise when force would be required in order to preserve the peace of the world. No one denies the practical statemanship of Theodore Roosevelt. He declared in his Nobel prize speech that the League of Nations, the formation of which he advocated, should provide to enforce its decrees and to compel recalcitrant nations by force to maintain the peace of the world.

Mr. President, the Senator asks, "What is France doing? What is Japan doing? What is England doing?" He points mately 800,000 men, and is, as he says, ready to invade Gerto the fact that France now has a standing army of approximany. We sent our boys oversea, Mr. President, and they fought with the sons of France in a common cause, for a common victory, and they gave their lives as French boys did in defense of liberty and the cause of civilization. When the armistice was signed one would think from the attitude of the Senator from Missouri that our task in Europe was ended; that we ought to have hastily withdrawn therefrom and left our allies to work out the problems which victory necessarily produced. I will not say that such a course as that would have been cowardly, but it certainly would not have been the course that should have been taken by a just nation which had joined with other nations to maintain a great issue and to defend an undying cause.

President Roosevelt, in one of the last speeches delivered, called attention to what our duty would be when the war should end. He said it was the duty of the Allies, including the United States, to seek for the stabilization of Europe, preserve Poland and other nations resulting from the war, enforce the indemnities imposed upon the Central Empires and their allies, see that France obtained Alsace-Lorraine, expel the Turks from Europe, and discharge other imperative post-war obligations. He never suggested that we should desert our allies. We refused to ratify the treaty of Versailles, and it is insisted now by some that we have no concern in European affairs and in questions arising out of the war. Have we done our duty to our own country, to our allies, and to the world? Is there no obligation resting upon this Nation to aid in consolidating the results of the war? Shall we condemn the league or France for their endeavors to carry out the provisions of the treaty? Because we have declined to ratify it, shall it be an act of offense upon the part of France and Great Britain and others of our allies for them to attempt to compel Germany to comply with her solemn obligations?

France feels compelled, with the aid of some of the allied nations, to act against Germany for the enforcement of the treaty of Versailles. I do not know what the Senator from Missouri would do. I do not know what he thinks France should do. Certainly he can not contend, nor can anyone, that France should abandon the terms of the Versailles treaty and allow Germany to repudiate her agreement and claim immunity from the obligations which the treaty imposes upon her. France is justified in maintaining an army until Germany gives clear and satisfactory evidence of her purpose to carry out the treaty or until arrangements shall be entered into that will be entirely satisfactory to her and to the other signatories to the treaty.

The Senator says, "What is England doing?" And he intimated, as I understood his position, as did also the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], that Great Britain is now spending large sums in her naval building. I have not time to call attention to the numerous papers and documents which I have here to prove that Great Britain is not building a single capital ship. She is abandoning that policy, and has indicated by her representatives that if the United States desires to have a larger navy than Great Britain the United States is entirely welcome to that luxury.

Reference has been made to Japan. The Senator says that Japan is building ships "just as fast as she can." Let me read to the Senate an editorial from the Scientific American, under date of February 12, 1921. The editorial is entitled "Disarmament of the British Navy," and is as follows:

DISARMAMENT OF THE BRITISH NAVY.

Although we are most heartily in favor of a universal reduction of naval and military armaments, we deplore the fact that there has been, and is to-day, much confused and misleading speech and writing upon this momentous subject. Some of this confusion of thought is unintentional and due to lack of knowledge, but too much of it is intentionally misleading and deliberate. If we are to get anywhere in this discussion we must start with clearly ascertained facts and proceed by sincere and logical reasoning.

That very small minority in our Navy Department which would like to see the United States spend about $1,000,000,000 in building "incomparably the most powerful fleet in the world" has endeavored to give the impression that a great naval shipbuilding competition is in progress between the other leading navies and ourselves. Now, as regards the British Navy this is absolutely untrue. If there be any naval race we have the course entirely to ourselves, for Great Britain is doing no new shipbuilding whatsoever, and relatively to our own fleet that of Great Britain is not so powerful as it was before the war. To be clear upon this point, let us consider the past seven years and the losses of the British by war and by the breaking up and sale of ships since the armistice.

During the war Great Britain lost out of her fighting fleet over 600,000 tons, or two-thirds as much tonnage as there was in the United States fleet in 1914. The facts regarding this tremendous depletion of her navy are to be found in a pamphlet published by our Office of Naval Intelligence, entitled "Information concerning the United States Navy and Other Navies." From this we learn that her losses by mine, submarine, shell fire, and other causes were as follows: Three battle cruisers, including the super battle cruiser Queen Mary (63,000 tons); 13 battleships, including the 23,000-ton dreadnaught Audacious, and the 19,250-ton dreadnaught Vanguard (201,000 tons); 10 armored cruisers (151,000 tons); 9 light cruisers (51,500 tons); 6 monitors (8,125 tons); 67 destroyers (50,500 tons); 52 submarines (37,000 tons); and 22 sloops (26,000 tons). The total, including other smaller craft, is over 600,000 tons. Added to these was a loss of 37 merchant auxiliaries, including many ships of from 12,000 to 18,000 tons, which brings the total loss to nearly three-quarters of a million tons.

To make good these losses and to keep pace with the demands of the war, she took in hand a large program of new construction. But when victory was assured and the world menace of the German fleet had been removed, all outstanding contracts were canceled, except in the case of certain vessels of the smaller types that were near completion; and a large number of ships, including three sister ships to the 42,000-ton battle cruiser Hood, were broken up on the stocks and sold as junk. * * * As a matter of fact, it is some seven and a half years since the British Admiralty laid down a battleship, and of light craft not one has been ordered since the fall of 1918.

Furthermore, in agreement with her conviction that the war was indeed over and a period of peace and reduction of armaments was at hand, Great Britain struck off from her active list practically the whole of her big fleet of prewar dreadnaught battleships, her armored cruisers, her protected cruisers, and a large number of destroyers, submarines, and other smaller craft, the list totaling about 150 ships that were either retired, sold, or broken up. Not only this, but she has tentatively condemned all of her capital ships that are armed with guns of 12-inch caliber or less; and although she has still on the list 26 dreadnaught battleships, several of these that are armed with a 12-inch gun are in reserve or have been delegated to minor duties as practice ships, gun-training ships, etc.

Another point, which is perhaps the most significant of all and one which will be fully appreciated by all naval men, is that in her whole fleet there is only one ship, the Hood, which embodies in its construction and arrangements the enormous amount of technical information gleaned from the Battle of Jutland, information which was loyally passed on to the experts of her ally, the United States. Had she gone ahead with her program as we have done, she would to-day have in her fleet three additional ships of the Hood class; her fleet of light cruisers would have been greatly increased; and she would have added over 100 ships to her fleet of destroyers and submarines, all of these vessels embodying the lessons of the war and particularly those of the Jutland engagement.

We think we have made it clear that in this matter of disarmament Great Britain has already taken the lead, since she has not only greatly reduced her existing navy, but for two years past has refrained from laying down any new warships. Here was a lead in naval disarmament which we might very well have followed, and those of us who are keeping our heads clear of international suspicions and hatreds, and are looking at facts as they are, must feel that there is no little truth in the following statement of the British Naval and Military Record: "Had the United States followed our lead in effecting such sweeping reductions in naval material, the world would not now be faced with the prospect of a new era of naval rivalry. It is practically certain that but for the American decision to complete not merely all the vessels authorized by the 1916 program but nearly all the destroyers, submarines, etc., ordered under the emergency war programs, Japan would not have introduced her 1920–1928 navy bill, thus giving a new and powerful impetus to international competition."

I call attention particularly to the last paragraph, which refers to the effect upon Japan of our naval program calling for more than $1,000,000,000.

Mr. President, Count Ishii, speaking for Japan, recently said:

At the recent assembly of the League of Nations at Geneva the Japanese delegates supported a resolution on the subject of disarmament, but in the matter of immediate realities the Japanese Government is most desirous of reaching a solution which would end the race in armaments for all time. If the United States will ally itself with the great naval powers to establish a "naval holiday" Japan will be among the first to agree to it.

Reference has been made to the expenditures of Japan for her navy. I have here, Mr. President, the Financial and Economic Annual of Japan for the year 1919, which contains the appropriations made by Japan since the year 1905 for her army and navy, and a perusal of this—and I will not take the time to read it—shows how pitifully small have been appropriations made by Japan for her navy, measured by the stupendous appropriations which we have made and are now making for the Navy of the United States.

I submit that the naval officers of the Navy Department have failed to give to the Senate of the United States and to Congress that full and complete information which is essential to enable Congress to wisely and properly deal with the naval program.

Admiral Sims states that the report of the General Naval Board, which is a defense of the 1916 program, "is very largely mistaken. It looks to me very much like a report the arguments of which are drawn up to prove what they originally believed."

In my opinion this is a condemnation of the pending bill, or, at least, a disapproval of the naval policy which this bill seeks to fasten upon the country. Mr. President, without reading, I ask to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial from the Scientific American under date of February 26, 1921.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

A NAVY EQUAL TO ANY OTHER.

The report of the Senate Naval Committee contains not a word of sympathy with the request of a war-weary world to be relieved, at least in some measure, of the burden of naval and military armaments under which it labors. To have recognized the widespread prevalence of its plea, which has been fully as vocal in these United States as elsewhere, would have shown that the committee was alive to the untold miseries and sorrows of the world and was in responsive sympathy with the present attitude of American people whom it represents.

The report confines itself strictly to technical matters, and it contains three outstanding features. First it warns the country against being carried away by exaggerated statements as to the relative value of battleships as against airplanes and submarines. With this attitude of the General Board and the Senate Naval Committee we are in most thorough accord. For the present, and probably for many a year to come, the battleship will dominate the situation.

The second outstanding feature of the report is the statement that "this country should maintain a navy at least equal to that of any other power." At one time this statement would have been fraught with danger to the peace of the world; for during the years when the German Navy was looming up as a threat to the insular security of Great Britain, it was the avowed policy of that country to maintain a navy superior to that of any other power. The removal of the German peril, coupled with the feeling of comradeship and understanding which was developed by our own and the British Navy during the war, has so far changed the situation that Great Britain seems willing to make an exception in the case of the Navy of the United States. Certain British statesmen and naval men have indeed asserted that they would view without any misgiving the creation of a United States Navy that was equal in strength to her own. It is true that in its statement that we should possess a navy equal to any other the General Board of the Navy is announcing an entirely new policy, so far as any public utterance emanating from that board is concerned. Be that as it may, the acceptance by Great Britain of the new standard removes any danger of international complications; and a friendly cooperation of the two navies may well prove a powerful influence for the maintenance of peace and the general security of traffic on the high seas.

So far, so good. But when we consider the third recommendation of this report, to the effect that we should continue the construction of the whole of the 1916 program, we feel it our duty to utter a strong word of protest; first, because, as we showed last week, the completion of the full program would not only make our Navy equal to that of any other but immeasurably stronger, and therefore we should be committed to a vast expenditure of moneys which would carry our Navy far beyond the standard which is here definitely laid down by the General Board.

And this leads us to reiterate our demand on the part of the taxpayers of the United States that we complete only the four 16-inch gun battleships of the Maryland class and the six battle cruisers of the Constellation class, and that we at once discontinue work on the six 43,000-ton battleships of the Indiana class and concentrate our new constructive efforts upon additional scouts, upon flotilla leaders, and upon airplane carriers, thereby rounding out our Navy. This program will give us by 1924 a fleet that is not only somewhat larger in displacement and gun power than the British fleet, but one which, because of its very modern construction and its inclusion of all the lessons learned during the war will possess a decided fighting superiority in capital ships over the British fleet, a fact which the General Board can not deny. If we hold up the work on the six Indianas upon which only a mere commencement has been made, we shall still have 860,000 tons against Great Britain's 808,000 tons, and our gun energy will be 20,500,000 foot-tons against Great Britain's 19,000,000 foot-tons. Furthermore, the bulk of our fighting line will consist of thoroughly modern ships; whereas the best of the British ships, with the single exception of the Hood, will be from 8 to 10 years old, and therefore will be obsolescent and outclassed. These significant truths should be embodied in this report. Why are they omitted?

These facts are not known to the average taxpayer, and unless they are clearly brought out on the floor of the Senate and the House they will not be understood by the majority of the Members of Congress. They are perfectly well known to the General Board, and they should be equally well known to the members of the Senate committee. In all fairness, then, to the country whose interests have been committed in all good faith to the committees of the Senate and the House and to the Members of Congress as a whole, it should be clearly stated that the building of these six huge ships at a cost of nearly $250,000,000 will be superflous, extravagant, and a deliberate advance beyond the standard of strength definitely called for by the most experienced experts of our Navy as represented by the General Board. The argument that to stop work on these six ships would be a wasteful extravagance is not borne out by the facts. Very little has been done, and what has been built in the way of castings for turbines and generators and motors and the laying of keel plates will suffer no deterioration if it be allowed to rest for a while until the time is ripe for the completion of these ships.

[Senate Report No. 766, part 2, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session.]

SUSPENSION OF THE UNITED STATES NAVAL CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM.

MINORITY REPORT BY MR. KING.

I am unable to concur in the majority report submitted on February 9. Within the limits of this report it will be impossible to present all the reasons which impel me to withhold my assent from the majority report.

On January 25 the Senate passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be, and is hereby, directed to report to the Senate whether in its opinion it is practical and also a sound policy to suspend our naval building program now in progress for the period of six months to the end that a full investigation and free discussion may be had as to what constitutes a modern fighting navy—a navy with the types of ships and with the air and submarine weapons that would be most effective in the strategy and tactics of future war on the sea; and also to the end that we may avail ourselves in the matter, both as to economy and efficiency, of any possible agreement between naval powers providing for the reduction of armaments.

"Resolved further, That said committee report to the Senate such data and information (not already printed and made public) as the said committee has had before it for consideration relative to the probable value of surface ships in future naval warfare."

The following day the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs referred the resolution to the Secretary of the Navy.

On the 22d of January, a few days prior thereto, the Secretary addressed a letter to the General Board of the Navy, in which he stated that Congress was not disposed to authorize the construction of any more capital ships, due to the amount of construction in hand, and that the question as to the type of ship which should form the main strength of navies in the future was being extensively discussed both in America and England, and the board was requested to take this matter into consideration and report on the general subject early in February.

There is nothing to indicate that the Senate resolution was ever before the General Board of the Navy, nor was it requested to specifically report thereon.

On February 2 the General Board made a report to the Secretary of the Navy, which the Secretary, so far as the record discloses, regarded as a complete response to the inquiries contained in the Senate resolution, and on the same day he transmitted the report to the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee.

The attitude and views of the General Board of the Navy on the general question of the naval program were well known. It is not believed that the Senate desired to have solely the views of the General Board, when the Committee on Naval Affairs was requested to report upon the various matters referred to in the resolution. The report of the board consists mainly of an argument in favor of the capital ship as the "paramount type of naval vessel"; and it assumes to call the proposal for the arrest or suspension of the big ship program a policy of "surprise, ruse, dodging, and strategem" as against a policy of "knockout blows."

Generally speaking, this report might have been prepared five or six years ago and reveals a predetermination to adhere to a program fashioned in 1915 and crystallized into law in 1916, without giving due weight to the lessons of the recent war and the development of the submarine, torpedo, mines, and the multitudinous forms of aerial warfare.

Speaking of the report of the General Board, Admiral Sims stated:

"I think the report is very largely mistaken. It looks to me very much like a report the arguments of which are drawn up to prove what they originally believed. It looks to me like a document of that kind. As I stated informally a little while ago, so conservative are military people in their attitude toward new incidents that that is the first development we always have."

I respectfully submit that the criticism of Admiral Sims of the report of the General Board is entirely warranted, and in view of the antiquity of some of the positions therein assumed, justifies incredulity as to its merits, if not positive opposition to its conclusions, in the minds of those who are seeking a wise and prudent naval policy for the United States.

It is respectfully submitted that the committee failed to answer the terms of the resolution calling for a report as to the "economy and efficiency of any possible agreement between naval powers providing for the reduction of armaments."

In my opinion it was not alone sufficient to report the material disadvantages, if any, that would result from a suspension of the naval building program for a period of six months. The vital question, indeed, is the possibility of agreement between naval powers that will result in the reduction of armaments. That such an agreement would result in "economy," if not "efficiency," must be manifest to every fair investigator. The burdens resting upon the people of the United States, growing out of naval and military armaments, are intolerable, and the financial condition of the Government calls for immediate relief from further staggering demands for such purposes. This vital matter relating to the "economy and efficiency" that would result from a possible agreement between naval powers to secure the reduction of armaments, I repeat, was not considered by the committee, nor was any testimony sought or obtained relating to such question or to the possibility of such an agreement between the naval powers of the world. The majority report declares that the—

"Committee are as anxious to bring about a reduction of armament and relief from the burdens which those armaments impose upon the nations of the earth as anyone can be, but no disarmament would be of any value unless it was general, and in the cases of great maritime powers universal disarmament. Unhappily this is not the case at the present time, and we must deal with the conditions as they exist."

This statement seems to indicate a disbelief in the possibility of a reduction of armaments, or relief from the burdens thereby imposed upon the people. No testimony was taken by the committee justifying such a position, and no reasons are assigned in the committee's report for conclusions so strongly announced. I concede, however, that one witness who appeared before the committee, an admiral of ability and distinction, did testify in harmony with the committee's report. His position was that the development of international law and international morality would not lead to disarmament or promote world peace. He stated:

"All this talk of disarmament is absolutely and scientifically wrong. It is not in accordance with the teachings of history. It is euphemistic to start with, and any argument that can be made against unpreparedness can be made against disarmament. * * * Disarmament in a great country always precedes a toboggan slide every time. That is the first symptom."

In reply to this statement, a member of the committee suggested that the sentiments expressed "command a very able advocate in Bernhardi."

The witness replied that as a military man he found his argument based upon history. He further stated that—

"Anything that can reasonably be done to prevent war is a splendid thing; but that reduction of armament would not tend to that end."

The witness was then asked the following question:

"Q. So you don't look forward then to any decrease whatever in the burdens of the peoples of the world of maintaining these great armaments; you feel that those have got to be borne, and they have got to be increased continuously; you do not look for any relief whatever in that direction?"

The reply of the admiral was as follows:

"A. I will put it this way—I do not like to appear as a prophet, but will say that according to history that is the way it has always been. If there is anything to change the current of history, then, of course, that will have a bearing."

The admiral further stated that he did not believe that a reduction of armaments was possible even "though nations should enter into agreements to that effect, because the agreement would not last very long"; he thought "it might last 20 years."

The following question was then propounded to the witness:

"Q. If wars have existed from the dawn of history while Governments have been armed, don't you think if they fail to arm, or if they reduce their armaments, or enter into an agreement for disarmament, that it might result in a cessation of war?"

This reply was given:

"A. No; I am absolutely sure, as far as I can be sure of anything in the future, and I am only basing it upon 5,000 years of history, and that is a good deal."

Further questions were propounded to the admiral, and his answers thereto are as follows:

"Q. In short, you find no chances to escape from the burden of competitive armament?—A. I would like to see the burden made as light as possible, Senator, but I do not see—on looking at it in the light of history and the way in which we are going now; competition among the people and the tendency of overseas trade—there is hope for cessation of war.

"Q. If you think that an agreement for the reduction of armaments would be entirely ineffective, you must equally agree that an agreement for the purpose of not increasing armaments—that is, holding them stable—would be equally ineffective. Am I right?—A. I am afraid it would be ineffective.

"Q. So that the necessary conclusion at which we must arrive is that there is no possible escape from the burden of competitive armaments, and you can see no relief whatever in any line from the rivalry in which we are now engaged?—A. I am sorry to say it, but I think so.

"Q. And that would mean that we have to continue our naval and military burdens indefinitely?—A. I think so."

The committee's report seems to be founded upon the view of this distinguished admiral, and fails to take into account, as I view the case, conditions and factors existent in the world which introduce meliorating currents and moral forces that compel a judgment at variance with that expressed by the board and the committee.

This view seems to be that the war taught no lesson except that savagery and sanguinary struggles are eternal; that the moral forces in the world are too feeble to establish justice and usher in a reign of righteousness and peace; and that humanity is predestined to walk in the darkness to a tragic end.

This view is a negation of the vital and progressive forces in the world, and forever condemns mankind to Sysiphian struggles. The report, in one aspect, proceeds upon the erroneous assumption that the resolution proposed to abandon battleships, and the majority of the committee proceeds upon the assumption that the question for determination is one primarily of the abandonment of the battleship, rather than supplementing that type of vessel by other craft operating in the air and in the sea. This misconception of the resolution has resulted in the failure of the committee to respond to the question implied in the resolution. It is not the part of probity and good judgment to ignore the fact that the science of naval architecture and armament has been constantly progressing, and we may not even now say that the ultimate type in any arm of the service has been developed. The report of the General Board is a slavish adherence to the past and betrays a determination to regard with jealousy, if not disdain, the unmistakable lessons brought to our attention by the recent war and the scientific investigations more recently made by those who believe in the future of aeronautics and in the primacy of submarines and submersible types of vessels. It is bureaucratic and reflects bureaucratic influences and policies.

Emphasis is laid upon the fact that the battleship is the basis of sea power; that it is paramount, and "that nothing that occurred during the World War has served to change the opinion of the General Board as to the vital importance in war of the battleship."

In my opinion, the report of the General Board is the plea of an advocate in defense of a policy rather archaic in conception and at variance in some respects, at least, with facts and experiences developed at a later period.

A careful review of this report leads to but one conclusion, that battleships constitute the principal unit of sea power, and that we must continue their construction in increasing numbers notwithstanding the enormous cost. It is admitted that if there is no agreement between nations to limit armaments, then, in addition to the Navy projected by the General Board, we must expend hundreds of millions of dollars for submarines and torpedo boats and the various forms of aircraft employed in naval warfare. It would seem from the report that the lessons of the war called only for greater expenditures for naval warfare.

Giant dreadnaughts of more than 43,000 tons and costing tens of millions of dollars are to be built, but the board concedes they are impotent, or at least inadequate, without battle cruisers costing still more, and also various other types of surface craft, submarines, and airplanes.

A one-plane navy, the report is compelled to admit, is incomplete, and it discusses torpedo-carrying aircraft and bombing planes and submarines and concedes them an humble place as auxiliaries of the battleships, but, as I have indicated, does not ascribe to them that important place in naval warfare which the facts demonstrate that they occupy.

I repeat, in my opinion, the report of the General Board is reactionary, not only in its consideration of the future of naval warfare, but in its complete disregard of all those social and moral factors which are powerfully operating in the world to-day.

I have stated that the science of naval architecture is progressive and that a blind devotion to past types is fatal. On December 11, 1906, His Majesty's ship Dreadnaught was commissioned. It was the product of Lord Fisher's constructive genius, and was hailed as the most powerful naval vessel in the world, though it carried only ten 12-inch guns and had a displacement of but 17,900 tons and a speed of 21¼ knots. This vessel became the type of the modern single-caliber big-gun battleship. In our own Navy the battleships Connecticut, Georgia, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Louisiana, and Virginia, which were commissioned in 1906, and the Arkansas, Minnesota, Wyoming, and Vermont, which were commissioned in 1907; the New Hampshire, commissioned in 1908; and the Michigan and South Carolina, which were commissioned in 1910, were all mixed-caliber battleships, and upon the standard of the new dreadnaught type established by Great Britain in 1906 were obsolete vessels at the time they were commissioned. This is a direct example of the mistaken policy in pressing naval construction in ignorance of contemporary improvements in naval architecture and standard naval types.

It was August 31, 1911, before the Utah, the first American dreadnaught, was commissioned. This was nearly five years after the commission of the first British dreadnaught. There are now eight of these dreadnaughts in commission, the Utah, Florida, Delaware, North Dakota, Wyoming, Arkansas, New York, and the Texas. The displacement of the Utah was 21,195 tons. Since then we have the superdreadnaught of 32,600 tons, and of these superdreadnaughts we now have in commission the New Mexico, Idaho, Nevada, Pennsylvania, Arizona, Oklahoma, Mississippi, and Tennessee.

I do not agree with the General Board and the committee that the naval program of 1916 should be carried out, nor do I accept the view that a suspension, or at least a partial suspension, of that program would be unwise, or that efforts should not be made to bring about a reduction in armaments, not only in the United States, but throughout the world; and I submit a few reasons in support of my position.

First, let me invite attention to the 1916 program. In 1915, the General Board of the Navy "devised and recommended" a naval program; it was based upon the then existing types of naval vessels and the then existing theories of naval warfare. The board did not have the experience and lessons of the war; and the program was devoted to the creation of types of vessels then employed. This program was embodied in the act of August 29, 1916. The intervention of the war and the need of destroyers and submarine chasers to combat the submarine menace and to protect our battleships was so great that the entire construction capacity of the country was directed to the production of these fast craft, as a result of which the program of 1916 was held in abeyance. It is true that during and since the war considerable work has been done upon some of the ships provided by this program; but it is now proposed to proceed with the construction projected in 1915, regardless of its costs or the lessons of the war, and the Navy Department is exercising all possible pressure in order to consummate this purpose.

The act of Congress of 1916 authorized the construction of 10 first-class battleships, at a cost not to exceed $11,500,000 each; 6 battle cruisers, at a cost not to exceed $16,500,000 each; 10 scout cruisers, at a cost not to exceed $5,000,000 each; 50 torpedo-boat destroyers, at a cost not to exceed $1,200,000 each; and 9 fleet submarines, 58 coast submarines, 3 of which were to cost not exceeding $1,200,000 each and a residue not to exceed $700,000 each; 3 fuel ships, at a cost not to exceed $1,500,000 each; 1 repair ship, 1 transport, 1 hospital ship, at a cost not to exceed $2,350,000 each; 2 destroyer tenders, 1 fleet submarine tender, 2 ammunition ships, at a cost not to exceed $2,350,000 each; 2 gunboats, at a cost not to exceed $860,000.

From the hearings before the Senate it developed that all the construction authorized by the acts just referred to has been undertaken, except that the contracts for 12 destroyers, 1 transport, and 6 seagoing submarines have not been let. Admiral Coontz testified that the bureau did not intend to build these, but desired authority to construct two airplane carriers, at a cost of $58,000,000, in their stead.

Though the act of 1916 authorized the construction of 10 battleships, there are 11 under construction, 1 having been previously authorized.

The pertinent fact is that we have now under construction and in various stages of completion 17 capital ships, plans for which were laid down more than five years ago. These ships divide themselves into three groups, as follows:

FIRST GROUP.

Name.	Where building.	State of completion.	Tonnage.	Horsepower.	Knots.
California.....	Mare Island, Calif.....	95.5	32,300	28,500	21
Maryland.....	Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co.	93.0	32,600	28,900	21
Colorado.....	New York Shipbuilding Corporation.	66.7	32,600	28,900	21
Washington....	.....do.....	57.6	32,600	23,900	21
West Virginia..	Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co.	44.5	32,600	28,900	21

The average state of completion of the ships in this group is 71.46 per cent. These ships are of the superdreadnaught type, of approximately equal displacement, horsepower, and speed, and all except the California mount 16-inch guns. The California mounts 14-inch guns. Their completion would give the Navy 21 capital ships of the dreadnaught and superdreadnaught type of the most modern construction and effectiveness, which, with 21 second-class battleships now in commission, would give us a Navy of 42 battleships.

SECOND GROUP.

Name.	Where building.	State of completion.	Tonnage.	Horsepower.	Knots.
South Dakota..	New York Navy Yard.....	22.3	43,200	60,000	23
North Carolina.	Norfolk Navy Yard.....	21.8	43,200	60,000	23
Indiana.....	New York Navy Yard.....	18.2	43,200	60,000	23
Montana.....	Mare Island Navy Yard.....	16.6	43,200	60,000	23
Iowa.....	Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co.	13.1	43,200	60,000	23
Massachusetts..	Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation.	1.2	43,200	60,000	23

The average state of completion of the ships in this group is 15.53 per cent. These battleships are all designed to mount twelve 16-inch guns. They are over 10,000 tons heavier in displacement than the superdreadnaughts in the preceding class, have more than double the horsepower, and only a speed of 2 knots in excess of the five superdreadnaughts in the preceding class. There are no battleships or battle cruisers in the British Navy or the Japanese Navy of equal displacement and power.

THIRD GROUP (BATTLE CRUISERS).

Name.	Where building.	State of completion.	Tonnage.	Horsepower.	Knots.
Saratoga.....	New York Shipbuilding Corporation.	13.3	43,500	180,000	33.25
Lexington.....	Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation.	7.7	43,500	180,000	33.25
Constellation...	Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co.	5.1	43,500	180,000	33.25
Constitution...	Philadelphia Navy Yard.....	2.3	43,500	180,000	33.25
United States..	.....do.....	2.3	43,500	180,000	33.25
Ranger.....	Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co.	1.0	43,500	180,000	33.25

The average state of completion of these battle cruisers is 5.28 per cent.

The part of the program covering the construction of destroyers, submarines, and auxiliaries is comparatively small measured by the cost of the capital ships.

The authorization of Congress in 1916 was for ships, the cost of the most powerful of which was not to exceed $16,500,000, and the execution of the entire program was estimated at approximately $544,700,000. Notwithstanding the limits placed by Congress in the act, appropriations have been made from time to time since then, until they now aggregate approximately $500,000,000, and yet the naval program of 1916 is not complete. In my opinion it will require at least five hundred millions more for the completion of the ships authorized in the act of August 29, 1916, and with their completion, as I shall show later, hundreds of millions of dollars additional will be required for the construction of undersea boats and for airplanes and the necessary naval airships, without which the capital ships would be of but little if any value.

In the hearings before the Senate committee one of the admirals, who was a leading member of the General Board of the Navy, stated that the cost of the capital ships would be $45,000,000 each. Upon this basis the ultimate cost of the 17 capital ships will be $765,000,000. When we add to this vast sum the cost of scout cruisers, torpedo boats, destroyers, submarines, transports, fuel ships, tenders, gunboats, and auxiliaries, it is certain that the further cost for the completion of the 1916 naval program will exceed $1,000,000,000.

But with this expenditure, stupendous as it is, the chapter is not ended. Additional carrier ships at enormous costs will be required, submarines of greater range and power will be imperatively needed, bombing planes, torpedo planes, and scout planes in large numbers will be necessary. A great flotilla of surface ships constituting an auxiliary fleet and the aerial and submarine vessels will cost hundreds of millions additional. More naval bases will be required, larger docks must be added, and hundreds of millions will be spent in harbors and upon naval bases for the protection of this great fleet which is to be created if the policy of the naval board is to continue unchallenged. I assert with the utmost confidence that the 1916 program, plus what will be imperatively needed to properly supplement it, including naval bases, yards, docks, and construction plants, will cost the United States more than $1,500,000,000.

Already it is planned to construct at Alameda, Calif., a naval base, the cost of which will exceed $100,000,000, notwithstanding the fact that there is a suitable base at Mare Island, upon which $30,000,000 have been spent.

Nor is the chapter yet ended. According to the demands of the Navy Department, more than 120,000 officers and men are now required to man the ships already in use. When the naval program is completed at least 25,000 additional men will be required. This item alone will add to the naval budget tens of millions of dollars annually. At least 1,500 officers and men are required to properly man a capital ship. The requisitions of the Navy for the next fiscal year, for maintenance alone, amount to over $500,000,000. It is safe therefore to assume that for the maintenance of the Navy after the completion of the 1916 program an annual expense will be entailed exceeding that stupendous sum. And still the chapter is not closed.

Vessels will become obsolete and tens of millions of dollars will be required annually to replace them. New types will be developed, and their construction will be demanded. A burden so staggering will not be submitted to, in my opinion, by the American people. It is to be noted that the completion of the 1916 building program, even by its projectors, promises no relief from further construction. We know that such a promise would be insincere and absolutely impossible of fulfillment. Indeed, the General Board desires at this time to supplement the 1916 program by adding thereto 3 battleships, 1 battle cruiser, 30 cruisers, 8 gunboats, 18 destroyers, 12 mine-laying submarines, 6 cruiser submarines, 4 airplane carriers, 3 destroyer tenders, and 3 submarine tenders, the cost of which would exceed $600,000,000.

At this point let me say that I am not in favor of "scrapping the Navy"; nor do I support a "little Navy" policy. I believe that our Army should be reduced to the utmost possible limits, but that we should maintain a strong and efficient Navy; but I contend that the policy proposed ignores past experiences and commits the American people to an oppressive burden of taxation, and suggests a course that will subject this Government to criticism upon the part of other nations and to a distrust of our professions of friendship and international good will. Moreover, this projected naval policy will offer obstacles great, if not insuperable, to an agreement between the great powers to secure material reductions in armaments, military and naval, and to create an organization vital and potential in the interest of world peace and for the determination of international controversies.

In my opinion, the five battleships which are approaching completion should be finished. Work upon the remaining battleships, six in number, should be at once discontinued. One cruiser should be completed, but the construction of the remaining five should be suspended, if not wholly discontinued.

We have 300 destroyers. They are modern and the most effective vessels of their class in the world, and are entirely adequate for the present. A few submarines of the largest type are needed. At least one plane carrier, and possibly two, should be constructed within a reasonable time, together with the necessary complement of aircraft. Perhaps some additions of auxiliary craft should be made to the fleet. This program, in my opinion, should suffice for the present. I should add, however, that many of the vessels now on the Navy list should be immediately withdrawn from service.

If this plan were adopted there would be an immediate saving to the Government of between four hundred and fifty and five hundred millions of dollars. The ultimate saving would be very great, amounting to tens of millions of dollars annually. It would result in a reduction of the personnel of the Navy and would subtract tens of millions of dollars annually from the operating expenses of the Navy Department. The upkeep of these huge capital ships is at least $3,000,000 per annum. The British estimate that the annual upkeep of the battle cruiser Hood, which is a smaller vessel than the capital ships projected in the 1916 program, is at least £539,000 per annum.

The capital ships now being constructed are 860 feet in length, and their draft is so great that there are but few harbors wide and deep enough for them to enter. The fuel cost for the capital ships is enormous and the increasing scarcity of oil only adds to the already stupendous costs of operating a fleet of this character.

The 11 battleships now under construction may be divided into two classes, for the purpose of determining the percentage of completion. In the first class there are five vessels which range in state of completion from 44.5 to 95.5 per cent, the average state of which is 71.46 per cent. Four of these vessels, the Colorado, Maryland, Washington, and West Virginia, are being constructed in private yards, and the fifth, the California, which is nearly completed, is being constructed at the Mare Island Navy Yard. In the second class there are six battleships which range in state of completion from 1.2 to 22.3 per cent, the average of which is 15.53 per cent. Four of these vessels, the South Dakota, Indiana, Montana, and North Carolina, are being built in navy yards; the Iowa and Massachusetts in private yards. The Iowa is 13.1 per cent complete and the Massachusetts 1.2 per cent complete. The ultimate cost of these six battleships, which are less than 22.3 per cent complete, upon the basis of forty-five millions per unit, will be at least $370,000,000.

As stated, the first group of battleships, consisting of the California, Maryland, Colorado, Washington, and West Virginia, should be completed. Work upon the second group of battleships should be suspended or discontinued. The average state of completion of the battle cruisers represents two and a fraction per cent of the cost, and the work upon the Ranger is only 1 per cent. My understanding is that the department in estimating the "state of completion" took into account materials on hand but not yet used; indeed, the contracts for a number of the ships have been but recently entered into and the keels of a number have not been laid. Work upon the cruiser Saratoga, which shows 13 per cent state of completion, should be continued, but, as stated, work upon the remaining five cruisers should be suspended.

The six battle cruisers are all of one type. They have a length of 850 feet, a beam of 101 feet 8½ inches, a mean draft of 31 feet, a displacement of 43,500 tons, engines of 180,000 horsepower, and an estimated speed of 33½ knots per hour. The battle cruisers are heavier than any of the 11 battleships under construction, although 6 of the battleships are to have a displacement of 43,200 tons, and 4 of 32,600 tons, and 1 of 32,300 tons. The engine power, however, of the cruisers is to be three times that of the heaviest battleships and more than six times that of the lesser battleships. It is apparent that the battleships, modern as they are, are far outranked in engine power, speed, and general effectiveness by the battle cruisers.

The keels of three of these battle cruisers were laid September 25, 1920, and one was laid in January, 1921. Of course, the purpose of the board is to construct a navy designed to be the greatest and most powerful in the world regardless of cost or of world conditions. The British Navy has but one vessel of the large battle cruiser type, namely, the Hood, which was launched in 1919; it has a displacement of 41,200 tons and is 2,300 tons less than that of the projected American battle cruisers.

The armament of the Hood consists of eight 15-inch guns; whereas, the armament of our projected battle cruisers is to be eight 16-inch guns. The speed of the Hood is 31.5 knots, and the speed of the American battle cruisers is estimated to be 33.25. The British have five other so-called battle cruisers, but they were launched between 1911 and 1916. Their displacement is only 26,500 tons and they carry eight 13½-inch guns. I might add that the British program, devised just before the war, included the construction of four ships of the Hood type, and the keels of all were laid. At the end of the war, the British Admiralty "scrapped" the three keels, notwithstanding $8,170,000 had been expended in work upon them. This action was taken deliberately by the British Admiralty. Undoubtedly their position was influenced, if not controlled, by the experiences and lessons of the war. Yet in the face of the position of the British Admiralty, the Navy Department and General Board insist upon the construction of six battle cruisers exceeding the Hood in displacement, engine power, armament, and speed.

On the basis that these battle cruisers are to have an ultimate cost of $45,000,000, their present average state of completion represents an average outlay of $2,376,000 each. It is altogether likely that the actual outlay is not nearly so great as indicated. The act of 1916 fixed the limit of cost on these cruisers, exclusive of armaments, at $16,500 000. Upon this basis the average state of completion of 5.28 per cent would indicate an average outlay upon each vessel of $87,120.

It is assumed, moreover, that the figures submitted by the Navy Department showing the state of completion of each vessel refer to the completion of the hull and do not include the installation of the armament of the ship; and yet in the face of the fact that the British Admiralty scrapped the keels of three battle cruisers upon which there was an average outlay of $2,733,333 each, the General Board is laying the keels and is proceeding with the construction of six battle cruisers, and insist that there shall be no suspension of work, although the money actually laid out is much less than that expended upon the British vessels.

Another fact should be taken into account in determining whether there should be a suspension of active work under the 1916 program. The cost of construction is very much greater now than it will be within the next two or three years. The contracts let for their construction are based upon the high levels established during and immediately after the war. These high cost levels operate as a disturbing factor in all industrial circles. They are impediments to economic readjustments and obstacles to a return to sound and just business and economic conditions.

The contracts are under the cost-plus plan, a system which has proven in practice to make for waste and extravagance. It would be the part of wisdom, in my opinion, to suspend work upon all of the ships under construction, except the ones to which I have above referred, nor should contracts be let for the construction of those which I have indicated as necessary for the Navy until conditions in our industrial life have materially changed.

It will be, of course, contended that a suspension of work upon the program will involve a considerable loss. The majority report of the committee states that the material loss from a six months' suspension upon the program would be between $15,000,000 and $25,000,000. Admiral Taylor in his testimony supported this view.

Admiral Coontz, when asked what the cost would be if construction were suspended, stated:

"I would have to figure on that, but the contracts have been let and some of the big concerns throughout the country are going ahead and the stuff is pouring in, and the greatest loss would be in the holding up of the contracts. That would have a very great effect. I understand that a number of our biggest concerns are practically depending on these to tide them over until they get more work, but that would be probably the principal effect of it."

This statement is exceedingly interesting. It has been repeatedly charged that munitions factories and steel corporations and plants engaged in building war vessels were behind programs calling for military armaments and big navies. We know that in Germany the Krupps and the manufacturers of steel and war munitions were the most active propagandists in favor of imperialism and world power and mighty armaments and big navies. It is needless to say that the influence of these corporations and those controlling these huge industrial concerns were largely responsible for German militarism and the imperialistic policies of the German Empire; but they came to grief and brought their country to ruin.

We are told now that a number of our "big concerns" are practically "dependent" on these naval contracts. I confess that this reasoning does not commend itself to my approval. These concerns are constructing ships which were to have cost but sixteen and one-half millions (without armament) at a present cost of forty-five millions each, including armament. Their interest, of course, is very great in the execution of the 1916 program. It means undoubtedly millions of dollars profit to the shipbuilders and the armament makers and the steel plants of the United States. Within comparatively few years the cost of battleships has been advanced from $320 to $1,000 per ton.

I submit that even if a suspension of construction of the entire program would result in a loss of $25,000,000, the gains would be very much greater. In the first place, the cost of construction at a later period would be materially diminished. Within a year it should be reduced from 25 to 50 per cent. A suspension of work upon the entire program for six months, even if work were then resumed upon every ship, would save the Government, in my opinion, considerably more than $100,000,000. A number of the ships, it will be remembered, are being constructed in Government yards and the loss there from a suspension of work would be unimportant.

Again referring to the cost of maintaining our Navy, attention is called to the estimates, or rather the requisitions for the fiscal year 1922. These requisitions cover maintenance, exclusive of appropriations for new construction, and amount to $495,515,731.47, and in addition thereto requisitions for the civil establishments of the Navy in the amount of $3,050,040, and requisitions for "permanent annual and indefinite appropriations" of $13,197,696, making an aggregate of $511,763,764.47. In other words, merely for the maintenance of the Navy we are asked to appropriate over half a billion of dollars for the coming year. The amount asked for current construction upon the 1916 program for the next fiscal year is $184,000,000.

The cost of maintaining capital ships now in course of construction is enormous. The indicated horsepower of the six battle cruisers alone aggregates 1,080,000 horsepower, to be produced by the consumption of oil. This in itself is a frightful waste when we consider that the total hydraulic power developed at Niagara Falls, both on the American and Canadian sides of the river, aggregates 697,000 horsepower, and the total potential horsepower at Muscle Shoals, Ala., is 100,000 horsepower primary, and 350,000 horsepower secondary. Millions of money have been expended to produce 697,000 horsepower at Niagara Falls which would otherwise flow to waste, and yet the Navy proposes to expend hundreds of millions of dollars to construct battleships, six of which alone will consume 1,080,000 horsepower, which will not be reproduced in money or goods, but will be utterly wasted, at least in the economic and industrial sense.

The Federal Government has expended but $1,000,000,000 in rivers and harbors from the foundation of the Government until the present time. The great inland waterways and the enormous harbors, important and so essential to our commerce, have received but $1,000,000,000 in more than 130 years. We have expended upon our Navy more than $6,500,000,000 since 1884, and now are asked to assume a burden of from 500 to 750 or 800 millions of dollars for immediate naval construction and a continuing burden of hundreds of millions of dollars annually for the maintenance and development of our naval power.

It might be interesting to know that 16 first-class battleships completed between 1910 and 1917 cost but $167,611,692, and that the 23 battleships completed from 1895 to 1908 cost but $139,222,541; and the cost of all wars in all lands from 1793 to 1860 was but a little over $9,000,000,000.

LESSONS OF THE WAR AND WORLD CONDITIONS NOT PROPERLY APPRAISED BY MAJORITY REPORT.

As I have shown, the report of the General Board is primarily a defense of the capital ship and fails, in my opinion, to properly appreciate what the Navy of the future should be. The board seem to proceed upon the theory that the outstanding lesson of the war is that the capital ship is and will continue to be the paramount naval force. I submit that facts have led naval experts as well as students of naval strategy to a different conclusion. It seems manifest that in any aspect of the case there should be further consideration given to a question so important as that involved in determining our future naval policy. It would not only be supreme folly but it would be a wrong to expend hundreds of millions of dollars, wrung from the people by taxation, for the construction and maintenance of war vessels which were obsolete before the keels were laid.

Lord Fisher, as is well known, is the father of the dreadnaught, and that type of vessel was regarded as the highest type of naval construction. That was followed by the superdreadnaught, and the types of 5 and 10 years ago are found to be imperfect and vulnerable to the forces now brought into naval contests. Lord Fisher saw that the submarine and aircraft would revolutionize naval warfare, and in September, 1919, wrote these words:

"Flying dominates future war both by land and sea. It is not my business to discuss the land, but at sea the only way to avoid the air is to get under the water, so you are driven to the internal-combustion engine and oil. That is why I keep on emphasizing that the whole navy has to be scrapped."

Admiral Von Scheer, who commanded the German fleet at the Battle of Jutland, has submitted views which weaken the position of the General Board and call for a revision of their action and of the policy announced in the report of the committee. Admiral Von Scheer, in substance, states that the cost of surface ships is enormous and yet "they are very vulnerable"; that a great surface fleet can no longer protect a coast or overseas commerce; that only a few nations in the past could afford big ships and this resulted in their ruling the sea, but that the submarine has "knocked all this into a cocked hat, and fear of the British fleet as a fighting weapon has gone"; that "submarines can best defend or attack a coast and can best protect or destroy commerce"; and that an adequate submarine navy would enable a comparatively weak nation to pursue an overseas policy "without worrying about a surface fleet." Admiral Von Scheer is competent to speak upon this vital question. He knows how impotent the German high fleet was in the great World War and also the great achievement wrought for Germany by the submarine.

Capt. Hart, who has carefully studied the operations of the German submarines, states that not more than 10,000 officers and men were employed during the entire war in the submarine fleets, and that, as a rule, not more than 30 submarines were at sea at one time, manned by approximately 1,500 men. As opposed to this small force and the impounded German high fleet were more than 1,000,000 men of the allied naval forces, together with the fleets of the allied nations including between four and five thousand small craft whose activities were of the highest importance. Notwithstanding this great disproportion in forces, Germany nearly won the war, and if it had not been for the intervention of the United States, would have triumphed. Great Britain's grand fleet was unable to protect itself against submarines, and she was compelled, in feverish haste, to employ her great resources to construct submarines and destroyers and various devices against the insidious and powerful enemy. The capital ship was safe only when locked in protected harbors. Can there be any doubt but that Germany would have won the war if her submarine fleet had numbered 200 instead of 40 when the war began? In my opinion, England's mighty fleet would have been powerless in the face of so formidable a foe, and the currents of history would have been changed and the map of Europe written by the Central Empires.

We are told that immediately after the arrival of Admiral Sims in England he reported the dangerous situation of the Allies, and that Germany was winning the war. We have not forgotten the reports that came from overseas during the dark days of 1917 and 1918, showing that the allied nations were losing from 500,000 to 800,000 tons of shipping per month. It was felt then that the submarine was a powerful foe, which not only destroyed the merchant ships but war vessels that were supposed to be monarchs of the sea.

Lord Rothmere, formerly director of England's air forces, in a recent article entitled "The folly of big battleships," has stated that "Great Britain can not afford to spend money on naval construction at present," and that "they [referring to the United States and Japan] are obviously building against each other and not against us." He refers to the capital ships being constructed by the United States and Japan as inadequate forms in warfare and declares that our conduct in constructing them "is no proof that capital ships will survive." He further states that "no nation henceforth will enjoy naval supremacy—it is a nasty pill, and we must swallow it."

It is well known that the British Admiralty has discontinued the construction of capital ships. Following the armistice, three battle cruisers were scrapped by Great Britain, though the keels had been laid and an average outlay of nearly $3,000,000 had been made upon each. I appreciate the fact that some will contend that Great Britain's finances prevented her from building further expensive war vessels. However, when we recall the views of Lord Fisher and other British naval experts who have, in effect, condemned the capital ship because of the development of the submarine and aerial warships, we should pause and make searching investigation to determine what course prudence and wisdom dictate.

Sir Percy Scott is recognized as a naval inventor of international standing and a man of courage and ability. His inventions have contributed to the success of dreadnaughts, and his own naval career enable him to appreciate the strength and the weakness of those fighting vessels. He takes the view announced by Lord Fisher before his death, and he recently said:

"The introduction of the vessels that swim under water has, in my opinion, entirely done away with the utility of the ships that swim on the top of the water. The submarine causes to disappear three out of five of the functions, defensive and offensive, of a vessel of war, as no man-of-war will dare to come even within sight of a coast that is adequately protected by submarines.

"With a flotilla of submarines I would undertake to get into any harbor and sink or materially damage all the ships in that harbor. If by submarines we close the egress of the North Sea and Mediterranean, it is difficult to see how our commerce can be much interfered with."

Sir Percy Scott has openly opposed the building of additional battleships and declared in favor of smaller craft. In a recent letter, published in the London Evening Standard, he says that it is not to be expected that naval officers would oppose the building of battleships, because if they did "they would commit professional suicide."

He further declares that the British learned the following lessons from the war:

"That if Germany had possessed more submarines at the beginning of the war they would have won, and that the weapons that nearly defeated the Allies were the mine and the torpedo. The foremost of the British battleships in the Mediterranean were sunk, and that after the appearance of the submarine in that sea the British battleships which had not been sent to the bottom did very little useful work. The British battleships could not get through the Dardanelles. They were stopped by the mines and not by battleships. Our leviathan battleships in the North Sea did not bombard any of the enemies' fortifications or seaport towns or harbors. Assailants can hide themselves by smoke screens. What is probably the most effective weapon against battleships was not employed during the war—the airplane with a torpedo. This new device can attack battleships both at sea and in harbors. It is not safe alone, and must have nurses in the form of airplanes and surface vessels to keep down submarines."

He further states that the British could not protect their commerce on sea, and that in a war between a country with a long coast line and battleships for defense and another country with a large number of submarines the latter country within an hour after hostilities were declared would dispatch them to trade routes, where they would be guided and advised by hydroplanes of the whereabouts of merchant vessels to be destroyed. He also states that aircraft would drop torpedoes on battleships, while the submarines would be planting mines at harbor entrances, and that under such circumstances no armada would dare to pass five days at sea.

In a recent article he reviews the work of Great Britain's Grand Fleet during the recent war and calls attention to the fact that during substantially the entire period of the war she was locked up in harbors and was unable to attack the enemy's coast or to remain at sea. It is true she made a few furtive visits to the North Sea, but only after she had ascertained by means of aircraft, scout vessels, and otherwise that attacks from submarines and destroyers were not imminent. And, in addition to these precautions, she was guarded by a flotilla of smaller craft, including submarines, destroyers, and naval airplanes. The few submarines which the Central Empires maintained in the Mediterranean Sea rendered the battleships of Great Britain and France of but little value and seriously impeded both the land and naval operations of the allied forces.

Admiral Fullam, one of the most eminent men of our Navy, has strongly opposed the completion of the 1916 program. His testimony before the committee is illuminating and a strong contribution to the question under consideration. In his testimony Admiral Fullam quotes from page 21 of Admiral Sims's recent work, in which the latter refers to the conditions existing on the English coast in April, 1917, when the navy of Great Britain, supported by the navies of France, Italy, and Japan, might have been supposed to command the sea, because the German Fleet was blockaded. Admiral Sims states:

"It was not until the spring of 1917 that we really awoke to the actual situation; it was not until I had spent several days in England that I made the all-important discovery, which was this—that Britain did not control the seas. She still controlled the seas in the old Nelsonian sense; that is, her Grand Fleet successfully "contained" the German battle squadrons and kept them, for the greater part of the war, penned up in their German harbors. In the old days such a display of sea power would have easily won the war for the Allies. But that is not control of the seas in the modern sense; it is merely the control of the surface of the seas. Under modern methods of naval warfare sea control means far more than controlling the top of the water. For there is another type of ship, which sails stealthily under the waves, revealing its presence only at certain intervals, and capable of shooting a terrible weapon which can sink the proudest surface ship in a few minutes.

"The existence of this new type of warship makes control of the seas to-day a very different thing from what it was in Nelson's time. As long as such a warship can operate under the water almost at will—and this was the case in a considerable area of the ocean in the early part of 1917—it is ridiculous to say that any navy controls the seas. For this submarine vessel, when used as successfully as it was used by the Germans in 1917, deprives the surface navy of that advantage which has proved most decisive in other wars. That is, the surface navy can not longer completely protect communication as it could protect in Nelson's and Farragut's times. It no longer guarantees a belligerent its food, its munitions, its raw materials of manufacture and commerce, or the free movement of its troops. It is obviously absurd to say that a belligerent which was losing 800,000 or 900,000 tons of shipping a month, as was the case with the Allies in the spring of 1917, was the undisputed mistress of the seas. Had the German submarine campaign continued to succeed at this rate the United States could not have transported its army to France, and the food and materials which we were sending to Europe, and which were essential to winning the war, could never have crossed the ocean."

The submarine at that time had not reached the standard of efficiency subsequently attained, nor had the naval air force assumed the great importance which it did before the end of the war. Admiral Fullam refers to the fact that the Grand Fleet, to which seven of our battleships from the United States were attached, "did not chase or combat the submarines that were starving England, because they could not." They remained in port "waiting for the battle that never came; the sea meanwhile was controlled by other forces." He further states that "had the Navy Department intelligently anticipated our entrance into the World War it could best have prepared by stopping the 1916 program even earlier—yes, before it was ever outlined and concentrated upon destroyers and small craft to combat the enemy which the department had been watching for two years, in the deadly work of 'controlling the sea.' And now, in 1921, four years later, the Navy Department again goes back to the 1916 program which did not provide ships to fight against Germany. It proposes to double the number of ships that could not fight submarines then, and can not fight them now. One would imagine that submarines had been abolished. But they still exist—though not in our Navy in the numbers required to control the sea."

The admiral suggests that it would be interesting to consider what England's course would have been if Germany's fleet had been destroyed at the battle of Jutland. He states that in that event neither England's dreadnaughts nor those of the United States would have searched the sea for submarines, nor would they have been assigned the duty of escorting merchant vessels and transports.

"Had they gone to sea, would they not have been compelled to take with them, for their own salvation, the protecting screen of cruisers and destroyers that are most efficient in combating the submarine? From this is it not manifest that the wisest thing to have done would have been to lock England's battleships as well as our own safely in protected harbors, and then set free about 100 destroyers and many cruisers that were needed to save England from starvation?"

Admiral Fullam asks that consideration be given all the facts referred to in his testimony, and then asks whether we shall "blindly adhere to the 1916 program without reservations—a program, a child, born during the battle of Jutland, we might say, ignores the awful events that followed its birth and continues to live in comparative indifference to the daily lessons and teachings of the past five years."

The Gallipoli campaign revealed the weakness of battleships in efforts to reduce fortifications and in attempts to land and support invading forces, and, as Admiral Fullam says, at the same time "it demonstrates the vital necessity for submarines and aircraft, both in landing and in repelling landing."

Rear Admiral Taylor, chief constructor of the Navy, in an article recently published by the Franklin Institute, states: "Although we must conclude that the present tendency is toward increased size and cost, one can not overlook the fact that this very tendency, under the present financial, economic, and political conditions in the world, may actually result, in the long run, in the disappearance from building programs of these very types, and the substitution for them of smaller and cheaper units made possible by new developments in science and engineering." The admiral states that there is great need for "imagination and vision" on the part of the fighting forces afloat and the naval designers ashore, for that nation which can develop weapons which will render obsolete the present great ships and can substitute for them a smaller and cheaper unit, capable of defeating them, will win, in the new area, command of the seas which this war has shown is so important to ultimate victory. I submit, that "vision" and the proper application of the lessons of the war must lead to the conclusion that there will be a disappearance from view of building programs of these very types (capital ships) and the substitution for them of smaller and cheaper units. The General Board needs "vision" and the courage to apply the demonstrated facts which the World War revealed.

The British Admiraity seems to possess this "vision" and the courage to oppose a construction program which is oppressive financially and at best uncertain as to its utility.

I have not considered what the war and recent accomplishments have taught us concerning the value of torpedo planes and other aircraft in naval warfare. The evidence relating to this matter is voluminous and convincing. I can only refer to a few points in support of the proposition, that the General Board has failed to properly appraise the value of naval aircraft and is imprudent in so tenaciously adhering to the 1916 naval program. Admiral Sims in testifying before the Senate Naval Committee stated that one of the first things to be done is "to develop the airplanes, which means also aero-carrying ships." He refers to the fact that the advocates of the aerotorpedo claim that they can drop "a torpedo successfully in the water and that it will run successfully; that they can carry a torpedo of the ordinary type for 10,000 yards, and that planes can be built to carry two or three more"; and he further states that they are doing it now, and they are doing it successfully. He mentions the fact that planes are now in use that will carry 6,000 pounds of bombs, each shell containing 500 pounds of high explosives, and that one of these things dropped on the deck of a ship would penetrate through the deck and would destroy her as a battleship.

He also discusses the danger or the possibility of airplanes being interfered with in their operations against surface war vessels and states that—

"it would require about 1,000 shots from the ships for every hit [illegible] make, which is about one-tenth of 1 per cent. The admiral referred to recent experiments conducted by the Navy. Bombs were dropped from a height of 4,000 feet against the battleship Indiana and 9 per cent of the hits were made on the hull of the vessel, whereas 20 or 30 per cent of the hits were within an area 'that would have been destructive to the vessel, because a bomb that is dropped in the water will explode the same as if it struck, and if it is within 60 feet of the hull of the ship it would drive the plates in.'"

He also states that the difficulty of hitting a moving vessel, compared to one at anchor, is unimportant on account of the great speed of the airplane. The admiral states that—

"you are practically wasting time to try to hit an airplane which can cruise 10,000 feet in the air, outside of gunfire. He lunges down and is on the water, lets go his torpedo, and he is away. They have successfully torpedoed a single ship that way."

Speaking of the importance of the airplane development, Admiral Sims said:

"It normally adds to the ability of a country to defend itself. No battleship afloat can operate against the coast of an enemy, within the range of the enemy's airplanes, for this reason. A fleet that goes over there, whether it has 6 or 8 or 10 airplane carriers, suppose it has 10—that would be nearly 1,000 planes. With 30 planes each, it would be 300 airplanes coming up against the coast where we are operating from the beach and we have 2,000 airplanes. It simply means that you are controlling the air absolutely and you will wipe out all of the air force, and you will be perfectly free to attack that fleet."

He also refers to the fact that distance is an obstacle in warfare, so that—

"Great Britain with all her forces could not attack this coast without a base on this side to operate from. She has not a single ship that can come across the ocean and get back again, let alone stay here without assistance."

Admiral Sims's testimony is instructive as to the value of airplanes in naval warfare, and in my opinion supports the view that the capital ship of the future will be the airplane carrier, and that the warships employed in the air will deprive the surface ships, including the mighty dreadnaughts, of their formidable character. The war teaches in an impressive way that the battleship unprotected and undefended by submarines and torpedo boats and aircraft will be of but slight utility in the naval contests of the future. Admiral Sims emphasizes the necessity of converting some scout cruisers into airplane carriers, and approves of the construction of two carriers of great speed. He explains the value of airplanes not only for attacks upon the sea but also for coast defense and offensive movements by attacking naval forces. It seems clear from the lessons taught by the war that no fleet can successfully operate upon the sea, or in attacks upon land, without naval airplanes; indeed, the modern navy must operate on three planes—the surface, above the surface, and beneath the surface. And as Admiral Fullam states:

"These forces must exist in due proportion and must be coordinated strategetically and tactically to win a modern battle. * * * The navy which lacks forces on the lower and upper planes will be seriously menaced. A one-plane navy can not win against a three-plane navy. The Navy of the United States to-day is practically a one-plane navy. The minds of many naval officers and legislators are fixed upon one, or, at most, two planes."

The General Board, it would seem, have been so zealous in urging the unmodified program of 1915, which is the capital ship program, that they have not sufficiently emphasized the construction of submarines (not only for coastal defense purposes, but for naval offensive warfare), and also torpedo planes and other forms of aircraft. One admiral in his testimony sought to minimize the effect of bombs dropped from airplanes, and describes the damage in the experiments against the Indiana as "purely local." The evidence is contradictory of his statement, and the accumulated data incontrovertibly establishes the destructiveness of bombs and torpedoes dropped from the skies. In a recent sham battle between the Grand Fleet and the Royal Air Force, in Portland Roads (England), the attack was made by seven airplanes carrying torpedoes, and six direct hits were scored out of the seven torpedoes used. Mr. C. J. Gray, one of the foremost English aeronautical writers, and editor of the Aeroplane, of London, states that the airplanes were—

"preceded by two bombers which flew at about 10,000 feet, where, of course, the sailorman had neither heard nor seen them. Instead of dropping bombs the bombers dropped a string of smoke bombs about a mile to the windward of the fleet. Before the smoke cleared away, and before the fleet had a chance to use a gun, the torpedo machines came through the smoke down wind at about 130 miles an hour, so low down and so fast that no earthly naval gun would have had a chance of hitting any of them. It is practically certain that, given an adequate force of torpedo aircraft, no hostile fleet could come within 100 miles of any coast so defended."

He further states that, in his opinion—

"the capital ship of the future will be a very big, high-speed aircraft carrier, which will use torpedo airplanes instead of long-range guns, and otherwise will be equipped with what is now considered secondary armament for use against hostile airplanes and against submarines to repel torpedo droppers."

Admiral Sims states the case for the airplane carrier in this language:

"The whole point is this. Anybody that decides that the battleship is always going to remain the capital ship and that the airplane carrier is never going to become a capital ship has got to accept this proposition, that American ingenuity is not capable of improving a torpedo so that it can be dropped from a height of 30 feet without injury."

On the 1st of February, Gen. William Mitchell, assistant chief of the Air Service of the United States Army, testified before the House committee on the naval appropriation bill. His testimony covers the entire field of aerial operations and strongly supports the contention that the battleship as a fighting force is menaced by airplanes. He declares that "airplane carriers will supplant battleships." First, after that, battle cruisers, and that the logical attack will be carriers protected by a small form of destroyer. He refers to the fact that England is proceeding "with the development of her aviation, and that if the United States neglects the air forces we will be at a great disadvantage." He states that we have bombs capable of "demolishing or putting out of action not only all auxiliary ships, but capital ships as well," and that with these bombs, as distinguished from projectiles fired out of cannon, "we have a greater per cent of hits over 20,000 yards than have cannon projectiles."

The Scientific American of August 14, 1920, presents a view that is worthy of attention. This statement is made:

"We believe that in future war the torpedo will at least come into its own, and it will be the internal-combustion engine that will work the change. It gave us the motor car and the airplane, and now it is, perhaps, destined to dethrone the battleship and battle cruiser as the supreme elements of naval strength. But how? Well, the British have several large and fast torpedo plane carriers. Let us forecast a duel between a 12-gun, 23-knot Massachusetts and a 32-knot torpedo-plane carrier, with twice that number of planes aboard. Steaming outside of 16-inch gun range, the carrier would send in her planes, which, swooping down from great height at 150 miles would drop their torpedoes within close range and return for more. But the bulge will save the ship? No; for the torpedoes will be set to pass underneath the ship, and they will be fired magnetically by the action of the steel mass of the ship itself, and you could not put side and bottom bulges both upon a ship—she would be all bulge and but little ship."

In the issue of January 1, 1921, the same journal contains this statement:

"The need for going slow on new construction, especially of capital ships, is the more apparent when we remember that the European nations, including Great Britain, have laid down no capital ships and practically no warships of any kind for the past two years. Partly is this due to financial stringency; but unquestionably—at least, in the case of Great Britain—it is due also to the recognition of the formidable part which war in the air is destined to play in future naval warfare, particularly as a means of attack with large masses of explosive carried to the battleship in the form of close-up torpedo attack or the delivery of deck-piercing bombs carrying enormous charges."

The Scientific American of February 12, 1921, contains this statement:

"That very small minority in our Navy Department which would like to see the United States spend about $1,000,000,000 in building 'incomparably the most powerful fleet in the world' has endeavored to give the impression that a great naval shipbuilding competition is in progress between the other leading navies and ourselves. Now, as regards the British Navy, this is absolutely untrue. If there be any naval race, we have the course entirely to ourselves, for Great Britain is doing no new shipbuilding whatsoever, and relatively to our own fleet that of Great Britain is not so powerful as it was before the war. To be clear upon this point, let us consider the past seven years and the losses of the British by war and by the breaking up and sale of ships since the armistice.

"During the war Great Britain lost out of her fighting fleet over 600,000 tons, or two-thirds as much tonnage as there was in the United States fleet in 1914. The facts regarding this tremendous depletion of her navy are to be found in a pamphlet published by our Office of Naval Intelligence, entitled 'Information concerning the United States Navy and other navies.' From this we learned that her losses by mine, submarine, shell fire, and other causes were as follows: Three battle cruisers, including the super battle cruiser Queen Mary (63,000 tons); 13 battleships, including the 23,000-ton dreadnaught Audacious and the 19,250-ton dreadnaught Vanguard (201,000 tons); 10 armored cruisers (151,000 tons); 9 light cruisers (51,500 tons); 6 monitors (8,125 tons); 67 destroyers (50,500 tons); 52 submarines (37,000 tons); and 22 sloops (26,000 tons); the total, including other smaller craft, is over 600,000 tons. Added to these was a loss of 37 merchant auxiliaries, including many ships of from 12,000 to 18,000 tons, which brings the total loss to nearly three-quarters of a million tons.

"To make good these losses, and to keep pace with the demands of the war, she took in hand a large program of new construction. But when victory was assured and the world menace of the German fleet had been removed, all outstanding contracts were canceled, except in the case of certain vessels of the smaller types that were near completion; and a large number of ships, including three sister ships to the 42,000-ton battle cruiser Hood, were broken up on the spot and sold as junk. As a matter of fact, it is some seven and one-half years since the British Admiralty laid down a battleship, and of light craft not one has been ordered since the fall of 1918.

"Furthermore, in agreement with her conviction that the war was indeed over and a period of peace and reduction of armaments was at hand, Great Britain struck off her active list practically the whole of her big fleet of prewar dreadnaught battleships, her armored cruisers, her protected cruisers, and a large number of destroyers, submarines, and other smaller craft, the list totaling about 150 ships that were either retired, sold, or broken up. Not only this, but she has tentatively condemned all of her capital ships that are armed with guns of 12-inch caliber or less; and although she has still on the list 26 dreadnaught battleships, several of these that are armed with a 12-inch gun are in reserve or have been delegated to minor duties as practice ships, gun-training ships, etc.

"Another point, which is perhaps the most significant of all and one which will be fully appreciated by all naval men, is that in her whole fleet there is only one ship, the Hood, which embodies in its construction and arrangements the enormous amount of technical information gleaned from the Battle of Jutland, information which was loyally passed on to the experts of her ally, the United States.

"Had she gone ahead with her program as we have done, she would have to-day in her fleet three additional ships of the Hood class; her fleet of light cruisers would have been greatly increased; and she would have added over 100 ships to her fleet of destroyers and submarines, all of these vessels embodying the lessons of the war and particularly those of the Jutland engagement."

These views are shared by eminent naval experts and by men who have given profound thought to the question of naval preparedness. In my opinion they establish not merely a prima facie case but an incontestable one against the wisdom of the policy suggested by the General Board. This is the day of the undersea and air destroying forces. If we are to maintain a big Navy, its strength will lie in the air and in the undersea and submersible vessels; not alone in capital ships.

DOES THE UNITED STATES REQUIRE A NAVY OF THE CHARACTER CONTEMPLATED BY THE GENERAL BOARD?

The Secretary of the Navy in his annual report, December 1, 1920 (p. 217), stated there were in the Naval Establishment of the United States, fit for service on that date, 795 vessels of the following descriptions:

Battleships	37
Armored cruisers	8
Monitors	6
Cruisers	24
Destroyers	249
Submarines	98
Gunboats	19
Patrol boats	55
Converted yachts	10
Submarine chasers	112
Tugs and mine sweepers	86
Fuel ships	22
Other auxiliaries	46
Vessels unserviceable for war	23

The Secretary also reported as under construction 165 vessels of various types, which upon their completion would bring the total number of vessels of all descriptions in the Navy up to 960, with an aggregate tonnage of 2,910,316, and an aggregate horsepower of 12,865,897. The elimination from our construction program of 500,000 tons of battleships and battle cruisers will leave us a Navy of 2,400,000 tons, which ought not to be a "little" Navy even in the estimation of the big Navy men.

It is conceded that some of the naval vessels of the United States referred to by the Secretary are obsolescent, if not obsolete, and it is quite likely that our Navy should be strengthened by the construction of airplanes and larger submarines, if not other types of war craft, if a satisfactory agreement is not entered into between the United States and the leading nations of the world for either complete or partial disarmament. In a statement before the House Committee on Naval Affairs on the 12th of January, 1921, the Secretary of the Navy stated that at the present time the British Navy has a total tonnage of effective fighting ships of 1,588,442, the Navy of the United States a total tonnage of effective fighting ships of 779,193, and Japan's navy a total tonnage of effective fighting ships of 340,596. From this statement it appears that our Navy now has more than double the tonnage of the Japanese Navy and we have more than half the tonnage of the British Navy in effective fighting ships. It is also known that Great Britain, as stated by the writer in the Scientific American, practically scrapped hundreds of her ships.

If the United States were to complete the various projects for new constructions now contemplated by the Navy, the total tonnage for the United States would exceed the tonnage of Great Britain's war vessels and would be more than double Japan's tonnage unless the incomplete construction plan of Japan shall be perfected and realized. While Great Britain has 46 battleships, only 29 are of the dreadnaught type. The United States, upon the completion of the 5 battleships which are now more than 70 per cent advanced, will have 42 battleships, at least 21 of which will be equal to, if not superior, to any ships in the world. Japan has 10 battleships; France, 17; Italy, 9; Argentina, 2; Brazil, 1; Chile, 1; Spain, 3; Greece, 2; Germany has 6 second-class battleships; Peru, Portugal, Sweden, Denmark, and Holland have no battleships, but have naval craft of minor descriptions; and Belgium, Bulgaria, China, Colombia, Cuba, Ecuador, Haiti, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Persia, Rumania, Siam, Uruguay, and Venezuela have no effective ships of war of any description, either built or being built.

What is the reason, then, for this feverish haste to impose upon the American people further burdens for naval armament? Europe is exhausted financially and otherwise. Even the most clamorous and strident for a powerful American Navy must admit that there is not a single power of Europe which menaces us, nor could a combination of all the powers of Europe imperil the United States either upon land or upon sea. I freely admit that Great Britain's Navy is stronger than ours, but even if Great Britain were our enemy and engaged in war against us, her navy, powerful as it is, would be impotent against our coasts. The United States has a superior torpedo-destroyer flotilla, and with the development of the submarine, the torpedo, mines, and airplanes, not only for coast defense but for combat at sea, it would be impossible for Great Britain to successfully operate against our coasts or to land troops upon our shores. The testimony of Admiral Sims, as well as the views of the greatest naval experts of the world, confirm that view. Of course, it is obvious that Japan is less able to attack our coasts than is Great Britain.

The nations of Europe are not building war vessels. They are trying to satisfy their hunger and meet the ravages of disease and restore order in distracted and suffering countries. They want peace, not war; bread and meat and clothing and medicines and an opportunity for work and production. They are building no battleships; and aside from the bolsheviks of Russia, they are seeking no conflicts. Military ambitions are dead and the prostrate peoples of Europe are looking to America not for bombs and bullets and war but for food and clothing and our surplus commodities, and for material help and aid in their distracted and tragic situation. When this Nation was assailed by Germany and the cause of civilization was imperiled, we cast our lot with the Entente Allies and with them battled in a common cause until the right triumphed. During that great contest, as well as since, we have exhibited in many ways our deep sympathy for the peoples of Europe and have manifested a sincere desire for their welfare. They are not plotting against us. Even the defeated nations are seeking the friendship of the American people. Great Britain desires no war with the United States, nor with any nation. It would be absolutely impossible for her to wage war against the United States.

Naval experts who are fair and honest are compelled to admit the impossibility of the United States encountering any danger at the hands of Great Britain. Admiral Sims in his testimony before the Senate committee stated in substance that we needed no coast defenses other than for the protection of our naval bases. The development of aerial warfare, the submarines, the mines, and the torpedo boats, make invasion of this country from the sea absolutely impossible. Not even the wildest jingoes dare to express a fear of invasion by land of the United States from the north or from the south. Against whom shall we arm? Against what power shall we continue to build giant navies, at a cost of hundreds of millions, if not billions of dollars?

It would be cruel to even intimate that there is any apprehension from the Latin Republics. The United States entertains a deep and lasting affection for the republics to the south of us. Their welfare and development has been a matter of deep solicitude upon the part of the United States. The Monroe doctrine was promulgated as a shield against imperial ambitions of despotic European powers. We desire the friendship of the people of Mexico and Central and South America. It is the sincere desire of the people of this Republic that they shall be bound in amity and good will to the peoples of the vigorous and splendid Republics upon this hemisphere.

We turn to Asia. What foe have we there? And against whom shall we marshal our great resources and build a still more powerful Navy? China entertains not only respect but deep affection for this Republic. The Chauvinistic elements in the land are endeavoring to sow the seeds of discord and to provoke war between the United States and Japan. Writers, political orators, powerful magazines and newspapers seek to inflame the public mind against the Japanese Empire and to induce the belief that war between the United States and that far-away people is at our very door. It would seem that there are those in our midst who are intriguing and plotting for the purpose of destroying peace and amity now existing between this Republic and Japan and between this Republic and Great Britain. In my opinion, these intrigues will fail. War between the United States and Great Britain is unthinkable. It would not only be a tragedy, it would be a calamity—a catastrophe so overwhelming that no one but the most insensate and calloused could regard it except with horror. Why should Great Britain desire war with the United States? She covets none of our territory, nor do we covet hers. She has been benefited by our commerce and her trade has been important in our development. Great Britain has been our best customer and has absorbed our surplus commodities to the value of hundreds of millions, indeed, billions, of dollars annually.

Japan respected her treaty with Great Britain and joined with the Entente Allies against the Central Empires. Though of the Orient, she has absorbed much of the spirit of the Occident and has exhibited qualities that entitle her to be regarded as one of the leading nations of the earth. Upon a little island thousands of miles from our shore she seeks only the welfare of her people and opportunity for growth and development. Her birth rate of between six and seven hundred thousand per annum compels her statesmen to seek fields for legitimate territorial expansion. Asia lies before her and at her door; to Asia she will turn. She seeks no conquest upon this hemisphere, and in my opinion sincerely desires the good will and friendship of this Nation as well as of all other nations of the earth. Japan is burdened with debt and possesses but few resources and limited national wealth.

The imprudent, not to say irrational and menacing, talk upon the part of some Americans is calculated to impress her people with the thought that we entertain hostile designs against them and other nations. In 1904 Japan believed she was menaced by Russia and mobilized her strength and gained a notable victory. Germany's activity in the Orient before 1914, together with her aggressive policy in China, constituted a menace to Japan and was calculated to arouse her fears and lead her to adopt a military policy of some magnitude. A fair and honest consideration of the aggressive designs of France, Great Britain, Italy, Russia, and Germany with reference to China's territory will lead to the conclusion that Japan's position in the Orient was endangered, and justified her belief that her interests in Asia, potential or otherwise, were to be sacrificed to imperialistic policies by the strong nations of Europe. Japan's geographical position must be considered and her relations to China and other Asiatic territory must not be ignored. These conditions undoubtedly filled the Japanese with apprehension and inspired Japan to adopt a policy regarded as necessary for her preservation. But I do not believe that the Japanese people desire war with the United States or with any country.

Japan entered the League of Nations, and upon signing the treaty of Versailles submitted a statement which revealed her desire for peace and for an honorable station among the nations of the world. Her representative sits in the council of the League of Nations and she has consistently supported the policy of the league, which seeks world disarmament and the settlement of international controversies by peaceful means instead of the employment of military and naval force. In my opinion, there is much exaggeration concerning Japan's naval program. Testimony before the committee was unsatisfactory concerning Japan's naval program. An admiral, speaking of the same, stated that she had "laid down only one battle cruiser up to the present time so far as we know." "Her program," he stated, "involved the building of 12 light cruisers but 5 only are laid down and building." With reference to destroyers he stated:

"We do not exactly know how many are building, but we know that at least 10 are building now of the 47. She is building 10 submarines of the first line. Those are vessels of about 900 tons each. She is building 9 submarines of the second line."

The evidence before the committee also establishes what everyone knows to be the fact, that Japan is dependent upon other nations for steel and perhaps other materials needed in the construction of a naval fleet. Moreover, the resources of Japan are limited and she could not long continue any competitive naval program with the United States or Great Britain and other European nations. Japan can not contemplate an attack upon Mexico or any of the Latin American Republics. There is no quarrel between her and any nation to the south of us. Any attack by Japan upon Mexico or Central America, or any of the Republics in South America, would unite the Western Hemisphere, perhaps including the Dominion of Canada, against her. It would be supreme folly for Japan to even contemplate such a course. Nor is it conceivable that she would attempt to land troops upon our shores, or to send her fleet across the Pacific. If Great Britain's fleet would be powerless against our shores, and that is the testimony of competent naval experts, then it is preposterous to assume that Japan, 12,000 miles distant from our shores, could be more successful.

I refuse to join with the jingoists in our country who are determined to perpetuate the old order of things and who stubbornly resist a world-wide movement which, in my opinion, will prove irresistible for world disarmament and for a union of the peoples of the world in the interest of peace.

The proposition to make the American Navy the greatest in the world is a proposition to indulge in this extravagant luxury merely because our country is rich and powerful enough to do so. No support for this course can be found in our needs for naval defenses. The British Government has publicly stated that the United States, if it chooses, can have the biggest navy, and it is very much to be doubted if the English Admiralty will undertake to challenge or match the construction of capital ships for the consummation of the project, which has the Navy Department behind it, to give our Navy the first place in the world.

If it be claimed that our Navy must be the greatest in the world, in order to defend our commerce and defend our coasts, let me reply that this is precisely what was said by the Germans in their ambition to overmatch the British Navy. The fact was that the great German Navy was no more a necessity to defend the commerce of Germany than a great Dutch Navy was necessary to defend the commerce of Holland or a great Danish Navy to defend the commerce of Denmark. Danish ships, Dutch ships, Greek ships, and Belgian ships have as much freedom of commerce upon the seas as have the ships of the United Kingdom or of the United States. There is no warrant for the assertion that the protection of commerce requires great armaments. The nations which have a preponderance of naval power to-day will not use their naval superiority to interfere with the liberty of maritime commerce in time of peace. There is every assurance that the world may depend upon this and it is not necessary to defend every merchantman that plies the seas with the attendance of a ship of war.

The great naval powers of the world to-day offer no obstacle to the utmost freedom of trade and commerce upon the part of the smallest and weakest nation, and the liberties which the powers ask for themselves they have freely accorded and will freely accord to the ships of every nation. The day has come when the United States must cease its prodigal and useless outlays in time of peace, for the making of armaments and the construction and maintenance of great ships to be moved and maneuvered at an annual cost of hundreds of millions of dollars. Our naval policy must cease to be dominated by the professional naval view, and the influence of men who have a more comprehensive conception of the advantage and welfare of our country must become dominant in the naval policy of the Government.

The League of Nations offers a practical and feasible plan to secure world disarmament. The reactionary policy of the United States seems to be an impediment to the realization of the practical conceptions of the league. All members of the league earnestly desire to be relieved from military and naval burdens. If the United States should enter the league, the formulated plan of the league to secure disarmament would, in my opinion, be earnestly carried forward by all members of the league until its full fruition was realized. But, if this Nation does not enter the league, it should cooperate with its members for the purpose of achieving those beneficent purposes which inspired its conception. It can be readily understood what effect the action of the United States in refusing to ratify the Versailles treaty or to enter the League of Nations would have upon the rest of the world. Notwithstanding this Nation has no imperialistic ambitions or a desire to obtain territory belonging to other nations, its course and its present attitude undoubtedly have produced skepticism in the minds of some nations with respect to the sincerity of our declarations.

When the Secretary of the Navy and others declare that we must have the most powerful Navy in the world, and when demands are made to execute a program that will cost more than a billion and a half dollars, and entail upon the United States an annual expenditure of at least one-half billion dollars for its maintenance, other nations may not be criticized if they express some concern regarding our purposes. In my opinion, we can not reconcile our declarations that we desire peace and disarmament, with the avowal that we shall complete the 1916 program and supplement it with modern aircraft, submarines, etc., at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars. If we believe in relieving the world from the burdens of military and naval disarmament, let us set the example.

The psychology of our action in carrying forward a militant naval program will be bad. It will tend to drive the world back into old paths—into policies based upon alliances and the balance of power, into the shadows and darkness from which we emerged when military autocracy in Europe was overthrown and when the right of determination was accorded to the peoples of the world. We should suspend the naval program to the extent herein indicated and either enter the League of Nations or address ourselves to obtaining an agreement with the great powers for the limitation of armaments and the establishment of tribunals for the settlement of international controversies.

The wealth and power of the United States, together with its isolated position, give us the primacy of the world. We should lead in every movement for justice and righteousness and peace. This propaganda for a Navy to outstrip the world has little or nothing behind it excepting an appeal to the national pride and vanity. The adding of capital ship to capital ship is bound to raise misgivings on the part of other nations and will incline them to ascribe ulterior and imperialistc purposes to our Government and will engender distrust and jealousy against a people who in their hearts sincerely desire the welfare of humanity. If the United States desires, as it should, to have the emulation of other nations we should set them an example. Do we desire that they shall emulate us in the construction of men-of-war, or that they shall emulate us in our defense of the principles and purposes of international peace and justice?

Whither are we to lead the world? That is the question. Shall it be along the lines of arms and war, or upon the paths of peace and trade and constructive progress, which shall turn the work and materials of the world to the increase of goods and riches and wealth, for the blessing of all the nations? Do we desire to impress the world with fear and terror of our country or with that respect and trust and confidence which an adherence to the principles of liberty, of justice, and of peace will invite from all other nations? These questions are before us. Our answer will determine the fate of the world.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the other nations of the world are not likely, in my opinion, to reduce their armaments because they fear us. If they reduce their armaments it will be because they have faith in our good will and in our high purpose. I can not agree with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and I feel called upon to register my dissent to the doctrine expressed by him.

That is the same identical doctrine that came out of Brandenburg. It is the same doctrine that penetrated and moved the people of Prussia in their management. It was the doctrine of the Hohenzollerns. It is the doctrine upon which this argument has largely proceeded, that we have got to make other nations afraid of us in order to induce them to lay aside their arms. If I am afraid of a man I will go armed myself, and the best way in which to induce other men to lay down their arms is to make them know that they are justified in their faith in our pacific and pure intentions.

The Senator from Utah referred this morning to a great doctrine laid down which struck me with much force. It was the doctrine of faith. The greatest Teacher that man has ever had in the world laid down the doctrine of faith, and on numerous occasions, in effect, said, "According to your faith, so be it unto you." We have forgotten what has occurred since 1914. There have some very great things occurred since 1914. Those who did not have any faith in their neighbors, those who believed in the power of the sword, those who were building up the power of Prussia and of the German Empire and of the Teutonic allies were directly responsible in 1899 at The Hague Convention and in 1907 at The Hague Convention for a refusal to modify the program of arming the nations of the world in rivalry against each other. The Teutonic allies at The Hague prevented the discussion of the question of disarmament. They were not willing to disarm. They wanted war, and they finally got war and the necessary consequences of war.

In 1916 we did adopt the so-called program of 1916, but that was two years after the world conflagration broke out. That was after the President of the United States realized, as he did realize in the spring of 1916, that the United States would soon be face to face, in all human probability, with the necessity for taking part in the war.

We had already been subjected to many indignities and injuries on the sea. We were already being advised that we were not permitted to go on our peaceful errands on the sea in accordance with international law. We were already menaced by the Teutonic powers, our lives defied and disregarded, not only by the Teutonic powers but by Great Britain as well. I will say, however, for Great Britain that at least her authorities always did respect American lives, and while property rights might have been invaded on certain occasions property rights can always be adjusted by international courts.

But in 1916 we were anticipating the necessity of war, and we laid down this program. In 1912, before the war began, our Navy cost approximately $112,000,000 per annum, and now, two years having passed since the armistice, we are proposing through the House of Representatives to appropriate $400,000,000.

Mr. KING. That is only for maintenance and for slight construction.

Mr. OWEN. For maintenance and a small part of construction. The Senate committee, with a lavish generosity that I do not appreciate at all, propose to add to that $105,000,000 more, making the bill carry over $500,000,000. That is over $5 per capita—$5 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. It is $25 per annum on every family of five people in the country. When we consider the war expenditures, when we add to that the bonus required for the soldiers, when we take into account our pensions, the amount goes up and up. When we remember that we have to pay the cost of the war, that we have to refund to the bondholders of the United States the moneys they have advanced with interest upon it, $25,000,000,000; we must remember, too, that that is $250 per capita, $250 for each man, woman, and child in the United States, $1,250 for each family, on account of the indebtedness of the war remaining as yet unpaid.

Do we not all know that these taxes at last come down upon the man who eats bread and meat and who wears clothes and must meet the necessity of housing? At last the taxes are paid by the consumers. Let us make no mistake about that. I wish to say that I believe the people of the United States are heartily tired of this question of unrestrained taxation.

One of the reasons why the disaster came last November to the Democratic Party was because in the haste and excitement of war our expenditures had reached so gigantic an amount, had rested so heavily upon the people; they were so disturbed and distressed in so many ways that they wanted a change. Democrats as well as Republicans wanted a change, and Democrats by hundreds of thousands voted for Harding for President of the United States because they, too, wanted a change. Let us make no mistake about that. This was not just a so-called purely Republican victory. It was a reaction in the country against the extravagance of war. It was a reaction in the country against the extravagance of taxation. It was a reaction in the country against the arbitrary conduct which always accompanies war and must accompany war. I do not blame the administration for many of the things which occurred along those lines, but when we consider the food and fuel control, the War Trade Board, the War Industries Board, the Council of National Defense, organized down to the crossroads; when we consider the innumerable ways in which the people were interfered with, it is no wonder they revolted. They wanted a change, and now I desire to say to my Republican brethren that if you do not give them a change with regard to these high taxes you will in the near future get what will justly come to you.

The program of 1916 was a program based upon the old conditions when every nation went armed to the teeth and had to go armed to the teeth, when Europe was an armed camp because of the Teutonic policy, the policy of force, the policy of brute power over other men. They made other men afraid of them and they reaped the consequences of making other men afraid of them. Other men are not as much afraid of them now, and the United States does not want to follow the Teutonic policy of making other nations afraid. There is no reason why Japan should be made afraid of the United States and there is no reason why the United States, of all nations in the world, should be afraid of that small nation on the Pacific who, compared with the United States, are poor and weak.

An argument was made here on the floor that we had reason to be afraid of the organization of China by Japan and of Indian by Japan, 300,000,000 in India, 300,000,000 of people who by their religious training are committed to the preservation of life at all hazards, three hundred millions of people who by virtue of their religion would not kill a bird. They do not destroy animal life, much less human life.

The idea of organizing the Chinese to make war on the United States is peculiarly preposterous. China for 2,000 years has been the most pacific of all nations. It is a great, peaceful, sleeping, democratic community. Each little community manages its own affairs. China, while she has had excited against the Japanese some hostility, has regarded the people of the United States with more favor than any other nation in the world. It was the United States that set the example of relinquishing the Boxer indemnity. The United States now is shipping millions of bushels of corn to China to feed the famishing people of China. It is a wise investment. It buys the good will of China. It establishes the confidence of China, and it is far better to spend $15,000,000 in buying the love of the Chinese by feeding their famishing people at a small expense than to attempt to excite their fear of the United States at a huge expense in armament.

The only danger in the world might be found in the great Chinese people, 400,000,000 of people who do not fear death, being led from their pacific mode of thought into the idea of militarism. Chinese statesmen have warned the world against stirring up a military spirit in China, and the only way to stir up the military spirit in China is by making the Chinese afraid of the other nations of the world. Japan has made an error in that respect in my opinion which may lead to the great injury of Japan.

But, Mr. President, we established this program of 1916 at a time when there was visible nowhere a sound hope for the peace of the world by peaceful arrangement and by systematic disarmament of the great nations. Now, however, the Teutonic allies have no armies worth mentioning. France is only retaining her army because she awaits the reparation of the terrible injury done to France by the war through the Teutonic forces, and as soon as the pacific arrangement can be made for the reparations, France, and Italy as well, will have every justification and every reason to believe that they may reduce their own armies voluntarily to the lowest possible point.

They can not go on without bankruptcy. They know it and I think the Senate knows it. All the nations of the world, through the proposed League of Nations, have practically agreed to the principle of disarmament; and yet we hear Senators on the floor express their distrust of anything except brute force. We must "keep our powder dry"; we must build up our Navy greater than any other navy in the world; we must be prepared to conquer any other people on the sea. We have no need to dominate other people and there is no nation in the world that has any desire, in my opinion, to dominate the people of the United States.

The program of 1916 ought to be summarily abandoned. There is no sound sense in it. I denounce it. I regard it as little short of criminal to pursue a policy of building up military power in the United States and setting an evil example, when, of all the nations in the world, we have the opportunity to set a wise, a just, and a generous example to other nations. For us to sit here determined to carry out this gigantic policy of having the greatest Navy in the world operates as a threat and a menace both to Japan and to Great Britain.

I know there are people in the British Isles who believe that the United States is concerned to dominate the seas as against Great Britain. When we speak of Great Britain, when we speak of Japan, and when we speak of the other nations, I think that Senators ought to be careful to remember that we can not describe 100,000,000 people by one epithet. In Great Britain there are those who are strongly inclined to imperialism, but they have been compelled to recognize the great power of the majority of the English people who are not imperialistic; who are substantially democratic; who only want to live their own lives in their own peaceful way and who do not want to dominate other nations. I have honor for the British people. I respect them; I respect their ideals.

I think the same thing is measurably true of Japan. We ought to be peculiarly considerate of Japan, coming as Japan does into the body of nations comparatively recently. I think Japan has shown a reasonable attitude with regard to her relations with the United States. I have never been able to feel the slightest fear of Japan. The Japanese are industrious; they are skillful; they are economical. They have shown a wonderful degree of intelligence and they have shown a very decent respect for the United States. When recently an American naval officer was killed by a Japanese sentry, Japan took all kinds of pains to ascertain where the fault was and punished the higher officers, who at last were responsible for the action of the sentry, for not having properly instructed him. The Japanese did not fall upon the little man who had erred because of the instructions he had received. They went where they ought to have gone—to the man in control; they went to the man higher up, and they held him responsible. That is what they ought to have done. They set us a good example in that.

I think if we went to the men higher up and held them personally responsible for what they do we would do well. I think that is true with regard to the Senate. Senators on the floor of the Senate who are using terms with regard to foreign nations that will place us in a hostile and warlike attitude in the eyes of foreign nations, Senators who on the floor denounce Japan with bitterness, to have their utterances quoted by the jingo press of Japan from one end of the Japanese country to the other, are incurring a responsibility of the gravest nature. They ought to be held responsible by the sound opinion of this country when they are guilty of indiscreet utterances on this floor. If we desire peace, we have got to set the example of peace. Out in the western section of the country when 25 years ago every man wore a six-shooter, and every gentleman wore two, the consequence was men were shooting each other all the time for fear the other fellow would get the drop on them.

I think that before we spend this enormous amount of $500,000,000 we might well hesitate; that we might well leave this bill for the Congress which is coming in within a few days. Mr. President, the American people gave a mandate to the new Congress. I very much question the wisdom of the policy of the Congress which has been replaced by a new Congress, before the new Representatives, coming fresh from the people, can have an opportunity to express their will, taking the responsibility out of their hands, because under the forms of law it is possible to do so, and making an appropriation of $500,000,000 on this account, when the new Congress might not be disposed to make the appropriation anything like so large, or, if they do, then, certainly, as they have a mandate from the people of the United States of the most recent date, they can act with more propriety than can this Congress. This matter may be determined by a number of votes of gentlemen who are not going to be Members of Congress two or three days hence.

Five hundred million dollars! Why should not this Congress wait a few days and allow the new Congress to pass upon this question? The bill will not go into effect until July following, and there will be April, May, and June—three months—in which the new Congress will have an opportunity to pass upon the question.

Mr. President, the junker argument is the argument of brute force. It is the argument that we must be stronger than our neighbor. It was the Prussian argument that they should arm themselves to the highest degree of excellence, and then, without notice, spring upon their unprepared neighbors. That is what Frederick II, the so-called Frederick the Great, did. When he came into power he illustrated the junker argument. The first thing he did was to write a wonderful book, which was anti-Machiavelian, in which he denounced the principles taught by Machiavelli; in which he denounced all underhand statesmanship, all camouflage; in which he proclaimed the Christian doctrines, and urged frankness and openness and gentleness and justice and righteousness in dealing with neighboring nations. Having established that reputation throughout Europe, he then, when he came into power, gave a series of balls, and, while the representatives of foreign nations were entertaining themselves to the strains of music and dancing, he suddenly threw himself, at night, at the head of an armed force of 50,000 men and rushed into Silesia and captured that country from Austria, with whom he had a treaty, and broke faith in that way by a sudden blow without notice. Is that the way to establish peace on earth? That is the policy of the Hohenzollerns; it is the policy of force; the policy of taking by force what you want from other people. I do not want to see the United States follow that evil and injurious and ultimately ruinous policy; and I do not believe it is necessary. I think the world is right now on the threshold of a world-wide perpetual peace, notwithstanding all of the evil prophecies I have heard from those who are talking about building up armaments and laying the foundation of their evil prophecies as the justification for that bad policy.

Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything with regard to these matters. I merely wanted to express my dissent from the idea that we were called upon of necessity to build up a gigantic force, when in point of fact it is our better policy to teach the doctrines of peace.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, all the funeral orations which have been pronounced since the obsequies over Abel have never put life into a corpse, and all the efforts to revive the League of Nations by oratory in the Senate will be equally futile. This is a government of the people. If the people have anything to say in the Government of the United States, then the League of Nations was condemned to death and executed on the second day of last November; and the Democratic Party came very near suffering the same fate at the same time.

From a party which had polled a popular majority of, I think, over a million votes only four years before, which had been in charge of the executive department of the Government during a great and successful war, we ended, or are in a few hours to end, our grip or control of the executive department at the mandate of more than 7,000,000 above a majority of the people.

Gentlemen may expend all of the time and energy they possess in seeking for other causes for this defeat, but he is blind indeed and deaf indeed who does not know that the Democratic ship went on the rocks because its captain was trying to steer us into the false harbor of internationalism.

What other great mistakes did the Democratic Party make? If there were mistakes made in the conduct of the war, they were mistakes made by our military or our naval chieftains, or they were mistakes made by that great body of civilians who came to the aid of the Government in its time of stress, and who came equally from both parties.

What great mistake did the Democratic Party make in handling the financial affairs of the country? There may have been blunders and errors, but for every law that was passed Republicans voted, and in the execution of those laws to a very large extent Republicans participated.

A calm survey of the field, a calm reading of the issues must convince every candid man that the great issue decided by the American people was whether we would abandon the ancient policies of this Government, policies so well laid down by George Washington in his immortal farewell address, or whether we should adhere to those policies. The American people answered in thundering tones. Yet we find men standing on the floor of the Senate to-day repeating upon this floor the speeches they made on the hustings when they were talking about the beauty of dreams and the glory of visions.

We had a eulogy on dreams here a few moments ago. Every time we use the illustration or speak of the futility of dreams, meaning to describe the impractical, we are immediately told that every great thing originated in a dream. I deny the proposition. Since the days of the prophets nothing has ever originated in a dream that has been of any good to anyone. Things originate in ideas, and there are mighty few men who have any lucid intervals when they are sound asleep. An idea is not a dream. It may be something new, but if it is of any value it is a sound thought and not an idle dream, not the vagary of a disordered intellect nor the drivel of a brain that is steeped in slumber.

I have been accused this afternoon of being practical. What is it to be practical? It is to pick one's course of conduct to suit the facts of life and not the dreams of life. It is to make one's ideas and one's plans so that they will work out. If they work out, they are practical. If they will not work out, they are impractical, and there is nothing in the world that is of the slightest value unless it will work out and bring direct results. If we could just get rid of the little oratorical vaporings and begin to talk with something of mathematical certainty, we would not have so much trouble to arrive at correct conclusions.

We hear a great deal of talk about idealism, the idealism of America, the idealism of men. There are two conceptions of idealism. If by idealism is meant that a man is so exalted in his purposes that he disregards his own interests from any selfish standpoint and endeavors to benefit other people without trying to benefit himself, that kind of idealism is admirable in an individual. But if by idealism is meant that a man follows visions and dreams, that he does things that are impractical, that will not work out, then that kind of idealism is closely associated with insanity.

It seems nowadays that if a man undertakes to talk about the facts as they are he is at once condemned as being utterly sordid. Unfortunately, after all the talk that we may have about ideals we must still face the old, cold, hard truths of life. We can not escape them. Although we stood and talked for a thousand years, still the hard facts would come and confront us. Legislation if it be wise recognizes the fact just as that fact exists, and having recognized it, it tries to better that fact if it be possible.

We have had some of these dreams in this country, much to our detriment and greatly to our loss. I heard a Senator deliver an address here the other day in which he denounced every preparation for war, every effort to place our country in the condition of defense. I heard the same Senator make the same speech in practically the same terms less than six months before the European war broke out.

There was then a band of people, calling themselves idealists, who went up and down the country telling us that there would never be any more war, that Christian civilization would not permit it; that the instruments of destruction were so terrible and the advance of Christianity and of humanitarian ideas so pronounced that there would never be any danger of any war. They announced, practically, that the millennium had come. They announced that in the face of some facts which the practical man observed all the time and for which he had regard all the time.

What were those facts? They were that Germany was increasing her armament; and she was not only increasing her armaments but she was doing it for a purpose. Great Britain was increasing her armament, and she was doing it for a purpose. France was increasing her armament, and she was doing it for a purpose. Fundamentally, that purpose was to outstrip the other nations of the world in a policy of imperialism. Coupled with that, of course, was something of fear which each of those nations may have had of the other. But the cold truth of history is that when England embarked upon her career of imperialism under Disraeli, when she started to seize the helpless lands and helpless people of the world, Germany and Italy and France followed her example, and it became a race, not between nations seeking to defend themselves but by nations seeking to exploit the earth. Every man who looked at the facts as they were knew that those conditions were liable at any time to produce a clash, and that clash finally came.

We were told there would be no war, notwithstanding those facts. Every man who said that there might be a war was condemned as a bloodthirsty villain. Accordingly, when the war broke out in Europe, every man who said that we might be dragged into that war and that there ought to be some preparation was denounced. The President of the United States declared that we were too proud to fight—and there was no preparation made. A Senator who spoke here this afternoon said that the President in the spring of 1916 knew we were going into the war. If that is true, then what right did the President have to conduct that campaign upon the slogan "He kept us out of war" and to stand upon the Democratic platform that declared we were going to stay out of the war?

We entered the war; and for what purpose? I have at great length and in previous addresses to the Senate read the record, and shown by the record two things: First, that we declined to enter the war, even when our ships were sunk, after the Lusitania had been sunk, after Belgium had been invaded, and when atrocity after atrocity had been committed which horrified the world. We finally entered the war because Germany had declared she proposed to renew her policy of sinking ships with submarines. Even then we did not declare war, but the President waited for an overt act to be committed. He declared, and declared officially, in substance that unless overt acts were committed we would not enter the war. Finally the overt acts were committed—three of our ships being sunk in one day—and we then entered the war. However, we did not even declare war on Germany. We declared that Germany had made war upon us and that a state of war existed.

There was not a word heard about democratizing the world; there was not a word heard about America going over there to settle the difficulties of Europe, and to stay over there to help settle them. We declared that Germany was making war upon us. Such a resolution would not have received in the Senate a single vote if there had been coupled with it a declaration that we were going to stay over there in Europe to help those nations settle their difficulties except the one in which we were concerned. Every man in this Senate who will be honest with himself will have to admit that.

The talk about democratizing the world began long after we entered the war; and, Mr. President, the talk about democratizing the world—and I say it with due respect—was about as senseless a thing as ever fell from human lips. I will tell you why. Who was it was to democratize the world? What were the instrumentalities by which the democratization was to be produced? There was one Republic in the war besides ours; all the rest of them were monarchies. The indefensible thought was put forward that six or seven kings, backed by six or seven aristocracies, were about to take the crowns off the heads of the monarchs of the world, including themselves, and turn the world into a great democracy. Who ever believed that would happen? Not a king lost his crown except by revolt of his own people, and some of those people have been setting up kings since. Some of the countries which we established are monarchies or near monarchies. Everybody that said that would happen was just a practical man, and that was all; he was not an idealist.

Then, we were told, pursuant to this same line of thought, that we would have a great brotherhood of nations assembled; and when those nations were assembled together, by their representatives, they would constitute a body devoted to the service of God and man, without a single selfish thought or a single iniquitous motive. What was the first thing that we observed? We observed that at the close of the war those countries that we had been told were to be the instrumentalities of the democratization of the world and the liberation of small nations seized every foot of territory that was held by helpless people anywhere in the world. England seized more territory, as the result of the World War, than Rome occupied in the produest days of the Caesars; France seized bodies of land many times larger than her own domain; Italy took all that she could get within her grasp; Greece is engaged in a war at this moment for the purpose of expanding her dominions. We set up a new child, our first born; we baptized it from this holy fountain of internationalism and regenerated it with the new philosophy of humanity; we named it Poland; and the first thing it did was to march 300 miles into the territory of an adjoining State and, with fire and sword, begin the work of conquest.

We set up Czechoslovakia and Jugoslavia, and they have been on the border line of war two or three times. One excuse for the French Army to-day was offered that it had to hold Syria. Why, and under what right? By the right of the sword; by the right of conquest.

So, Mr. President, in all the history of this world there is no more complete example of the fact that the nations of the Old World have engaged in the policy of exploitation and expansion than is afforded by recent events; yet there were men who were charged with being merely practical and hard-hearted creatures who said that you can not take men who are engaged in that kind of spoliation and transform them into saints by having them meet over in Geneva and pass a resolution.

But I have only adverted to a little of this. What of Shantung? What of the plundering of that nation that had been our ally by the joint conspiracy and joint action of three of our other allies? What of the secret conniving and conspiring against China—a nation that we induced to enter the war? Yet we are told that the representatives of these nations, appearing in the league with their swords still dripping, would be the proper vicegerents of Christ on earth to establish His millennium among men!

But that is not all, sir. This league was formed for the purpose of crystallizing the fetters upon conquered people; of driving the nails into the coffin of the hopes of conquered masses upon penalty of being set upon, not by one nation but by the united powers of all the earth.

Mr. President, they have assembled themselves in their league, and it is discovered by practical men, which is only another way of saying sensible men, that when they sit around that table they are sitting each for the purpose of perpetuating its own power and its own greatness and of more firmly establishing itself and its possessions, whether taken justly or unjustly.

But, Mr. President, one of the things that the idealists expected was that this league would when organized reduce armaments. Let us not take our answer out of the clouds; let us take it out of the facts of earth. The fact is that when the peace council was assembled, even while the infant league was still awaiting its advent into the cradle, Great Britain declared that she would not surrender her sovereignty of the sea. Every responsible British statesman is on record to that effect; and if the British refused to surrender their dominance upon the sea, every nation of the earth knew that that meant they must stand to their defense, for they have sense enough to know that a nation so Roman in its spirit, so Roman in its traditions, so Roman in its policies that with but 38,000,000 people it could extend its dominions over 425,000,000 protesting human beings; that, with a little island home, it could extend its flag over one-third of God's habitable creation—that a nation of that kind did not keep a navy as a plaything. If they had any cause to doubt it, they had but to turn the pages of history and read the story, every page of which is written in blood and every line of which was penned with the sword; yes, and, as has been suggested by a Senator, every dollar of which was paid for by the conquered countries.

France, as has been stated here on the floor, absolutely declined to reduce her army, even though Germany had been disarmed and had been limited to 100,000 men for a constabulary. I do not criticize France for this; I am just telling these dreamers that they need not any longer wonder whether their dreams come true. Dreams of that kind do not come true. When you dream that there is going to be no more sun in the skies, that there are going to be no more stars at night, your dream does not come true; it is only when you dream of facts that your dream is ever realized.

Mr. President, if this League of Nations thing is what these gentlemen over here have been professing, even this afternoon while they stood tearfully beside its grave, why is it that it has not taken action to bring about disarmament? They proudly boast that they have in it now 46 nations, I believe, including Liberia. They tell us that they are so great and so powerful and so potential that we will ultimately be forced to join. If that is true, if they are so great an association as is claimed, why have they not acted, why have they not proclaimed disarmament?

Mr. President, let us look at it calmly. Let us try to use our common sense just a little bit. Let us assume that these 46 nations are assembled in good faith, that they propose in good faith to carry out a policy of disarmament, that they propose in good faith to unite their powers for the purpose of protecting each other in accordance with the written terms of the contract they have signed. Now, why do they not do it?

Germany is disarmed. Russia for the present is impotent. What is the menace, then, that keeps them from doing it? Is there any man born of woman who dares say it is the United States; that they believe that the United States of America has in its heart the remotest thought of making war upon any nation? The man who tells that story to himself is guilty of telling a falsehood to his own soul. He knows it is not true. There is not a man with common sense in the world who does not know that it is not true.

Do you think England is keeping her navy because she thinks we are going to attack her? Do you think France is keeping her army because she thinks we are going to attack her? Do you think Japan is keeping her navy because she thinks we are going 6,000 miles from our shores to pick a quarrel with her? They know that the sole purpose of the United States, declared by the vote of the people in the last election, is to stay home and attend to her own business and let all the rest of the world go home, and they have all certified, as the Senator from Connecticut suggests, time and again that we are the only nation they trust. They, therefore, are not keeping this armament because of anything that the United States is doing in the way of keeping out of the league. They have all of Europe and all of Asia and all of Africa for their field of operations. We have already told them to keep out of this continent, and we are going to make them keep out, too.

Why, then, do they not produce this peace? Why, then, do they not produce this concert of mind and heart? Why do they not agree among themselves to disarm? The answer is that there is not one of them that trusts the other, and there is not one of them that trusts the League of Nations, for the aggregate of 46 distrusts will not produce a confidence.

What is it that they want us in for? Why, they want us in for the same reason that they want us to cancel our debts to them. They want us to bear the expense. They want us in to guarantee that whenever they get a majority in the league that wants to do something the tremendous force of the United States will be there to help accomplish it. Now, what will that something be? Primarily, it will be that we will spend our blood and treasure to enable them to keep the greatest amount of loot that was ever gathered in a century of time since the world was created.

Mr. President, let me follow a dream a little bit. For some hours I listened to a sermon here this afternoon that sounded almost as good to me as though I had heard it delivered by a professional preacher in a great temple devoted to the service of idealism. The orator said, "Is the world never to be better? Are we not some time to reach a condition where we will no longer slaughter each other?"

Yes; maybe we will reach that condition some time, but what about the meantime? Maybe some day the golden glow will sweep over the night of ignorance and of selfishness; maybe some day the figure of the cross will be envisioned upon the skies; maybe some day the lion and the lamb will lie down together, and we will listen to the music of the anvil and the hammer beating swords into plowshares and spears into pruning hooks; but what about the interval of time? That is what is bothering me.

They tell us that our race is the best type of Christian civilization. Very well; I want to preserve that civilization until Christ does come to earth, and I do not want any individual to assume that he can transform himself into a second Christ by talking about idealism. Every once in a while, you know, there is a gentleman who imagines that he is Napoleon, or Cæsar, or Hannibal, or Mahomet, or the Saviour. The trouble is, they are idealists; they are not practical men. Suppose we sit down here and say to ourselves, "Some day, somewhere, in some remote century of time, people are going to be so good that they will not kill us, and therefore we will throw away our weapons and give them several thousand years in which to butcher us"; and suppose that in the meantime this race of men to which we belong, and which is all that represents real civilization in the world, is destroyed. There will not be anybody to recognize the millennium when it does come. There will not be anybody with enough idealism to know what it is when he sees it.

If it be true that we are the custodians of civilization, then it is our duty to preserve that civilization. If it be true that America saved civilization less than three years ago with the help of France and England, or that they saved it with our help—I make no quarrel about the way you state it—how did they save it? They saved it with guns in their hands. They saved it with bayonets fixed. They saved it with mighty fleets that plowed the ocean. They saved it with metal, and they saved it with men who knew how to die, and perhaps they knew how to pray, too; but they fought as they prayed. So you have the problem now on the one hand of waiting for the millennium and taking a chance on being butchered in the meantime and your civilization destroyed, and on the other hand you have the problem of preserving that civilization.

Mr. President, I think we have the best civilization and the best Government over here. Anyway, it suits me better than anybody else's Government. I have not joined that merry crew of modern tories who can stand on the floor of the Senate and say that Great Britain has a better Government than the United States. She has not anything better than the United States except a navy, and that is better only because it is bigger, and I am not in favor of allowing her to retain that advantage any longer; but she is a great people. Next to ours, perhaps, except France, she has as good a Government as there is. We are not expecting war with England; we are not expecting war with anybody; but what is the part of wisdom? Is it not to be in shape so that other nations will not trespass on our rights and force us into war? And that brings me back to a thought that I had partially expressed earlier in my talk.

We started out by telling the people of the world that we were too proud to fight, and they took us at our word. We had but a small Navy; we had but a small Army; but, worse than that, the nations of the world that had real military experts understood that we had scarcely a factory that could turn out the instrumentalities of modern warfare unless we transformed that factory, and that took time; and so the Germans said, "We can clean up France and England," to use a slang phrase; "we can conquer them before America gets in; and, anyway, she is too proud to fight, and she will not come in."

It was the great mistake that Germany made. She found out that while we could talk peace with our mouths we could fight with our arms. She found out that the real heart of this people still pumped the good red blood of the Revolution. She found out that we could get ready quicker than she thought we could. She had miscalculated.

Senators, I will take my share of responsibility for not having advocated, in the past, a stronger Navy. If we had had a Navy as great as that of the British Empire, do you believe that Great Britain ever would have seized one of our ships in this war? Do you believe that Germany ever would have sunk an American ship? I have no more doubt in my mind that Germany would have carefully abstained from interfering with our commerce or firing upon our flag if we had had a strong Navy than I have of my existence.

But we did not have it, and she thought she could advantage herself by sinking vessels indiscriminately and we could not get into the war in time, and she would conquer France and England and Italy, and then she would have a separate question to settle with us.

Let us apply it now just as sensible men. Suppose a British ship were to commit some outrage upon our commerce to-morrow, or something we thought was an outrage. Suppose the vessel of some little South American country or North American country, let us say Mexico, were to commit a similar act against our commerce. Which of the two would we be most likely to send an ultimatum to? Every man who will be honest with himself on this question knows that we would be very careful, in dealing with Great Britain, to know that we were standing upon the absolute facts. We would be very diplomatic in our dealings with her. We would exhaust every resource of diplomacy before we would resort to force. You also know that in the case of Mexico if you did not have a strong President who stood up and demanded that we should not treat her differently from the way in which we would treat a great nation, if the outrage had been one which appealed to the imagination of our people, we would be at war with her in a very short time, or we would compel her to come to humiliating terms, at least to instant reparation.

What is true of these nations is true of us. Let us see about Japan. Let us see about the treatment we are receiving from this blessed League of Nations. The President reserved the island of Yap—at least he thought he had, and that it was to be internationalized. Everybody smiles at the name. It is not an important island, except as a station for wireless and cable work, telegraphic communication, but it is very important for that.

But Japan says she holds it under the mandate of the League of Nations, a mandate of this organization of a few men who meet over there once in a while; that they have told her to hold it. So she will disregard our rights in the Pacific Ocean, and she proposes to hold it. Do you know that I have this idea, that she would not say that to Great Britain, and the reason she would not say it to Great Britain is that British guns are too numerous and too long and the British fleet sweeps too many seas.

Suppose Japan persists in that? I am not going to say or intimate that it will produce war, but it will produce an ugly feeling, and there are conditions which might arise out of it which might be very serious. Let me just dismiss that line of argument. It is rather too delicate to pursue; but let Senators think about it.

Mr. President, advocates of the League of Nations and the good intentions of the League of Nations do not seem to have very much confidence in their child. There it is over there, with 46 nations, all anxious to keep the peace. If so, what have we to fear?

The truth about the matter is that you know it has already proven itself a disappointment. It has been said here that Japan is not building a navy. Mr. President, a partial quotation from some article the Senator gave is the first statement I ever heard to that effect. Upon the contrary, the papers and periodicals have borne telegram after telegram showing the great effort Japan is making to increase her navy. We are told with a singular sort of amusing phraseology, first, that England has stopped building capital battleships, therefore that she is leading us in the march of peace; but before the sentence was concluded it slipped out of the Senator's mouth that the reason she has quit, if she has quit, is that she has gone into conquering the air.

The fact is, and we all know it, and it is the only argument I have ever heard which seems to me to be worth anything against carrying out this naval program—the fact is that some great military experts claim that modern battle fleets will be helpless if they are attacked from the air by modern air fighters, and further say that Great Britain is so much convinced of that that she has actually stopped building some of her fleets, but when she stopped building the fleets to sail the surface of the seas she began building other and greater fleets to sail the air.

What does that prove? Does it prove the good intention of Great Britain to disarm, or does it prove her desire to create still more superior arms?

Yet that is the kind of argument we are treated to on the floor of the Senate hour after hour and day after day.

Mr. President, one could stand here and talk a long time in reply to these statements. I think I have said about all I want to say. My own notion is that we laid down a naval program in 1916 which ought to be completed, no matter what else is done. We have passed a resolution by a unanimous vote of the Senate asking the only two great naval powers there are outside the United States to meet with us and to agree upon a limitation of sea armament.

If we put that limitation on to-morrow, nobody will conceive the idea that they are ready, in the present state of the world, to reduce the British Navy and take her battleships off the ocean, or that Japan is going to sink her navy and we are going to sink ours. What may be accomplished, if it is gone at in a sensible way, is to secure an agreement that, present programs being carried out, there will be no more vessels built for a period of time. Then by future negotiations we may be able to do something regulating the future. But, sirs, even such a program as that ought to embrace the right of the United States to a better position upon the seas relatively than she has to-day.

Now, let me tell you why I say that. I do not believe, even after the lesson of this Great War, that we conceive fully the importance of the command of the seas. If we had a disagreement with France and with England and with other nations, nevertheless it is nothing but an agreement, and treaties have been broken ever since they have been written, and no nation is wise which relies alone upon treaty arrangements.

England to-day has command of the oceans, and let me just give you this one thought—not new perhaps to any of you, but it hapepns to fit in what I am saying just now. The command of the oceans was always important, but the command of the oceans to-day means the command practically of the world. Wars of a hundred years ago were fought by armies that marched over land; on horseback or on foot they traveled. They had to either live off the country or they had to haul their provisions behind them in immense wagon trains, slowly and laboriously, over muddy roads. The result was that armies were limited in their size.

The armies of Napoleon would have been insignificant in the late war. Their field of operations was limited. The length of the war was limited. Their devastation was similarly limited.

Now, Mr. President, railroads have annihilated distance upon the land; the most remote interiors are brought into immediate touch with the ocean's shore. The steam vessel has taken the place of the sail ship, and accordingly the country that commands the ocean commands the resources of the entire world, and can bring them all to bear at the point of mobilization. Men were making articles 1,000 miles south of the Equator and 2,000 miles north of the Equator, which in a few days, a few weeks at the outside, reached the line of contact between the French and English and the German forces in France.

The busy fingers of millions of women, thousands of miles away from the field of war, were knitting, making clothing here because they loved some of the combatants or because they were paid for their labor. Of course, those in our country and in the countries actually at war did not do it for pay. Mills, factories, a million wheels were buzzing all over the world and a united industry and power, the creative strength of the world, was mobilized; and it was in the control of the nation that controlled the seas. If Germany could have kept the seas, Germany would have won the war. If Germany could have kept a fleet upon the seas so strong that England could not overcome it, even though it could not overcome the British fleet, we never would have been able, probably, to have landed a single squadron of soldiers in France. Every man knows how helpless is a fleet of transports, with no weapons, laden with its thousands of boys. If one single man of war comes within gunshot, all go to the bottom. So if Germany could have kept a few vessels upon the ocean, England never would have been able to have mobilized her troops from Australia and Canada, New Zealand and India. Her food and her men alike would have been gone, and we would not have been able to go to her assistance effectively.

Mr. President, that is an alarming situation. We need not in any way reflect upon Great Britain. We must treat her, however, as a great rival, a friendly rival to-day in the world. May she always be friendly. I am unwilling that my country shall be in a position so that her ports can be blockaded, her commerce destroyed, and all the energies and all the resources of the world brought to bear upon us. Especially am I of that view when I contemplate the fact that just north of us there is an immense domain under the flag of Great Britain, with 9,000,000 loyal British upon the soil of that vast domain, with islands that fringe the Atlantic and constitute a screen beyond our shores, nearly all of them under the British flag; that within 50 miles of Miami, Fla., England owns the land; that this double fringe of islands practically closes the Gulf of Mexico and commands the canal; that upon our Pacific coast we are equally open to attack; that our neighbor to the south is none too friendly, and is too helpless to protect her own domain if she should be attacked.

This is not jingoism. A jingo is a man who proposes to stir up his people to war and to war against others. This, sir, is an attempt to preserve the integrity and independence of the United States and to keep her at peace by certifying to all the world that we are prepared to defend ourselves.

Mr. President, that is all I desire to say upon this question. I think it is time to get down and face the cold facts of existence. If the resolution which was drawn by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which was introduced by him, and I believe, finally, for some reason, was introduced in substantially the same form by another Senator, will bring Great Britain and Japan to a condition where they are willing to limit armament, then well and good. I voted for the resolution; I supported it; but in the meantime I am not willing to stop for one single day pending the negotiations. The harder we work now and the faster we build now, the quicker we will have a resolution of that kind brought to fruition and the better terms we will get.

We have had a great deal of talk about saving money. I will tell the Senate how we can save several million dollars a year. Let us abolish the Federal Trade Commission. We created it one day, and they said it would only cost us about $25,000 a year. It costs $900,000 a year now, and I think it is doing $9,000,000 a year damage. Let us get rid of some of these useless bureaus.

There is another thing. We have a large debt abroad. I am going to stop to mention that. I think that debt is much more likely to be paid if they understand that the sheriff has a gun in his pocket than if one goes out with his hat in his hand asking to have it paid. I am not suggesting war to get it. I do not mean that. I think the time has come to deal with all these questions as practical men, to recognize facts exactly as they are, to get our heads out of the clouds and our eyes upon the earth where we live, and let us try to make them see that our country is secure, and if our country is secure civilization will be secure. If our country is ever unfortunately destroyed, then, in truth, will the flag of civilization have been furled.

I started to sit down, but I thought of something else I wanted to say, and I will say it while I am here. Our country has reached a point economically where it must manufacture vast quantities of goods and create vast quantities of provisions and supplies to sell all around the world. Fifty-one per cent of our people now live in cities.

The markets of the world are the only answer to continued prosperity. We have expended hundreds of millions of dollars in building ships to trade with the world. If we are to trade with the world and do it through the merchant fleet that we own, there must necessarily be a policing of that business. We can not send our commerce into every country and land and send it there with safety unless the nations of the world understand that we are prepared to protect our rights. When they understand that, they will not interfere with us. If they understand the contrary they will.

Let us take a lesson out of the story of China. She has been following idealism. So far as I know it has been nearly a thousand years since China ever undertook a war that could be called a war of conquest.

She has taught the doctrine that men ought not to fight even in defense of their own homes; that war is brutality. She has taught it so successfully that her civilization has gone backward; that her lands are being divided up, and that the most virtuous nations in the world, even Great Britain and France, join with the ancient enemy of China to divide her asunder. That demonstrates how much confidence can be put in an agreement.

China had an agreement. She not only had an agreement, but she was then sending her sons to die on the fields of France, as we were sending ours, except she did not send them as soldiers, but sent the poor fellows with spades and picks in their hands to die without a chance to fight back. Having made that sacrifice, and even while she was making it, while Chinamen were breathing poison gas into their lungs, while their veins were being drained through the wounds made by the bullets of Germans, England and France sat down with Japan and robbed China. Then, Senators talk about relying upon agreements! Would they have done that to China if she had had an army? Would they have done it to China if she had had a fleet sailing the oceans and back of big guns yellow men who knew how to shoot? Some kinds of idealism approach idiocy.

Mr. President, I should not have taken this much time of the Senate at this hour, but I understand that it is a fact that the naval bill has no chance to go through at this session, and I might just as well talk as anybody else. I felt like saying these things. We have had this old corpse of the League of Nations dragged around the Senate Chamber for the last 30 days by a number of gentlemen who acted as pallbearers at its funeral and who ought to know that it is dead. I am getting tired of ghost dances. Let me tell the Democrats on this side, I challenge your motives not at all. I think you were suffering from shell shock; that is all; but in the name of common sense why do we want to cling to an issue that brought us to this frightful defeat? Why not accept it? Why not say the question was submitted to the people in a great and solemn referendum, and the people decided it and we are going to accept the decision and quit talking about it? Do you want to tie that corpse on your back and enter another race? If so, then let me tell you what will happen. You will lose every State in the South as well as every State in the North. I said on this floor that the solid South would be broken in the last election, and it was. I am not a prophet, but I am not an idealist. I might get low enough to run a bunko game, but I never would play it on myself; at least, I would not do so a second time.

I hope we are as wise at least as the old farmer who had just returned from the great city of New York. His friends, observing a package under his arm, securely wrapped up in paper, said to him, "Uncle Dan, where have you been?" He replied, "I have been to New York." They said, "Well, we hope you did not buy another gold brick?" He answered, "Well, yes; I did; but I told the fellow I bought it from that if it did not turn out better than the one I bought from him before I would not patronize him any more." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I hope that we are through with that issue. I thank the Senate.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted the following conference report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15943) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 23, 104, and 105.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert the following: "$77,839,300"; and the Senate agree to the same.

J. W. WADSWORTH, Jr.,
HOWARD SUTHERLAND,
HARRY S. NEW,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
KENNETH MCKELLAR,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

D. R. ANTHONY, Jr.,
LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
C. BASCOM SLEMP,
T. U. SISSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what change, if any, was made in the amendment in regard to the distribution of automobiles and the trucks among the States for road building?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The conferees finally came to an agreement upon that item by which the Secretary of War is directed to sell or to dispose of by transfer to the Department of Agriculture, under the terms of existing law, an aggregate of 10,000 trucks now owned by the War Department, with the provision in effect that half of them shall be sold and half of them shall be transferred to the States through the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. OVERMAN. The distribution is to be on the 50-50 plan?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is to be on the 50-50 plan.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is the best that could be done, I presume.

The War Department claims they need 50 per cent of them?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The War Department did not make that claim, but the House conferees insisted that at least 50 per cent of them should be sold and the money turned back into the Treasury. That is the best compromise we could make upon the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that the conferees on the part of the House insisted upon selling them all, but we were able to secure the compromise now provided in the bill, under which half of them are to be sold, and the other half to be transferred to the Agricultural Department.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to ask the Senator from New York a question merely for information. Some days ago when this question was before the Senate, I think it was stated that there were some six or seven thousand trucks. The Senator from New York, as I understand, now states that there are 10,000 trucks to be disposed of. Is that correct?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator from North Dakota has in mind tractors. The item under discussion relates to motor trucks.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator state the size of the Army that will be provided for under the proposed law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes, Mr. President. The appropriation as now carried in the Army appropriation bill, in accordance with the conference report if agreed to, applicable to the pay of the enlisted men of the line and staff, which is the controlling item as to the size of the enlisted personnel, is $77,839,300. That will pay for one year an Army of 165,000 men, including the Philippine Scouts and the flying cadets. I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Has the House passed on the conference report?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The House has not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But it is a final report?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a final report, being a complete agreement.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand this is the best that could be done concerning the amendment to which I have referred, because the House insisted on selling the trucks and this was a compromise on the 50-50 plan?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senate conferees, I pledge the Senator from North Carolina, did their best to stand by the Senate's position, but we did not feel justified in killing the bill upon a question of that kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

CARE OF SICK AND DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the opposition to the naval appropriation bill and, of course, the proper effort, in my opinion, on the part of the Senator in charge of that bill and of the Senate to pass it puts into grave peril two amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill that should at this time have some consideration.

There is not a Senator on this floor who is more anxious to pass the naval appropriation bill than am I, and I do not for that reason purpose consuming valuable time at this juncture, but I want to remind Senators that amendments numbered 21 and 22 in the sundry civil appropriation bill are vital, I will say, to the honor of this Republic and to the well-being of its ex-soldiers; they are amendments that run to the very good faith of this Government, designed as they are to provide hospital facilities for the care and treatment of sick and disabled soldiers.

Now, I wish to inquire, respectfully, of course, where is the sundry civil appropriation bill, and is it going to pass or fail?

I am sure no one Senator here more than any other is interested in the hospital amendments in the bill, and if the sundry civil appropriation bill is to fail I know that each Senator here hopes and desires to have an opportunity to pass some other bill in which the hospital provisions of the sundry civil bill may be incorporated, so that money may be appropriated to enlarge the capacity of existing hospitals and erect such new hospitals as the Treasury Department and the Surgeon General may see fit. It seems to me that we ought not to permit the time to flow on without having some understanding as to what is to be the fate of the hospital amendments in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. ASHURST. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I was not in the Chamber when the Senator opened his remarks, but I will say that the sundry civil bill is still in limbo. The papers are in possession of the conferees on the part of the House, and they have taken them to the other side while we await action.

As to the items for the aid of the disabled ex-soldiers in connection with War Risk Insurance Bureau, vocational education, and hospital care, the sundry civil bill carries items amounting in all to $267,600,400, $18,600,000 of this amount is in one section of the bill to be immediately available and remain available until expended.

Mr. ASHURST. They are embraced in amendments numbered 21 and 22.

Mr. WARREN. I do not recall at the moment the exact numbers of the amendments, but they are in a section of the bill together, and the conferees of the House and the Senate have arrived at an agreement, so far as those particular items are concerned. They have broadened the scope somewhat as to the uses to which the appropriation may be applied, so as to secure immediate action. I believe the provision has been bettered, because in the first amendment it was rather necessary, as we used material which came over from the House from another committee which authorized certain action to be taken, but did not appropriate funds for it.

There is a perfect agreement upon that item, and I believe that before we adjourn there will be a perfect agreement in the House and Senate, and the hospitals will be provided for.

I will say to the Senator from Arizona that he is no more anxious about the matter; in fact, I think he can hardly possibly be as anxious as I am concerning it.

Mr. ASHURST. If I may interrupt the Senator, let me say that I premised my remarks by asserting that we are all—I said one Senator no more than another—equally anxious about those amendments. Do I understand the Senator, who is chairman of the committee, to say that there may be an agreement?

Mr. WARREN. Not on the sundry civil bill as a whole perhaps.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, if the conferees are not to agree upon the sundry civil bill, of course, amendments numbered 21 and 22 will perish, because they are part and parcel of the bill, and we are not, under our rules, of course, permitted to carve out one or two of the amendments and agree to them and have them become a law if the bill is to fail. Does it not, therefore, seem to be the part of wisdom that a separate bill should be introduced embodying these two amendments as the conferees have agreed on them, and that such a bill should be passed? Should not some measure be taken now before this day expires so that it will be impossible for any Senator, if through some odd mischance he should attempt to do so, to kill the hospital bill? Would it not be the part of prudence now to take measures so that beyond the shadow of a doubt the hospital provisions on which the conferees have agreed may in some way become a law?

Mr. WARREN. That is the intention of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ASHURST. I have absolute faith in the statement of the chairman of the committee, and if he assures me that the committee intends to and will take care of the hospital items, I am content.

Mr. WARREN. They intend to provide for at least that amount of money and to make it immediately available, and that it shall remain available until expended.

Mr. ASHURST. That relieves me immensely, Mr. President. Now, the learned Senator says the conferees intend to do it. Will he not give us, because he has it in his power, the assurance that they will do it? The Senator can do that.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to finish my statement?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. What is troubling me most and what I want to endeavor to get is not only the $18,600,000, but I want to get the whole $267,000,000 for this purpose agreed to and have it provided by the present Congress, if possible.

Mr. ASHURST. And I honor the Senator for his attempt to do so. I am not casting any strictures upon him; but if the sundry civil bill is to fail it will be impossible to secure the enactment of the provisions embraced in the amendments referred to, whereas I believe there would not be a dissenting voice on a roll call; in fact, I believe we could have a unanimous vote on amendments numbered 21 and 22, as modified by the conferees.

Mr. WARREN. I shall call on the Senator later to assist me in coming to some understanding as to this entire problem, embracing the whole sundry civil bill, and particularly the amendments that he has mentioned.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was just going to say to the Senator from Arizona that I do not think there will be very much prospect of carrying out the program that he outlines. We are just as capable here of using as much time when the Senator undertakes to bring that matter up as he is of using time when we are trying to pass the naval appropriation bill, and we will be very much disposed to do so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, as the question of the sundry civil bill has come up, I want to say just one word. I do not believe in foreshadowing coming events and I am not going to take up the time of the Senate to-night.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator from Washington. Will the Senator pardon me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from Arizona had yielded the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. I did not understand what the Senator from Washington stated in regard to the hospital amendments. I did not catch the full force of his statement. Will the Senator from Washington advise me as to what he said?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood that the Senator was talking about this matter in disagreement in the sundry civil bill, the matter of the establishment of a nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals Rapids.

Mr. ASHURST. I am talking about the matter of hospitalization.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is that in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. ASHURST. That is in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is there not a disagreement between the two Houses on the Muscle Shoals nitrate plant?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know anything about that. That is what I was trying to inquire.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is in the same bill.

Mr. ASHURST. It is. All I wish to be assured of—and I think we all agree to that—is that whether the sundry civil bill is imperiled or not we ought to pass the hospitalization item; and I want the Senator from Washington to know that I am as earnestly in favor of the naval appropriation bill as he is, and want to help him in my weak way if I can; and I hope he will not consider that because I rose to take a few minutes of time in asking about the hospitalization item I am any the less interested in the naval appropriation bill. I am profoundly interested in it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I appreciate that. I understand the Senator's attitude. I was speaking altogether about the disagreement on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Now I yield the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I did not intend to bring up this matter at this late hour, and I would let it go without discussion now except for the fact that some reference has been made to the sundry civil bill and seeming to couple its failure with some action on this side of the Congress.

The action of the Senate has been uniformly proper. The Senate conferees have acted only within their rights. The action on the other side of the Capitol can not be justified in any legislative body. I do not intend to foreshadow this discussion until to-morrow, when we will know what has happened, and then the responsibility will lie at the door of the men who carry the responsibility. For any man or set of men, because they want by strong-arm methods to defeat one item, to destroy an appropriation bill that carries $267,000,000 for the wounded and disabled soldiers of this country is to commit a crime against the Nation and the American people.

This question will be understood; but I do not propose to raise the issue. I did not bring it here now. There are yet hours in which this mistake may be remedied. When the time comes, the country shall know where the responsibility rests.

ENROLLED BILL.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE CHAMP CLARK.

The message also communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. CHAMP CLARK, late a Representative from the State of Missouri, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon, including an invitation to the Vice President, the Vice President elect, the Members of the Senate, and the Members of the Senate elect to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative in the Hall of the House of Representatives, to be held on Saturday, March 5, 1921, at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have a very painful duty to perform.

For nearly a half century the public has had the services of one of the most remarkable men who have rendered the scroll of American statesmanship illustrious. At the age of 22 his talent was so recognized that he was made president of one of the important colleges of the country. By his own exertions he fought his way to the front and became distinguished at the bar of his State. He served with rare distinction and merit in the legislative bodies of his State. He came to the American Congress, where his great abilities and sterling patriotism won for him the respect of the House of Representatives, and for at least 25 years he has been a great national figure and national leader.

He was engaged in all the fierce struggles of these years, yet as he sleeps to-night there is not an enemy in all the world for CHAMP CLARK.

His integrity was never challenged, his manhood never attacked, his courage never questioned. As rugged as the granite hills of his native State, as tender as the blossoms that glorify the fields of his adopted State, as strong as the oak, and as sweet as the babe he lived, and, like a good soldier, without fear, without drawing back, he wrapped the mantle of his manhood about him and laid him down to the embraces of that final repose which all must some time enter into.

So it is my very painful duty to announce to the Senate that at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes to-day CHAMP CLARK, former Speaker of the House of Representatives, died.

Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. CHAMP CLARK, a Representative from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That a committee of the House be appointed to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. CLARK in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes antemeridian, on Saturday, March 5, instant, and that the Members of the present House and of the House elect attend the same.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect, the remains of Mr. CLARK be removed from Washington to Bowling Green, Mo., in charge of the Sergeant at Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House communicate these proceedings to the Senate and invite the Vice President, the Vice President elect, the Members of the Senate, and the Members of the Senate elect to attend the funeral in the Hall of the House of Representatives; and that the Senate be invited to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the House.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 2, 1921.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for this day. Direct us in the pathway of truth, and may our lives be inspired by Thy wisdom. Comfort the home that mourns and lift the burden of the heavy laden and light the candle of Thy presence on the altar of that stricken fireside. Abide with the stricken one in the measure of a great strength, a sweet peace, and a beautiful resignation. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RECESS, 6 TO 8 P. M.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess from 6 until 8 p. m.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, when the House had up for consideration Saturday last the Agricultural appropriation bill the House asked for a conference with the Senate on certain disagreeing votes between the two Houses. The Senate did not agree to House amendments Nos. 115 and 116, and asked for a further conference upon those amendments. This fact was not called to my attention yesterday; and the House conferees, on the theory that those amendments were in conference due to the request of the House on the agreement of the Senate for a conference, proceeded to confer upon those matters. In order that any question may be obviated in the matter, I ask unanimous consent that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate on amendments Nos. 115 and 116 as of yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate as stated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill of the following title:

S. 4039. An act to amend section 3 of the act of Congress of June 28, 1906, entitled "An act for the division of the lands and funds of the Osage Indians in Oklahoma, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13225) providing for the allotment of lands within the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed as a House document 1,500 copies of the Journal of the Fifty-fifth National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic for the year 1921, not to exceed $1,700 in cost, with illustrations, 1,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House and 500 for the use of the Senate.

The Senate having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 517) amending an act to provide for drainage of Indian allotments of the Five Civilized Tribes, approved March 27, 1914 (38 Stat., 310, Public, No. 77), returned by the President of the United States to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with his objections, and passed by the House on a reconsideration of the same, it was—

Resolved, That the bill pass, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, as the bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the next fiscal year passed the House it carried a total of approximately $331,000,000 for the support of the Army and the Military Academy. As brought back on this conference report the bill carries a total approximately of $341,000,000 for those purposes. The House yields to the Senate on a total of approximately $10,000,000, and the Senate yielded to the House on items approximating about $12,000,000, and there remains in disagreement about $10,000,000. The conferees are in entire agreement on practically all the items in the bill with the exception of two, one relating to the size of the Army, which is still in disagreement, the House standing for its appropriation to sustain 150,000 men, exclusive of the Philippine Scouts and flying cadets, and the Senate contending for an appropriation sufficient to maintain 175,000 men. The other item that is in disagreement is that providing for the appointment of two lieutenant generals in the Regular Army from among those who commanded field armies in France. We are also in technical disagreement on 13 other items which contain legislation which, of course, will be presented to the House for its approval in the regular order. We feel that the bill as it comes back to the House at this time contains provisions to further secure the House view of the way appropriations should be made for the Army. I want to call the attention of the House particularly to the amendment which provides that no officer or no enlisted man shall be maintained in the Army further than the amount of money which we appropriate in this law will pay for, and that, in my opinion, will forever put a stop to deficiencies in the pay of the Army from this time on.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I suppose the gentleman took into consideration in connection with such an amendment the embarrassment that might arise if the administration sought to increase the Army in an emergency, without having authority from Congress to recruit the number of men so increased?

Mr. ANTHONY. We felt that Congress has been in recent years so continuously in session and would be so continuously in session in the future that it would be perfectly feasible for the Executive to apply to the Congress for any extension of such power.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman realizes, with his long experience on the Committee on Military Affairs, that one of the reasons why the foundation law of the Army never fixed arbitrarily the number of men to be maintained from year to year was because we sought to continue the policy that gave an elastic control to the administration in the event of an emergency, which did not make it necessary for the administration to come to Congress and in that way advertise the emergency when conditions might be delicate, and thus perhaps irritate the very conditions themselves and bring on what the administration sought to avoid.

Mr. ANTHONY. But the gentleman himself well knows the abuses to which that elastic power has been subjected only just recently.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do; but I also know that it is an ancient maxim that an abuse of anything is not an argument against its proper use.

Mr. ANTHONY. We thought we would provide so that the things which have happened in the last 60 days in the way of recruiting 40,000 more men in the Army than Congress intended could not happen again.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I quite sympathize with the gentleman in the recognition of the evils and mischief we have to contend against. I merely question the remedy. I am afraid the remedy will sometimes make us embarrassment that will prove quite as serious as the evil we are now trying to correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I understood the gentleman, in addition to the size of the Army and the two lieutenant generalships, there are 13 other amendments to be voted on by the House, separately.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. In what order will the vote be taken?

Mr. ANTHONY. In the order in which they appear in the bill. If the gentleman will look at the printed copy of the conference report, he will see the amendments numbered at the end.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is it true that additional provision was made by the Senate and agreed to by the conferees to the extent of $4,000,000 for the pay of additional officers in the Army over the sum carried in the House bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is an increase of about that amount made in the item for the pay of officers, but it is not an addition to the number of officers. We are providing for the pay of 14,000 officers, but in the calculations made by the House we found we had not appropriated sufficient money to provide for their full pay. The condition arose in this way: The average pay of Army officers heretofore, all grades, from generals down to second lieutenants, has been $3,055 a year in money. There are pending in the Senate now promotions for practically every officer in the regular service, and when the Senate confirms that promotion list, as it probably will, it will give every one of these men an additional rank. That will necessitate the increase to which the gentleman refers, and the amount dates from the time these nominations were sent to the Senate, some months ago.

Mr. BRIGGS. Therefore the amount carried in the bill does not seek to make provision for any additional officers.

Mr. ANTHONY. With the limitation to which I previously referred in my discussion with the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], the number will be limited to 14,000 officers.

Mr. BRIGGS. The number was substantially that at the time the bill passed the House?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is correct.

Mr. BRIGGS. There are practically 14,000 officers now?

Mr. ANTHONY. At present there are 13,100. We did not consider the increased grades, and they have not gotten them yet, but we are advised that the Senate intends to confirm that list.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understand that the promotions are being confirmed now.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. As I understand, you have not agreed upon the size of the Army as yet?

Mr. ANTHONY. We have not.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The House is still insisting upon an Army of 150,000 men?

Mr. ANTHONY. We intend to ask the House to further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment in that respect.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And yet you have prohibited a deficiency being created. Suppose the House insists upon the Army being 150,000, how are you going to pay the Army that is now 238,000?

Mr. ANTHONY. A sufficient number of men will have to be discharged to bring it down to fit into the amount of money that we appropriate.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Right away.

Mr. ANTHONY. Within a reasonable time.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. OLNEY. Will there be sufficient time for those Members who are in favor of the Senate amendment appropriating for an Army of 175,000 men to debate this question? Would it not be wise to fix a time? I think it is a very important item.

Mr. ANTHONY. There will be no attempt to shut off reasonable discussion.

Mr. OLNEY. I would like at least five minutes in behalf of the Senate amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. There will be no attempt to shut off discussion of such matters as that.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Are these amendments to be taken up in order?

Mr. ANTHONY. Each one in the order in which it is written in the report.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I notice in amendment No. 22, which I suppose is the one referred to a while ago, when the gentleman spoke of provision being made for discharges, that it authorizes the Secretary of War in his discretion to grant discharges.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Inasmuch as you have amendment No. 23 following, would it not be better to have a direction to the Secretary of War to grant all discharges with that limitation of 60 per cent?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; because there is another amendment contained in the bill which provides that the Army must not be maintained larger than the amount appropriated for, so that it forces automatically the reduction of the Army.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield first to my colleague, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

Mr. QUIN. I wanted to know what is the additional amount of money in the conference report in excess of the amount which was set forth for the officers because of their advance in rank.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is about $8,000,000 increase in the report. There is also $1,900,000 increase in the item for air service, which will be submitted to the House.

Mr. QUIN. For a vote?

Mr. ANTHONY. For a vote, because the same paragraph contains an item of legislation which calls for its submission to the House.

Mr. SNELL. If the gentleman will permit right there, I would like to ask in regard to the proposition of $200,000 for increasing the water supply of the District of Columbia. Is there anything in the proposed plan that will interfere with the final development of the water power at Great Falls?

Mr. ANTHONY. The House conferees yielded reluctantly on that amendment, but I am thoroughly satisfied that there is nothing in the statement that the construction of a tunnel to provide additional water will interfere in the slightest with the development of power at Great Falls. In fact, I discussed that matter this morning with Secretary Baker, and he says there is nothing in that contention; and my colleague from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has discussed it with Col. Kutz, the engineer commissioner, and he confirms that statement.

Mr. SNELL. I did not know but perhaps there might be something in the report.

Mr. ANTHONY. Both Secretary Baker and Col. Kutz say it will not interfere.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If I may be permitted, a consideration of the facts will show that there is not the slightest ground for believing that the two plans are in any way associated so that the water-power scheme would be interfered with if this is done.

Mr. SNELL. I could not understand how it could be.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It is an impossible proposition.

Mr. TILSON. I have heard it suggested that as a matter of economy the tunnel be not built but that the dam be built at once down at Chain Bridge, where sufficient power can be developed to pump the water instead of having it come down by gravity through the tunnel; and that this plan would be some $5,000,000 cheaper for an additional water supply, besides furnishing a very large amount of power. Has this suggestion been made to any committee of Congress?

Mr. ANTHONY. I can not say.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that that question is not now before the House.

Mr. TILSON. It was being discussed, and I thought it was before the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield? Would it not please the gentleman in charge of the bill better if gentlemen would withhold their inquiries with regard to the questions not in controversy in the conference report until the conference report is disposed of, and then take up the other questions?

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, the trouble with that is that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] suggests that we withhold inquiries in reference to matters in agreement.

Mr. MONDELL. With regard to matters that will be voted upon by the House later.

Mr. ANTHONY. This matter will have a separate presentation in the House.

Mr. MONDELL. There are certain matters in the conference report that ought to be disposed of at this time.

Mr. WINGO. Now, take amendments 19, 20, and 21, that cover the case of discharges. Let me see if I understand what the action is. If I understand it, the House has receded from its disagreement to amendments 19 and 21, and receded from amendment No. 20 and concurred with an amendment, so that the language would read—see if I have the correct language:

The Secretary shall discharge from the military service with pay and travel allowances——

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I would like you to state the language as it would be.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say to the gentleman that we thought the Senate had perhaps erred in making three amendments of that item. That should have been covered in one amendment.

Mr. WINGO. That is true.

Mr. ANTHONY. We have been forced to carry that in three, because the third one has new matter in it; but from the way we have perfected the paragraph it will read like this:

The Secretary of War shall discharge from the military service with pay and with the form of discharge certificate to which the service of each, after enlistment, shall entitle him, all enlisted men under the age of 18 on the application of either of their parents or legal guardian, and shall also furnish to each transportation in kind from the place of discharge to the railroad station at or nearest to the place of acceptance for enlistment, or to his home, if the distance thereto is no greater than from the place of discharge to the place of acceptance for enlistment, but if the distance be greater he may be furnished with transportation in kind for a distance equal to that from place of discharge to place of acceptance for enlistment.

Mr. WINGO. Now, the gentleman has read the language that has been agreed to?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINGO. You cut out the words "honorably discharged"?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINGO. But you provide that they shall be given such a discharge as his service after enlistment warrants?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINGO. Does that mean that the fact that he has misstated his age in making his enlistment shall not be used against him?

Mr. ANTHONY. It means that we provide here for a waiver of any violation of military regulations that the young man may have incurred when he made the false statement in regard to his age at the time of enlistment. We take his record after enlistment.

Mr. WINGO. He gets an honorable discharge, nothwithstanding the misstatement he has made before his enlistment?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, you propose to eliminate the misstatement as to age on the record as to whether or not he is entitled to an honorable discharge?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. The conferees have tried to meet the sentiment of the House in this paragraph.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. I agree with the gentleman that these amendments should be taken up in the order in which they come in the report, but inasmuch as certain statements have already been made in regard to amendment No. 106 in relation to the water supply from Great Falls it seems to me this further statement ought to be made at this time: Certain Members here have said that this would not in any way interfere with the development of the Great Falls water power. I do not know what means of information they have on that point, but the gentleman knows that eminent engineers do not agree on that point, and that there is a difference of opinion in regard to it on the part of engineers who have looked into the matter.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will be glad to state it to the gentleman.

Mr. MAPES. Yes. I wanted to make that statement, in view of what has already been said.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Is the gentleman willing to allow a vote on the question of the administration being able to create a deficiency?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is not in the conference report.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You realize that you have destroyed the Army reorganization bill, do you not?

Mr. ANTHONY. I realize that we have put safeguards around it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Can you indicate the language in which can be found this limitation on the size of the Army by making it impossible to bring in a deficiency bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. That will come up in its regular order for discussion. It is not included in the conference report.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In reference to amendment No. 20, in relation to these discharges, it strikes out the words "traveling allowances" and inserts "transportation in kind to the railroad station at or nearest to the place of acceptance for enlistment." The conferees agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment striking out the language inserted by the Senate and inserting in lieu therof this language: "With the form of discharge certificate to which the service of each, after enlistment, shall entitle him," and this is the way it will read: "The Secretary of War shall discharge from the military service with pay and with the form of discharge certificate to which the service of each, after enlistment, shall entitle him." Now is it the intention to cut out entirely the matter of transportation?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; we provide that he shall be allowed transportation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Where?

Mr. ANTHONY. On amendment 22 we offer this additional language: "And the Secretary of War is authorized."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is not one of the amendments you have agreed to?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it is not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. ANTHONY. We agreed to the first two, but could not agree to 21.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not so understand.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 10: Page 14 of the printed bill, after the word "craft," in line 2, strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, down to and including "$250,000," on line 13, and insert "$23,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed $4,000,000 from this appropriation may be expended for pay and expenses of civilian employees; and not exceeding $400,000 may be expended for experimentation, conservation, and production of helium: Provided further, That not less than $5,000,000 thereof shall be expended for experimental and research work with airplanes or lighter-than-air craft and their equipment: Provided further, That not less than $7,000,000 shall be expended for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories: Provided further, That claims not exceeding $250 in amount for damages to persons and private property resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad may be settled out of the funds appropriated hereunder, when each claim is substantiated by a survey report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer of the nearest aviation post and approved by the Chief of Air Service: Provided further, That claims so settled and paid from the sum hereby appropriated shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $10,000: Provided further."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 10: Mr. ANTHONY moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted by the Senate insert the following: "$21,100,000: Provided, That not to exceed $4,000,000 from this appropriation may be expended for pay and expenses of civilian employees other than those employed in experimental and research work; not exceeding $250,000 may be expended for experimentation, conservation, and production of helium; not exceeding $4,300,000 may be expended for experimental and research work with airplanes or lighter-than-air craft and their equipment, including the pay of necessary civilian employees; not exceeding $500,000 may be expended for the production of lighter-than-air equipment; and not exceeding $350,000 may be expended for improvement of stations, hangars, and gas plants: Provided further, That not less than $5,500,000 shall be expended for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories: Provided further, That claims not exceeding $250 in amount for damages to persons and private property resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad may be settled out of the funds appropriated hereunder, when each claim is substantiated by a survey report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer of the nearest aviation post and approved by the Chief of Air Service: Provided further, That claims so settled and paid from the sum hereby appropriated shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $10,000."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, we had to bring this item for appropriations for the Air Service back to the House in order to reinstate the language as to the payment of claims for damage not to exceed $250. That language had been carried for several years, but it was stricken out on a point of order. The Senate erroneously attached it to the appropriation paragraph, so that we had to bring the whole paragraph back to the House in this shape.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HICKS. I notice in the amendment that the amount called for for new airplane equipment is $5,500,000, which is a million and a half more than the House provided a few days ago.

Mr. ANTHONY. Correct.

Mr. HICKS. Can the gentleman explain the necessity for that increase over what the House decided was proper?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate demanded $7,000,000 for new production and we yielded a million and a half.

Mr. HICKS. Did they specify what that equipment would consist of?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes. We went into the types in conference. It is to equip the Army with complete new types of planes; most largely of pursuit and bombing and attack types.

Mr. HICKS. Are some of them these foreign planes that we have seen spoken of in the paper—the Caproni, and German all-metal?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; none of them.

Mr. HICKS. Is it all for domestic production?

Mr. ANTHONY. We hope it will go into the type of all-metal planes. We have procured a number from Germany, of the all-metal planes. At the Dayton plant the air service are flying every day, many hours a day, one of these German all-metal planes, to determine how long it can stay in the air without crystallization. We want to ascertain what the life of the all-metal plane is before we go into the production of them.

Mr. HICKS. As I caught the reading of the amendment I understand that this $5,500,000 is to be exclusively for heavier-than-air equipment. Where do you take care of the lighter-than-air equipment?

Mr. ANTHONY. Five hundred thousand dollars of it is for lighter than air. We limit them to not exceed that amount.

Mr. HICKS. Is that mentioned in the amendment?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is.

Mr. HICKS. I did not catch that in the reading of the amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. They wanted to expend a vastly larger sum for lighter-than-air machines, but we limited them to $500,000.

Mr. HICKS. I am very glad you did.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. The Senate provision fixed a minimum below which they can not go for experimentation. I understand that the House has fixed a maximum above which they can not go.

Mr. ANTHONY. We provide a minimum. We want to compel them to expend that amount of money for production.

Mr. FESS. I mean for experimentation. You have fixed a maximum above which they can not go.

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is it not very unusual to say to them, "You shall not expend less than a certain amount"?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is for the reason that we have been trying to get the Air Service to build modern machines. The appropriations made in the Army appropriation bill for the last two years for new production have not all been expended. Only in the last month or two contracts have been let covering many millions of dollars that we have appropriated. The Army all the time has been crying that it has not got up-to-date machines, when the money that Congress appropriated has not been expended. They have been waiting until they could agree on the right type. This year they think they have got the type, and contracts have been let within the last month or two for almost the totals of the appropriations we have made for the last two years. We want to make them spend that money and get these up-to-date planes, so our Army will have the latest thing in the air.

Mr. FESS. The task that has been imposed on Congress is not that we must expend so much money, but that there must be a minimum expenditure of money. After rereading the amendment I note that the amount provided for in this particular item is not increased, but you simply provide that a certain proportion of it shall be spent for this particular purpose.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is true.

Mr. FESS. And it does not increase the sum total.

Mr. ANTHONY. We itemized this appropriation and put the limitations on the expenditure for fear if we left it in a lump sum it would be expended for purposes from which the Army would not get any real benefit.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Is the type of metal plane that is now being experimented with at the Dayton field the all-metal monoplane?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is. It is the German type of plane.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Is it the Junker plane?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. There have been some accidents in the postal air service in connection with the use of the Junker plane, and I wondered if it was the same plane.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think it is.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman's amendment provides that not less than $5,500,000 shall be expended for the purchase of new planes. Now, they are making experimentations with these new metal planes to determine how long it will take them to crystallize. Suppose it takes a little while to determine that. I take it that they are not prepared at present to make these metal planes on a large scale anywhere in the country?

Mr. ANTHONY. That is correct.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does not the gentleman think it rather drastic to say that they must find out whether these metal planes will be serviceable and last long enough to justify their adoption, and at the same time require them to spend $5,500,000 during the next fiscal year, although they may not come to a determination about the metal planes until toward the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. ANTHONY. The situation in our Army to-day with reference to the air is that our flyers have to go up in the D. H.-4 plane, evolved during the war, and the opinion of our flyers is that the D. H.-4 is an out-of-date, antiquated, and unsafe machine to go into the air in. We want to compel the Air Service to provide up-to-date machines for our flyers, and that is why we put in the provision to construct machines of the latest type.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will not this be the result? You compel them to spend the money. They may have to go out and spend the money in buying up old, out-of-date airships.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; they will not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Because they have not yet determined that the new type of machines are serviceable. They are still experimenting with metal machines. They do not know whether they want to construct metal planes or not, because they do not know whether they will last long enough to pay for constructing them.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Is not this the situation: There is a demand in the Army for a certain expenditure for other purposes than the purchase of new planes. There is also a demand for a considerable expenditure for new planes. Now, except for this provision that has been referred to, the Army could spend this entire appropriation for other purposes.

Mr. ANTHONY. To hire civilian employees——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; the amendment carries a limitation, and they could not do anything of the kind.

Mr. ANTHONY. They could if we did not put in this limitation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The limitations are there. What is the use of saying they can spend the money for other purposes?

Mr. MONDELL. Strike out this limitation to use the $5,000,000——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is not a limitation; that is a direction to spend the money.

Mr. MONDELL. "If you spend this money, you shall spend it for new planes. If you do not need new planes, you shall not spend it."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is not what it says.

Mr. MONDELL. That is exactly what it says.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman has not read the amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman made a statement that the Army was not prepared to build the latest type of plane. The only question at issue is whether they will build that type of metal plane or of wood. The Army has developed a type of pursuit plane, one of the fastest pursuit planes that has been developed anywhere in the world. We have developed a type of bombing plane and ground-attack plane which they say is the last word unless they are made out of metal. Our fliers are clamoring to be given the latest type. If we have to hold back the production, if we have to wait two years, we will have no planes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They can spend the $5,000,000 on other planes regardless of whether they adopt the metal plane or not.

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope they will spend it for the all-metal type.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It will have to be, although my genial leader, who has not read the amendment, says they may do so and so, when the amendment says that not less than $5,000,000 shall be spent for the production and purchase of new airplanes, and so forth. I can read the English language and understand what it says.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that this money can not be spent unless for a certain specific purpose, and the intent of that is to prevent the military authorities from spending the $5,000,000 for other purposes in case they do not desire to spend it for new planes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman is again entirely mistaken. The language of the amendment is that not to exceed $4,000,000 is to be expended for the pay and expenses of civilian employees, and not to exceed a certain amount for other purposes. Those limitations are in the amendment, and then there is a part of the amendment that follows that not less than $5,000,000 shall be expended for the production and purchase of new airplanes.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. When a man knows he is mistaken he ought to admit it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. They might have put it in a different form. They might have said that not more than so much shall be expended for this particular purpose, and it would be equally effective, except for the fact that in that event the money could be used for other purposes. They put it in a form to make it clear that it could not be spent for any other purpose, because that was what they wanted. It is made clear that they could not spend this money for any other purpose.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is an item in the bill for miscellaneous expenses that is covered by about two pages of the language in the bill.

If this limitation should be written that "not more than" so much was for new production, anything that was not spent for new production could be expended for anything covered by the language of the bill on which there was not an express limitation, and there are many things that are not limited. We did not want to give them any opportunity to cut down new production and use it for miscellaneous items that are not limited. Hence, the desire of the committee being for new production, we fixed a minimum.

Mr. MONDELL. In other words, if they expend this particular sum of money it must be expended for new planes?

Mr. CRAMTON. It must be.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, if they do not deem it wise to buy new planes they will not expend the money?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And violate the law. The gentleman from Wyoming complains about the Secretary violating the law.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Illinois is too good a parliamentarian and too good a constructionist of legislative language to believe that because we say a certain amount shall be expended for a certain purpose, it means that it must be expended whether or no there is good reason for expending it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the exact fact. It does mean that it must be expended, and that is the reason it is offered in this form, as stated by the gentleman—to make them expend it in purchasing new planes.

Mr. MONDELL. If they spend it at all.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Now that these two leaders have gotten their difficulties settled so that none of us understand the matter, I would like to ask the gentleman a question about helium. I notice in the House bill $100,000 was carried for experimentation in helium. That amount was raised by the Senate to $400,000 and the conferees have reduced it to $250,000. Is the gentleman, in his own mind, convinced that the helium situation in Texas is such that it warrants the expenditure at the present time of $250,000?

Mr. ANTHONY. I am not so convinced, but other members of the committee of conference felt the necessity for continuing this appropriation, and we yielded in the degree mentioned by the gentleman.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Can the gentleman say what is the estimate of life of an airplane in the Army service?

Mr. ANTHONY. The experts have been greatly disappointed at the life of an airplane. For instance, statements are made to us that of the thousands of D. H. 4's that we have on hand, which were considered fine machines a year or two ago, simply two years of storage has caused them to so deteriorate that before they take those machines up into the air they will have to practically rebuild them. The glue and other ingredients used in joining them together seem to give way, and it necessitates their practical reconstruction.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I asked the question for this reason: If our flyers are going to be occupied, the Army must procure the planes, and I think it is well to direct the Army officers in Army management, that they shall purchase the necessary planes for the flyers to use, and if the life of a plane is not beyond a year then that provision must be made annually.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I want to make inquiry with respect to the appropriations about aircraft. Did we carry such an appropriation in the last appropriation act—that is, a directory item for the expenditure of money for experimental work in lighter-than-air machines?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think we ever carried that item.

Mr. GARD. I refer to the item in lines 17, 18, and 19, on page 14, in amendment No. 10, which seems to me to be directory in respect to the expenditure of $5,000,000 for experimental purposes. Whether or not that is the gentleman's contention I do not know, but I am asking if there has been any provision heretofore for an appropriation of that kind for that purpose?

Mr. ANTHONY. My recollection is that there has been no explicit expenditure for an experimentation in lighter-than-air machines, but in this bill we provide $500,000 to be spent for the production of lighter-than-air craft, and we provide that $5,500,000 must be expended for new planes.

Mr. GARD. The item to which I refer is the $5,000,000 item in lines 17, 18, and 19, on page 14.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Air Service wanted a large appropriation for an engineering plant, for engineering and development work in balloon service, but the committee did not deem it advisable to grant it at this time.

Mr. GARD. My question went to the $5,000,000 item.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recede and concur.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 12: Page 15, after line 16, insert: "That payments heretofore made by disbursing officers of the United States to the Lonoke Chamber of Commerce, Lonoke, Ark., under and pursuant to a lease dated March 20, 1919, providing for the use and occupation by the United States of certain lands near Lonoke, Ark., for aeronautical purposes and providing for an increased rental from and after January 1, 1919, are hereby ratified and confirmed."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 18: Page 17, line 5, strike out "$72,678,659" and insert "$83,000,000."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion, that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I have offered a motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment which provides for an expenditure of $83,000,000, designed to establish for the ensuing fiscal year an Army approximating 175,000 enlisted men. I realize that this subject is not new, and we all appreciate that in the haste with which it is necessary to do a good many things at this time, it would be unprofitable to expend much of our opportunity debating many of the details that are involved in such a very important policy as the size of the Army.

I merely want to emphasize the position that I have taken repeatedly before this House and which I have attempted at times to explain, that we are not now appropriating for a fighting Army, an actual force that is to be relied upon for national defense in and of itself, but we are appropriating for an Army which in peace time is a national police force, that is to garrison our outlying possessions, that is to instruct itself in military science, and that is designed to be a school for the instruction of the great civil population either in their National Guard activities or in the other ways in which they seek experience that will enable us in time of emergency, in time of war, to summon with some degree of training the great citizen army on which we always have to rely when war breaks out.

This question, therefore, ought not to be surveyed as if we saw 175,000 men all together in this country as an organized fighting force. But when we come to realize that in this enormous continental domain of ours, to say nothing of the outlying possessions, we must divide this military force up into little driblets and station those small parts for service here and there at the posts throughout the country and in our outlying possessions; and when we realize we must still further divide up the men for service at schools and colleges for Reserve Officers' Training Corps purposes and with the National Guard in various State organizations, we will soon find we have almost nothing left of any kind of tactical organization that will give the Army itself, its officers, and noncommissioned officers a sufficient force for training from year to year that will make it proficient in military science and prepare for any emergency there might be.

So it was the design in the Army reorganization act that we should be able after distributing the Army about this country, as we are obliged to do, to keep somewhere together a war-time fighting unit of the highest character, both in numbers and in armament, and in all the personnel that are necessary for a war-time fighting unit, so that our officers and noncommissioned officers might in their turn from year to year pass through the administration of and service with a unit of this kind and number and gain experience in the course of their own training in handling a fighting force that could be used in emergency.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman explain what the Senate has provided for—that is, the number of enlisted men—and what would be provided for under the $72,000,000, or just what is presented to the House upon the amendment in question?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It has always proved to be a fact that these rough or round number estimates or figures set out in appropriation bills will not figure out precisely to the unit of men that they are expected to appropriate for, but, roughly speaking, the House conferees stand for 150,000 men, and the Senate proposes to stand for 175,000. [Applause.]

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That is in accordance with the recommendation of Gen. Pershing.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY].

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Speaker, in connection with my remarks I desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a statement of The Adjutant General showing the disintegration of the Army from now until May 31, 1922.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting the table indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, the next and very able Secretary of War, the Hon. John W. Weeks, of Massachusetts, within 10 days advocated the total strength of the Army in enlisted men at 175,000. I am sure that you gentlemen on this side are in harmony with the next Secretary of War, and those on the other side do not desire to embarrass the next administration by having a deficiency reported in providing for only 150,000 men. The present Secretary of War by an order issued about February 1 immediately stopped the enlistment of men. At that time there were enlisted in the Army 237,000. Since that time we have disintegrated proportionately about 8,000 per month gross less 2,000 who have enlisted again, it being allowable for 1-year and 3-year enlistment men as they go out to reenlist, so there is a net disintegration per month of about 6,000 men. Brig. Gen. Herbert M. Lord, of the Finance Department, about two weeks ago testified before the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate that the average size of the Army for this year will be 181,000 men. I do not think we ought to appropriate for an Army of 150,000 men when the average Army for this year and into the next fiscal year will be nearly 200,000 men. This table which I insert in the RECORD shows that on November 30, 1921, the total strength of the Army will be about 175,000 men, as fast as they can unenlist them.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLNEY. I have only five minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. Gen. Lord, in making that statement, had not taken into consideration the legislation carried by this bill which directs the Secretary of War to discharge from the Army all enlisted men under 18 years of age?

Mr. OLNEY. I understand from The Adjutant General as fast as they can unenlist these men they can not expect to discharge from the Army from natural and other causes more than 6,000 men, including those that make up the strength of the Army up to May 31, 1922, and as fast as those men can be unenlisted, if I may coin the word, the strength of the Army at that time will be about 165,000, not including the Philippine Scouts which amount to nearly 10,000 men. Therefore it seems to me the part of unwisdom to appropriate for an Army of 150,000 men when now at present day figures we have an enlisted strength of about 230,000 men. We can not unenlist them up until the 1st of January next year so that the Army will be less than 175,000 men.

There is another item running along in this bill a little later proposing to promote two great generals to the rank of lieutenant general, and I hope somebody will offer a further amendment here to promote Gen. Crowder as well to hold the rank of lieutenant general. There is another man from Ohio who was in command of the Third Army over in France, Gen. Dickman, who ought to be recognized. The amendment in the Senate concerns Gen. Liggett, a Pennsylvanian by birth, who was in command of the First Army, and Gen. Bullard, of Alabama, in command of the Second Army.

These three armies were thoroughly and efficiently organized over in France, and I would like to see these three great generals promoted. I might suggest that as a modification, as I understand the Senate amendment proposes to promote these two generals to the rank of lieutenant general in the active service, the House might see to it and might vote that these two men, Dickman and Crowder, along with Liggett and Bullard, also be put on the retired list as lieutenant generals, with all that goes with it.

For the information of the House, and most of you are familiar with these facts, I may say that Gen. Liggett retires from the Army March 28, this year. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. OLNEY. The statement that I referred to is as follows:

NOTE.—No account taken of changes in labor conditions in determining reenlistments. After Nov. 30, number to be enlisted to bring Army up to 175,000 is apportioned among those branches that are below strength. Percentages used in the above calculation are based on the experience during the past year.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I hope the motion made by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] will not be adopted, and yet I do not know that the gentleman from Vermont and I differ very greatly in our views with regard to what should ultimately be done.

The amount carried in the bill as it passed the House would pay an Army of an enlisted strength of approximately 150,000. But the gentlemen in the Senate insist it will not be possible to bring the Army to an enlisted strength of 150,000 at the beginning of the fiscal year for which we appropriate, except by discharges over and above the ordinary and normal reductions, and that therefore our appropriations, taking the Army at the strength they assume it would be at the beginning of the fiscal year, would not provide for an Army maintained at 150,000 during the entire year. They say that in order to pay the Army that would be in service at the beginning of the fiscal year and cover the entire expenditure for pay with the appropriation we have made, it would be necessary to allow the Army to dwindle or to be reduced to a strength about 125,000 or 126,000 at the end of the fiscal year. The conferees know very much better than I do how much there may be in the contention of the Senate. The Senate amendment proposing $83,000,000 in lieu of $72,000,000 is based on what they assume will be the enlisted strength of the Army at the beginning of the fiscal year, taking into consideration ordinary and normal reductions in strength up to that time, and then for an Army which would have an enlisted strength of about 162,000 at the end of the fiscal year. It appears, therefore, that neither of the sums carried here provide for an Army of just the numbers that have been so frequently referred to—150,000 in one case and 175,000 in the other—for the entire period.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the gentleman is quite correct. As I reflect upon it, I think I should have said it was in the neighborhood of 162,000 for the average. I stated it a little high.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, if the House adheres to this provision for $72,000,000, this matter will again be taken up in conference, and if the gentlemen of the Senate can convince our conferees that in order to provide for an Army which shall not go materially below 150,000 for the year that it is necessary to somewhat increase our appropriation, I think it would be their duty to agree with it.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. As I understand, the 150,000 is 150,000 enlisted men, and then you provide for 14,000 officers in addition to that, do you not?

Mr. MONDELL. The item we are discussing is the item for the pay of the enlisted men and has nothing to do with the pay of the officers.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is, 150,000 enlisted men?

Mr. MONDELL. One hundred and fifty thousand enlisted men.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does the gentleman advocate discharging men who have contracts and who do not want to be discharged?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not know as it is necessary for me to pass on that or to express an opinion. I think there are many men who would like to be discharged, but whom the War Department are now holding. My own view is that if the War Department could and would allow men to leave the service who desire to leave it, the probability is the Army would be reduced to close to 150,000 at the beginning of the fiscal year. But I realize that in some cases it may be inexpedient for the department to allow all the men to leave the service who desire to do so, because of the fact that they may be in a branch of the service where the enlisted strength is already low or they may be men who are needed for some special work. So I realize there are some cases where a man's desire for discharge might not in the interest of the service properly be met for a few months. In that state of affairs it is possible that it would not be practicable to reduce the Army to 150,000 men at the beginning of the fiscal year. Of course, I am saying all this realizing that I am not so well informed on the subject as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] or the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. CRAMTON. I simply want at this time to call to the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming, in connection with what he has been saying, that the next amendment to come up, No. 22, gives express authority to the Secretary of War in his discretion to grant applications for discharge, and that gives him full opportunity along the line the gentleman has stated.

Mr. MONDELL. I hope I have made it reasonably clear that in all probability the conferees will be able to reach an agreement on this item without materially increasing the appropriation carried in the House bill. But it is altogether possible that after going over the matter again with the Senate conferees the House conferees may find that in order to maintain the establishment at the size which the House approves it will be necessary to agree to something of an increase in this item.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. PADGETT. I saw a newspaper report the other day—I do not know whether it is accurate or not—that the appropriation carried in the bill as it passed the House was only sufficient for something like 125,000 or 130,000.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman heard my statement a moment ago, he will recall that I said it was claimed that with the Army at the enlisted strength it is expected to have at the beginning of the fiscal year it would be necessary to reduce the Army to 150,000 in order to pay the enlisted men with the sum appropriated by the House.

Mr. PADGETT. I did not hear that statement.

Mr. MONDELL. Just how accurate that is I do not know. But it is because there is something in the contention that the conferees should be allowed to go back with this item and make such a compromise as will carry out the views of the House as to the average strength of 150,000 men during the entire year.

Mr. LINTHICUM. One other question. As to the average of 150,000 men, I wanted to know whether with the present turn of events in Europe the gentleman thinks we ought to have any increase?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. The conferees on the part of the House feel that it will be possible to arrive at some satisfactory agreement with the Senate on this item. Under the appropriation made by the House, unquestionably in order to maintain the Army at an average of 150,000 men, as the House desires during the next fiscal year, we shall have to arbitrarily discharge 30,000 or 40,000 men between now and July 1. It can be done, and there would not be the slightest necessity of permitting the Army to go down to the minimum of 122,000, as some people have contended. And under any circumstances it would be entirely possible and feasible, with the language that we incorporate in the bill later on, which the House will pass upon, to bring the Army down to about the size that the House desires.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Has that ever been done in the history of our country before?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; the necessity never arose.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You realize that you are breaking a contract with the enlisted men?

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is in error about the contract business. The enlisted man signs no contract with the Government.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is an implied contract there, and the man has arranged to stay in the Army for three years.

Mr. ANTHONY. We are going to permit them to go back to civil life, where many of them would like to go.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You are not only going to permit it, but you are going to make them retire to civil life.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. CRAGO. If the House votes down the preferential motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] and votes favorably on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], the question is whether the conferees will take that as the position of the House, from which they are not justified in receding?

Mr. ANTHONY. No. The conferees are going to try to arrive at some reasonable compromise in this matter with the Senate—a compromise which will do the least possible damage to the Army and yet at the same time bring the Army down to a reasonable size.

Mr. CRAGO. Will the gentleman yield to me three minutes?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman three minutes.

Mr. CRAGO. I want it to be possible for the conferees, when it is shown that the reduction of the Army to 150,000 men is a reduction that is too drastic, in order that the Army might properly function to feel that they might, under a proper showing and when the figures are given, agree to the Senate amendment. I do not believe our people at this time want any great standing Army, but we must realize that until the National Guard of the country is thoroughly organized and equipped we have very little defense in this country. That reorganization is slower than we had thought it would be. After every great war in which we have engaged the military history of our country shows that we have foolishly thrown away much of the knowledge and the experience that we gained in these conflicts in which we have been engaged, and I do hope that growing out of this war there will remain with us for years and years to come the realization that it is very necessary for us to have a proper-sized Army in order that that Army may properly function. In other words, you can keep your force down to such a small body of men that it is not possible for our officers, especially of the higher grades, to properly perform their duties and to organize an Army as it should be organized in order to properly function.

I want to call attention to the fact that Gen. Pershing himself and the men who have studied this problem are of the opinion that it is not possible for them to have the Army function as they organized it in France and as they have now organized it with less than about 175,000 men. I would want these conferees to feel that if they so believe the House will back them up in agreeing to an appropriation large enough to provide such an Army.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. In view of what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] has said, let me express the opinion that the House will not back up the conferees if they yield the full amount, or any very considerable portion of the increase made by the Senate. [Applause.] I think the conferees should go back free to make such a compromise as seems proper for them to make to carry out, as nearly as may be, the view of the House as to an establishment that shall not fall below 150,000 and shall approximate that number.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. FISH. I think there is one question that has not been brought out at all in this House in considering whether we should have an Army of 150,000 or 175,000. As for myself, I am very undecided how to vote, and I think the gentleman might explain to the House what is the size of our present National Guard. As I understand it, we have a Federalized National Guard of some 75,000, and it is expected that we will have a force of 125,000 federalized National Guard by next year. If that is a fact, and believing as I do that these Federalized National Guard soldiers and officers who have seen service are equal in every respect to our Regular Army, I shall vote for 150,000.

Can the gentleman explain to the House the present numerical status of the guard?

Mr. ANTHONY. The present size of the National Guard is approximately 85,000 men. It is growing rapidly, and with the encouragement that we are providing in the increased appropriations in this bill I have not the slightest doubt but that it will reach 125,000 in the early part of the next fiscal year, and it ought to grow to a much larger size.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield to me two minutes?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. FISH. I would like to point out to the House that the Regular Army officers who have investigated the artillery units of the National Guard which have been federalized state that they are in every way equal, if not superior, to the Regular Army Artillery units, for the reason that the vast majority of the "noncoms" and officers who were in the war and served in the Artillery have come back to the National Guard. The same in lesser degree applies to the Infantry units. The "noncoms" and the officers who served in the Infantry outfits on the other side have come back into those Infantry outfits. The soldiers are new, but the instructors and "noncoms" and officers have had actual battle practice. For that reason we should remember that we have a federalized National Guard of 85,000, in every way comparable to our Regular Army, and for that reason I shall vote for an Army of 150,000 Regulars.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Are the Senate conferees insisting on 175,000 men exclusive or inclusive of the Philippine Scouts and the flying cadets?

Mr. ANTHONY. Exclusive.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. How many are there in the Philippine Scouts?

Mr. ANTHONY. Six thousand five hundred.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. How many are provided for in the flying cadets?

Mr. ANTHONY. We provide for about 1,200. I do not know how many there are now, but not nearly that number.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield to me?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I hope the gentleman will wait until after 2 o'clock. I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland objects. The question is on the preferential motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 96.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in order to get a record vote, I make the point of no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and seven members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees. As many as are in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] will, as their names are called, vote "yea," those opposed "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 82, nays 242, answered "present" 1, not voting 103, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] to insist.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 22: On page 17, line 11, after the word "guardian," insert "and the Secretary of War is authorized in his discretion to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men who have served one year or more with records satisfactory to their commanding officers, without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANTHONY moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "and shall also furnish to each transportation in kind from the place of discharge to the railroad station at or nearest to the place of acceptance for enlistment, or to his home if the distance thereto is no greater than from the place of discharge to the place of acceptance for enlistment, but if the distance be greater he may be furnished with transportation in kind for a distance equal to that from place of discharge to place of acceptance for enlistment; and the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges."

Mr. ANTHONY. This amendment, Mr. Speaker, perfects the language of the bill so as to carry out the ideas of the House in regard to the discharge of boys under 18 who enlisted in the Army. It provides that they shall be given a discharge after enlistment. It waives any infraction of military regulations that they have been guilty of in making a false enlistment and permits a discharge based on the conduct after enlistment—an honorable discharge if they have been good soldiers, and otherwise not. It gives them transportation to the place of enlistment or to their homes if it is not farther than the place of enlistment.

The Senate has added this language:

The Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to grant applications, where discharged, to enlisted men, without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges.

Mr. FIELDS. That does not apply to men under 18 years of age; it applies to the whole Army.

Mr. ANTHONY. It applies to the whole Army.

Mr. FIELDS. I understand the amendment in relation to the transportation applies to residence not a greater distance from the place where the soldier is discharged than the place where he was enlisted; the transportation will be given equivalent to the transportation to the place of enlistment.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is correct. If he has changed his residence, he will be given transportation equivalent to the place of enlistment.

Mr. FIELDS. If he was not enlisted at home and the residence is farther away than the place of enlistment, he will be given transportation equivalent to the place of enlistment.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is correct.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman spoke of enlistment after one year. Suppose they have enlisted for less than one year, what about getting a discharge then? There may be a number of cases where they enlisted for less than a year.

Mr. ANTHONY. We have cut that language out. The language "who have served one year or more with a record satisfactory to the commanding officer" is eliminated. Any boy under 18 can get a discharge the day after.

Mr. PADGETT. If one is over 18 and wants to get out, then he has to have a year's service?

Mr. ANTHONY. We grant this authority to the Secretary of War, in his discretion, to grant a discharge.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We had a long debate in the House when the bill was originally before us and it was demonstrated then that there was a disposition on the part of some Members to claim that where a minor had enlisted in the Army and then found it did not come up to his expectations or that of the family, his parents could claim the right to a discharge because he was a minor, and that this youth ought not to be discharged under any handicap, that he should be put on the status of a full-grown man who had voluntarily enlisted in the Army, served faithfully and well with fidelity, and completed his contract, and should receive an honorable discharge and traveling allowance back to the place of original enlistment. Does this amendment propose to do anything of that kind?

Mr. ANTHONY. It does not; it waives any infringement of the military discipline which he may have been guilty of. It takes his conduct after enlistment, and if it is good he gets an honorable discharge, and if it is bad he can not get the same kind of a discharge.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. This is what I am trying to get at. There is no use of blinking the situation out of sight. If we are going to make the way plain for a man who is disposed to bellyache and welsh, to get all the honors and emoluments of a man who stood up to the gaff——

Mr. ANTHONY. We treat the boy as a minor and we give the authority for his discharge entirely to his parents or guardian.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Let me suggest this practical proposition: Here is a boy 17 years of age, one year under the limit you set. He has been reading novels like Dick Deadeye and other literature, and he wants to take a trip around the world in the Army. He enlists and expects to be sent to the Philippines, and does not get any farther than San Francisco or Hawaii when he gets homesick and finds that if he is in the Army as a soldier he must be a man, do a man's work, and take his share with the rest. But he begins to bellyache and welsh, and writes home to his mother to take advantage of her parental authority to get him out of the Army. He has been to the Philippines; he has had a fine Cook's tour at the expense of the Government; he is returned in a gold chariot back to the place where he ran away from home——

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me say that the Army recruiting officer will take great care not to enlist any boys under 18.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In the meantime you are punishing your Army by erecting a false standard in order that you may safeguard a policy of some chance recruiting officer, and it seems to me that we are getting at the wrong end—you should start him so that he will render the absolute Spartan service that every soldier owes, to do his duty faithfully and well until he is honorably discharged.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, this amendment, I think, removes the objections complained of by some Members of the House when the proposition passed here, and some undesirable features in the Senate amendment. As the provision passed the House the Secretary of War had no discretion in the discharge of these men. He was directed by that provision to honorably discharge all men under 18 years of age regardless of their service record. I did not agree with that and I did not think that was the proper thing at the time. The Senate amended the bill by striking out the word "honorably" which made it impossible for the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge to a man under 18 years of age, regardless of how good his services had been. The Senate further amended the proposition by providing for transportation in kind to the railroad station nearest the place of enlistment. With that I could not agree. For instance, a boy may have lived in Virginia and enlisted in New York and be stationed at the time of his discharge at Fort Myer. It would be unnecessary to send him back to New York, the place of enlistment. The conferees, therefore, provided that he shall be furnished with transportation in kind to the place of his residence or there shall be applied to that whatever the cost would be back to the place of enlistment. The conferees have provided for a discharge in accordance with the record the soldier had made while in the service.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. In amendment 22 it is provided that the Secretary may grant applications for discharge to enlisted men who have served one year, but it says nothing about honorable discharge.

Mr. FIELDS. That does not apply to the question that we are discussing.

Mr. VAILE. It applies to those over 18 years of age as well as under.

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Amendment 19 applies to those under 18 years of age.

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. And in neither place is there any provision for an honorable discharge. The boy may not have been a welsher; he may have served faithfully and honestly, but he goes out with a discharge that is not an honorable discharge and consequently is a dishonorable discharge.

Mr. FIELDS. The language in the amendment now pending provides for a discharge upon his service record.

Mr. VAILE. But it does not provide for an honorable discharge.

Mr. FIELDS. I think it could not be construed in any other way. I have not the language before me, but from my study of it I believe that if he has had honorable service it is incumbent upon the Secretary of War to give him an honorable discharge.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman knows as a matter of fact that in the popular mind there are but two kinds of discharges, an honorable one and a dishonorable one.

Mr. FIELDS. That is true.

Mr. VAILE. If he merely gets a discharge and does not get an honorable discharge, what he gets as a matter of fact is a dishonorable discharge.

Mr. FIELDS. The language of the amendment provides that he shall be discharged upon his service record,; and if he has a record of honorable service, then it follows that the discharge must be an honorable discharge.

Mr. VAILE. It perhaps does not make so much difference in time of peace, but in time of war it makes a great deal of difference.

Mr. FIELDS. This is peace-time legislation. I doubt if the gentleman has studied the language of the amendment. Of course, the language which he has before him in the bill is not the language we are considering. The language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas, I think, meets all of the objections on both sides except the objections of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], and I want now to discuss his objection for a few minutes. If recruiting officers did not become overzealous, if they did not mislead these boys of 15 and 16 years of age, there might be some basis for the argument of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], but I know, as every Member of this House knows who has tried to ascertain the facts, that recruiting officers resort to any and every method to get these boys into the Army.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. FIELDS. I asked a boy a few days ago why he made the statement that he was 18 years of age when he was only 16. He said that he told the recruiting officer he was only 16, and the recruiting officer then said to him, "Oh, well, you want to get into the Army; this is only a matter of form, and I shall put it in here that you are 18 years of age," and he put it in, and the boy signed the application. I hope after the Army is required to discharge boys under 18 years of age that the War Department will at least instruct its recruiting officers in the future to be more careful about the enlistment of boys under 18 years of age.

One other word with regard to the amendment. The amendment does not leave it optional with the boy as to whether or not he shall be discharged. It leaves it to his parents or guardian. The boy can not be discharged upon his own application. The application must be made by the parent or by the legal guardian, and I think that is correct.

As I said a moment ago, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas, which is the language agreed upon by the conferees, removes all of the substantial objections in either branch of Congress. I hope that the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 23: Page 17, line 17, insert: "That nothing contained in Public Resolution No. 59 of the Sixty-sixth Congress shall be held to prohibit sufficient enlistments in any branch of the Army to bring such branch to not more than 60 per cent of the number prescribed therefor in the act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, and to establish military justice,' approved June 4, 1920, nor to prohibit the enlistment in addition thereto of flying cadets to the number now authorized by law."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 23, and that the managers on the part of the House be given authority to agree upon said amendment. I do this for the reason that the percentage named in the amendment will be entirely dependent upon the size that is agreed upon for the Army.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment, and that the conferees be given authority to recede.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 34: Page 23, line 6, after the word "fund" insert: "Provided, That so much of the unexpended amount of the appropriation for pay, etc., of the Army for the fiscal year 1919 as may be necessary to permit payment for the adjustment and settlement of claims of officers, members of the Nurse Corps, and enlisted men for pay and allowances growing out of service in the World War from April 6, 1917, to June 30, 1919, inclusive, shall remain upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of that appropriation until June 30, 1922: Provided further, That the Army shall be reduced by the Secretary of War so that the sum herein appropriated shall defray the entire cost of the pay of the enlisted men of the line and staff during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur with the following amendment, which I send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12 of the matter inserted by said amendment, before the word "enlisted," insert "officers and."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, the first part of this amendment gives authority that so much of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for pay, and so forth, of the Army for the fiscal year 1919 as may be necessary to permit payment for the adjustment and settlement of claims of officers and enlisted men for pay and allowances growing out of service in the World War from April 6, 1917, to June 30, 1919, shall remain upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of that appropriation until June 30, 1922. The reason for that is that there are thousands of these claims, mostly from enlisted men. Perhaps they were short in their pay for one month. They are nearly all small claims, but they are legitimate claims and will have to be paid.

If we do not keep this unexpended balance open on the books of the Treasury they will come back to Congress in the shape of auditor's claims and will have to be taken care of in a deficiency, and this is the simplest way to get around it. The amendment as offered inserts the word "officers" so as to compel the Secretary of War to keep the number of officers as well as the number of men within the appropriations which we provide in the bill. I ask for a vote.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield me two minutes?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I realize that very likely at this stage of the game it will be unwise if not impossible to prevent the conferees having their way about this provision, but I do want to call to the attention of the House in all seriousness that we have entered upon a policy that I think will return to plague us. For many years it has been the well recognized and established policy of this Congress not to determine the maximum of enlisted men in limiting figures in the Army appropriation bill from year to year. That would absolutely prevent the War Department or the Commander in Chief from raising the Army to the number actually provided for as the maximum established by the foundation law in case an emergency demanded it.

Now, the benefit of that policy was as well established through practical experience as any other similar policy could be, and it was this: From time to time international situations provoke some state of irritation or unpleasant feeling between peoples that possibly might drift on toward that state of dispute that would indicate a possible military clash. That is not so much true, of course, with our relations with far distant countries, but we can easily imagine one or two countries near by where that situation might at any time develop. It is very plain from the experience of human nature that if the President, seeing such a situation already on his hands and fearing lest it grow to the point of an emergency that would bring on a clash, should come to Congress and ask authority to raise more troops, that official act would advertise his anxiety over the situation, and there would be more tendency to increase the irritation and gravity of the situation as an implied threat of war if he were to take such action. And so the law has hitherto always provided an ultimate maximum, which as the foundation law it was obliged to do for economic reasons, but never insisting that the War Department should keep absolutely to the limit of the amount appropriated if this unexpected emergency should arise during the year. By that means the President had an opportunity quietly to study his forces and add to the units here and there if he sees the situation develop on our borders that might ultimately lead to war or to some armed engagement. Whereas if he had to wait until Congress was convened, he would not even have made that degree of preparation. It is a simple matter, never has been abused in any sense relating to these emergencies, and sometimes has been the means of quietly holding troops in preparation for a conflict from whatever source the emergency might afterwards develop.

Mr. LAYTON. Would not the National Guard be available?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The National Guard—the calling out of the National Guard is a threat of war itself.

Mr. LAYTON. But they are ready to be called.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understand. It is not the placing of troops in the field in armed array along the border line itself, not at all; it is the quiet recruiting of the Army against an emergency before any publicity has been given to it at all.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is a matter of policy. The day may come when we shall regret having made this very arbitrary provision in an appropriation bill, particularly in times of such unrest as this.

I only want to call attention to another feature of this proposed amendment on the part of the conferees, and that is that they propose to limit the officers as well as the enlisted men. We often see here a picture of the Regular Army as a tactical force officered under the provisions of law by just the number of commissioned officers as were necessary for such a tactical organization. On the contrary, the relation of the officers of the Army to the enlisted men that we provide from year to year by these bills is not of a tactical ratio at all. We are in the position now of recruiting the commissioned personnel that was provided for by the Army reorganization act. It seems to me it is a great mistake if by reason of the passage of the limitation proposed by this amendment the Secretary of War should not be able to take into the Army within the ensuing fiscal year here and there individual men who are prepared to give themselves up to the military profession as commissioned officers while there are still three or four thousand vacancies. This man, that man, and the other man could not take advantage of his lifetime opportunity to begin his career as a commissioned officer in the Army, especially at a time when we are looking far and wide for a desirable commissioned personnel and find ourselves short of men by thousands. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I agree in the main with the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] that this Congress has adopted a very nebulous and uncertain policy in reference to size of the Army. It has already provided that recruiting shall stop. Now it will require, by this limitation, the Secretary of War to reduce the Army to what point? The resolution adopted some time ago provided that enlistments should be discontinued until the Army was reduced to 175,000 men.

In this proviso you direct the Secretary of War to reduce the Army to what point? Why, to the point where the funds appropriated in this bill will pay for the men in the service. It would take a dozen accountants a long time to find out under the provisions of this bill just how many men could be had in the different branches of the service. Recruiting has been stopped, and you have already given the Secretary of War very broad powers with reference to the discharge of men. Why do you not eliminate this provision and let the Secretary of War reduce the force gradually by the elimination by discharge of such men as want to be discharged?

Now, if the conferees go back and agree on an Army of 150,000 men, the Secretary of War would be directed to reduce the Army to 150,000, when a month or more ago you fixed the size of the Army at 175,000. There ought to be some stability of policy in regard to this matter.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is not entirely accurate——

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not yield to an argument, but I will be glad to yield to a question.

Mr. MONDELL. May I suggest to the gentleman we did not fix the size of the Army at 175,000 men, but having appropriated for an Army of 175,000 men, we said to the Secretary of War, "You must not enlist beyond 175,000." We did not fix the strength of the Army. It was calling his attention to the number we had appropriated for.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman from Wyoming, like he often does, rushes into the House without knowing what has transpired before he gets here, and assumes a lot of things that do not exist. What the "gentleman from Texas" said was that you passed a resolution the other day directing the Secretary of War to discontinue enlistments until the Army was reduced to 175,000 men.

Mr. MONDELL. What the gentleman from Texas said was that we passed a resolution limiting the Army to 175,000 men.

Mr. CONNALLY. Did you not?

Mr. MONDELL. We did not.

Mr. CONNALLY. What did you do? The resolution provided that enlistments should stop until the Army was reduced to 175,000 men.

Mr. MONDELL. That was the only logical thing we could do when we had appropriated for an Army of 175,000 men. We could not logically have appropriated for that amount and said to the Secretary of War, "You can not enlist beyond 150,000." That would not have been logical.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the gentleman that he admits exactly what I said, namely, that you passed a resolution directing the Secretary of War to stop the enlistments until the Army was reduced to 175,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Until we had provided for the number in the current bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. That was what was in your mind perhaps. I am talking about legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY. I would like two more minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. CONNALLY. When people come to read statute laws or appropriation bills of this or any other Congress they will read what is on the printed page and not follow the gentleman from Wyoming into his private study and ask what was in his mind at the time he drew the resolution.

Mr. MONDELL. The "gentleman from Wyoming" did not draw the resolution.

Mr. CONNALLY. He instructed somebody to draw it, because most legislation that has been enacted in this Congress has been at the behest of the gentleman from Wyoming, and frequently considered with the same haste, and the same lack of judgment, and the same lack of attention to what has already transpired as are evidenced by the gentleman's conduct on this occasion.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman denies the soft impeachment that he draws the legislation. He also differs with the gentleman from Texas as to the character of the legislation he has drawn.

Mr. CONNALLY. Well, the gentleman from Wyoming is very skillful in his parliamentary power.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. CONNALLY. Thank you. I am glad the gentleman from Kansas recognizes that I am doing a service to the majority side of this House [laughter] and gives me more time than I asked.

What I started out to say, Mr. Speaker, was that I agree in the main with the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE], that this Congress ought to adopt some definite policy with reference to the size of the Army. This Republican Congress passed an Army bill authorizing and permitting 280,000 men to be enlisted and then came scurrying back to Washington after election demanding that the Army be reduced to 175,000, and later brought in a resolution providing that enlistments shall be discontinued until the Army reaches not more than 175,000. Then, what do you do? Are you satisfied with that? Now, no doubt, under the instructions of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee brings in an appropriation bill appropriating for only 150,000 men, when you know that there are many more than that in the Army, and when you know that the Secretary of War will understand you to mean what you said when you directed a reduction of the Army to 175,000 men.

Now you present another provision directing the Secretary of War to reduce the Army from 175,000 men, if it has been reduced to that number, to the number which this bill will maintain. What does it mean? It does not mean anything definite. You ought to say it if you mean 150,000. If you mean the Secretary of War should reduce the Army to 150,000 men, why do you not say so? Through such a jugglery of words and language and provisos the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] will be enabled about the time of the special session of the Sixty-seventh Congress to rise up in all of his "leadertorial" glory and declaim against one of the executive departments for not reading his mind and interpreting his secret thoughts. To do that members of the Cabinet should be permitted to attend the gentleman's caucus. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, there is no Member of this House with a clearer mind or a better understanding than the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] who has just taken his seat. And yet it seems to be necessary occasionally to hold a primary class for his exclusive benefit. [Laughter.] With the permission of the House, I shall conduct for a few moments such a primary class.

Some time since the Congress fixed the maximum of the Army of the United States at 280,000 men in enlisted strength. Later, when the Congress came to appropriate, the Congress appropriated for an Army with an enlisted strength of 175,000 men. When the appropriation bill was presented to the House the statement was made that the appropriations for personnel were in a sum which would pay an Army of 175,000 enlisted men.

The Secretary of War, without authority, I think, certainly not following the will of Congress, saw fit to secure enlistments far in excess of the number which the Congress had appropriated for, and those enlistments had reached a point which was resulting in the constant piling up of a deficiency, and the Congress thereupon adopted a resolution as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed and instructed to cease enlisting men in the Regular Army of the United States until the number of enlistments shall not exceed 175,000.

In other words, the Congress said to the Secretary of War, "You have enlisted beyond the number that Congress contemplated. You must cease those enlistments until you reach the number contemplated by the appropriations of Congress."

It was not the fixing of the strength of the Army, except as the strength had been fixed by the appropriation. Even though it might have been true at the time we passed that resolution that we believed that the Army need not be larger than 150,000, it would not have been logical to say to the Secretary, "You must stop enlisting until the Army is 150,000," because we had for the present fiscal year, by our appropriation, provided for an Army of 175,000.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, may I have three minutes more?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? I agree with the gentleman in the main.

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield to the gentleman in a moment.

Following that, the Army bill for the coming fiscal year was made up, and the members of the committee having the bill in charge concluded after consultation with Members on both sides that the House now believed that an Army of 150,000 was sufficient for the coming fiscal year, and they brought in a bill with appropriations based on an Army of that size.

That is now the situation. It is perfectly simple; it is perfectly clear to everyone, except that it does not appear to be clear to the usually very intelligent gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Now I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. QUIN. Does this bill now, if we vote down Mr. GREENE's motion, fix it so that they can not go beyond 150,000 men?

Mr. MONDELL. If the appropriation we have made in the House shall be the sum carried in the bill, there will not be enough to pay more than 150,000 men, or authority to pay more than 150,000 men.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will if I have time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the gentleman think that the Army ought to be appropriated for at 150,000 or 175,000?

Mr. MONDELL. One hundred and fifty thousand.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why did the gentleman sponsor the resolution for 175,000?

Mr. MONDELL. Why, continuing the primer class for the exclusive benefit of the gentleman from Texas, we had at that time appropriated for an Army of 175,000. We could not logically say to the Secretary otherwise than "You must reduce the number of enlisted men to the number we appropriated for."

DEATH OF HON. CHAMP CLARK, REPRESENTATIVE FROM MISSOURI.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty to announce to the House the death of one of its most prominent Members. Ex-Speaker CLARK passed away a few moments ago at his hotel in this city.

I talked with his son for a few moments an hour or two ago, and he said that his father's latest conscious expression gave voice to his great anxiety for the legislative success of this Congress. He said he knew his father, if he could be heard, would express the desire that no adjournment be had in consequence of his death.

At a later hour in the day, Mr. Speaker, I shall offer appropriate resolutions, which I trust the House will adopt.

RECESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, out of our high regard for our departed friend, our sincere sympathy with his family, and in honor of his memory, I ask that the House now stand in recess for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the House now stand in recess for 30 minutes. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 2 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

WIDOW OF HON. CHAMP CLARK.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of House joint resolution 480.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks immediate consideration of House joint resolution 480, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
March 2, 1921.

House joint resolution 480, making appropriation to pay the widow of CHAMP CLARK.

Resolved, etc., That there is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $7,500 to pay to the widow of CHAMP CLARK, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas that the House recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 53: Page 39, line 25, strike out the words beginning, in line 25, with "Provided" and ending with the word "act," in line 5 of page 40, and insert: "Provided, That hereafter the settlement of clothing accounts of enlisted men, including charges for clothing drawn in excess of clothing allowance and payments of amounts due them when they draw less than their allowance, shall be made at such periods and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that we recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FESS). The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 54: Page 40, line 11, insert: "The provisions of the act of February 28, 1919, relating to the issuance of uniforms to discharged enlisted men are hereby repealed: Provided, That such uniforms shall be issued in accordance with the provisions of said act to those enlisted men who served in the Army of the United States at any time between April 6, 1917, and Janauary 1, 1920, whose applications therefor shall have been received at the War Department prior to July 1, 1921."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANTHONY moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the last line of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "July" and insert in lieu thereof "April."

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask for a vote.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDERSON. What is the idea of making the date April 1?

Mr. ANTHONY. The idea is to close up the matter of unfilled clothing allowances as soon as possible. There are a large number of men who are entitled to articles of clothing, who have not claimed them under the laws passed by Congress giving every man a complete outfit. It is figured that if the Quartermaster Department has to fill all the possible demands under the law it will cost us $16,000,000 to do it. We fix an early date for the settlement of these accounts so that we can close up the books.

Mr. ANDERSON. You practically establish a statute of limitations, so that nobody can get anything.

Mr. ANTHONY. It means that any man who has slept upon his rights for two years has been to blame, and that Congress has not been to blame.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not think that men who have failed to claim their allowance from the Government should be charged with having slept upon their rights. There may be very many reasons why this allowance for clothing has not been claimed. There may be men in distant parts of the country who are uninformed with reference to this matter. I want to submit to the gentleman whether a period of three months should not be given to such men who served their country to make their claims? I do not believe a very considerable number of claims will come in during those three months, and it ought not to be said that the Congress quite unceremoniously shut them off with about 25 days' notice.

Mr. ANTHONY. Our information is that most of the men who really needed articles of clothing have claimed them, but there are several hundred thousands who have not claimed them, who are largely men who do not need the clothing, who did not want to bother about it; but if they are informed of the fact that they can claim this clothing and are given a long period of time in which to do it, they may demand it of the Government, and that will require quite a large force of clerks to be kept at work filling these orders and a young department store down in the Quartermaster's Department to do that work. I think there has been so much publicity given to it that every man who really needed clothing has availed himself of the generosity of Congress.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So far there has been no intimation that the right to claim this clothing would terminate at any particular time, but now we are terminating it in less than 30 days.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does not the gentleman think two years is a pretty liberal time?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; but we have held out to them the expectation that there would be no limit to the time.

Mr. ANTHONY. But good business would demand, I think, that the Government clean this matter up.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That would presume that the Government would engage in good business.

Mr. CROWTHER. What is the basis for the estimate that it will cost $16,000,000?

Mr. ANTHONY. That estimate is based on the number of men who have so far failed to claim certain articles to which they would be entitled. It is estimated that it will require $16,000,000 additional appropriations in this bill if they all demand everything to which they are entitled.

Mr. CROWTHER. To provide equipment for such as have the right to demand it?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, was there any such limitation placed upon the soldiers after the Civil War?

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. They did not get anything of this kind.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. They received certain allowances for clothing.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think they were given the uniforms with which they left the field.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. That is all.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not think they were given complete outfits. This is an unprecedented action on the part of Congress, and in most cases was entirely gratuitous and unnecessary and a willful waste of the public money.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. A great many ex-service men, scattered in remote sections of the country, are unable to get information with reference to their rights. Many of them do not see papers, and I am inclined to think you will work great injustice to many worthy ex-service men if this limitation as to clothing allowance is placed in the bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think most of them know about it.

Mr. CROWTHER. Is it not true that there are millions of these various things that belong to these men that are now stored in the great storage warehouses of this Government, and that there is $16,000,000 worth of olive-drab melton in the Boston warehouse with which to make uniforms? Is there not plenty of material on hand, so that the cost to the Government will not be so great?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; there is a great shortage of uniforms made up, and we are appropriating money for that purpose in this bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kansas by striking out the word "April" and inserting the word "June."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CHINDBLOM moves to amend the amendment by striking out the word "April" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "June."

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FESS). The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CHINDBLOM) there were—ayes 8, noes 13.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I make the preferential motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield to me; I want a little time?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama five minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that probably the conference committee has been led into a misapprehension as to the existing law on this proposition with reference to the right of soldiers to have uniforms issued to them and their right to wear them. I feel that if the gentleman's attention had been called to the provisions of section 8 of the last annual naval appropriation bill, approved June, 1920, the conferees would have reached a different conclusion on this proposition. This amendment seeks to repeal the act approved February 28, 1919, which was amendatory of the provisions of the national defense act with reference to the wearing of uniforms by men who had been discharged from the service. If the gentleman has before him a copy of the act approved February 28, 1919, he will see——

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman does not contend that we are trying to legislate in reference to the wearing of the uniform.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is exactly what you are doing.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; we seek to repeal so much of the act as relates to the issuing of the uniform.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will take the first section of the act he is repealing, he will see that he can not repeal the portion of the act with reference to the issuance of uniforms without repealing the whole business. The law is so interwoven that if you repeal the part with reference to the issuance of the uniform you destroy and leave incoherent the remainder. If this amendment is adopted—and I think the chairman will agree with me—you are repealing an act which is the only law authorizing the ex-service men to wear uniforms issued to them on their discharge from the service. The naval appropriation bill of 1920 repealed all of this act that you are seeking to repeal, and I introduced at this session, after a conference with the leader of the majority, the gentleman from Wyoming, a resolution to restore the provisions of this very act of February 28, 1919, which would restore to the ex-service men the privilege of wearing a uniform issued by the Government. As a matter of fact, that law is now repealed by the provisions of section 8 of the last naval appropriation bill. I do not see the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee here, but we investigated it and the resolution I introduced had the unanimous approval of the Naval Committee. I thought it proper to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to that proposition, because if the law goes into effect as is now presented in this amendment you are subjecting every ex-service man in the country to punishment for wearing a uniform except on strictly ceremonious occasions. In fact, there are ex-service men now under arrest for wearing a uniform which the act of February 28 gave them the right to enjoy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like three minutes more. This is a very important matter and I regret very much that I was absent from the city when the Unanimous Consent Calendar was called up.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was out of town on account of a death in my family when the calendar was called, and that resolution went off upon somebody's objection. I feel sure that if we could have reached that bill on the calendar it would have received practically the unanimous support of every Member of the House, because the resolution introduced restores the status that these men enjoyed under the provisions of the act you are now seeking to repeal. It seems to me before you write that into law it should have the serious attention of Members of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the motion to recede and concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 70: Page 52, line 11, after the figures "$3,000,000," insert "to remain available until December 31, 1922."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 71: Page 63, line 6, after the word "Provided," insert: "That not to exceed $7,000,000 of the funds heretofore appropriated for inland and port storage and shipping facilities shall be available for obligation on and after July 1, 1921: Provided further, That no part of the appropriations for inland and port storage and shipping facilities available for the fiscal year 1922 shall be available for the payment of clerical services pertaining to the activities of the Quartermaster Corps in the District of Columbia or elsewhere: Provided further."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 84: Page 63, line 18, insert:

"NATIONAL TROPHY AND MEDALS FOR RIFLE CONTESTS.

"For the purpose of furnishing a national trophy and medals and other prizes to be provided and contested for annually, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, said contest to be open to the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the National Guard or Organized Militia of the several States, Territories, and of the District of Columbia, members of rifle clubs, and civilians, and for the cost of the trophy, prizes, and medals herein provided for, and for the promotion of rifle practice throughout the United States, including the reimbursement of necessary expenses of members of the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, to be expended for the purposes hereinbefore prescribed, under the direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No 104. Page 71, line 21, insert: "That in the Army of the United States the grade of lieutenant general is hereby revived, and the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint to said grade two general officers, who, prior to the close of hostilities, especially distinguished themselves in command of field armies in the American Expeditionary Forces; and the officers appointed under the foregoing authorization shall have the pay prescribed by section 24 of the act of Congress approved July 15, 1870, and such allowances as the President shall deem appropriate: Provided, That no more than two appointments to office shall be made under the terms of this paragraph."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, this is the Senate amendment which seeks to create the grade of lieutenant general and appoint two officers of distinguished service to that position in the Regular Establishment. I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the purpose of prescribing the salary that they shall receive by veiling it by a reference to some old law? Why is it not put into the bill so that everyone will understand what he is voting for?

Mr. ANTHONY. Because that old law fixes the pay for the lieutenant general.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman in favor of this proposition?

Mr. ANTHONY. I am in favor of the proposition at the proper time, but I do not think it is the proper time in which to pass it now or to include it in this bill. I have moved that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think there is no difference of opinion either in the House or in the country with regard to the splendid character of the services rendered by the men who would be promoted if this Senate amendment were to be agreed to. I am of the opinion, however, after talking with quite a goodly number of gentlemen on both sides of the House, that the House is not prepared at this time to pass affirmatively upon this matter. There are many reasons why this is not the time or the place for legislation of this character. This is an appropriation bill. A provision of this kind does not belong on an appropriation bill. There are many questions to be considered in connection with the matter of promoting and recognizing the services of our faithful, gallant, and distinguished leaders in the Great War. I am very much in hopes that without overmuch discussion of the matter at this time, at least without discussion that might disparage the services of anyone, the House will agree to the formal motion which the gentleman from Kansas has made.

I can not say what will occur in case that motion is agreed to, but my opinion is, if the bill be returned to the Senate with the formal motion to disagree to the Senate amendment, that the Senate would yield and the item would go out of the bill, leaving this question and all questions like it and related to it to be determined at a later date. I hope that may be done. We can easily get into a more or less heated and more or less acrimonious discussion of the question involved and of collateral questions, but at the end of it I do not believe the House in its present temper would agree to the promotions suggested or to any amended provision. On the other hand, if the matter is left for settlement and determination at some future time, an agreement can, I believe, be reached that will fully recognize and do justice and honor to the distinguished services rendered by the gallant commanders of our armies overseas.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say only this. I am not going to vote to give another single extra nickel or to confer another single honor upon any man in the Army, which brought victory back home from France, until something is done for the private soldier who fought in the trenches. That is all I have to say.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the preferential motion that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and concur in the same.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO].

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I agree with everything that has been said along the line that this is not the proper place for this legislation, but in my opinion it is the only place where we can secure any legislation providing recognition for these distinguished generals of our Army during this session of Congress. I call attention to the fact that Gen. Liggett retires before the next Congress meets. I do not want to take any action of this kind at the expense of any man who served in our Army, and I do think in doing this grateful act of justice to these distinguished leaders we are not detracting or taking away one penny or any right of the enlisted man. I would not stand for any legislation of any kind which would prevent doing our full duty by every man who served in the Army, but I call attention to the fact that we have been very lax in recognition of the men who led our armies in the World War, more so than any of the other countries allied with us. Even the countries to whom we are furnishing financial assistance are going ahead recognizing the work done by their great leaders of men. France only the other day created three new marshals in her army, and one of those men, a man who served in the provinces, merely keeping order in one of her provinces, never near the battle line. How different that is from the remarks we heard here concerning the distinguished man who stood at the head of the civilian help of our country in this great conflict and whose recognition would have been merely a recognition of the loyalty and patriotism and determination of the men of the draft boards and of every one of the activities engaged in the war work back home, recognition of the fact that all of war does not consist of service on the battle field.

In regard to this particular bill I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that there was a time during the period of our war when it was gloomy and dark and we would do almost anything to win victory; a period when England and France, as they expressed it, "had their backs to the wall," when our men were over there by the hundreds of thousands, and the high command said to Gen. Pershing, "You have never had an American Army since the Civil War. You can not make a field army function; you have not the men here who have been trained in the work. Turn over to the French Army and to the English Army your men, your units, your organizations, let them fight with the French Army and with the English Army." Gen. Pershing stood out against this advice and refused the demands of the council of high command and refused to have American soldiers fight in any army except an American Army. [Applause.] We applauded him for that. We applauded the President of the United States for backing him up in his position in regard to that matter. What happened? Gen. Pershing himself formed the First Army and commanded it. When he formed the Second Army he put Gen. Liggett in command of the First Army and Gen. Bullard in command of the Second Army, and when he formed the Third Army Gen. Dickman was placed in command of that. Now, those three men, and the brave men under them, with Gen. Pershing in supreme command, made it possible for our Army to properly function in France; and I say we are only giving a proper recognition to every man who fought in the ranks and to every subordinate officer and every man all along the line when we say to these men, "For your distinguished services Congress gladly offers you this token of a Nation's gratitude." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE].

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this matter, in my judgment, is a very important one, and it is of such a character that we ought not to act upon it without being familiar with all the facts in connection with it. In the first place, this proposes to give the grade and rank of lieutenant general on the active list in our Army in peace time. As a matter of fact, from the manner in which our Army is organized there is no place for a lieutenant general in peace time. And that is a matter that ought to be taken into consideration. Furthermore, at no time in the history of our country have we ever had more than one officer enjoying this grade on the active list in time of peace. After the Spanish-American War there were a number of general officers given this honor, but no more than one of them enjoyed it at a particular time. Now, what does this amendment propose to do?

It proposes to take Gen. Liggett, who retires now in a very few days, a most excellent officer, a man who is entitled to every honor we can give him, but it is not necessary to go the full length at this time without consideration and put him on the active list of our Army as a lieutenant general in time of peace. But it does not stop there. It proposes to go down the line of major generals and pass over such men as Gen. Dickman, who retires in October next; it passes over Gen. John F. Morrison, Gen. Enoch Crowder, and over Gen. Leonard Wood—four great generals in our Army who will all retire prior to the date of the retirement of Gen. Bullard. Gen. Bullard is one of the great officers of our Army. I have not a word to say against him, but he does not retire until 1925, and I simply ask the question, Why is it that it is proposed to pass over the heads of men like Gens. Dickman, Leonard Wood, Morrison, and Crowder, all great generals, and put Gen. Bullard along with Gen. Liggett at this time when he does not retire until 1925? I want to say to the gentlemen of the House that we ought not to concur in the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I have here before me the record of a number of distinguished generals of our Army. Among them is Gen. John L. Hines, a man who as major general, when the line was broken over in France, went up and down the line through heavy artillery fire and machine-gun fire steadying his men and getting the boys together. He walked up and down the line between the Sixteenth and Twenty-sixth Regiments of Infantry, if I remember the numbers correctly, but that general is passed over in this proposal. We ought to take up the matter of recognition of the services of the great generals of our Army and consider them together and discuss the matter in a dispassionate and patriotic way and show that we are trying to do something for the men of the Army as a whole, considering all the great officers of our Army, and not pick out in the closing hours of the session even a great general like Liggett, who retires in a few days, and couple him up with Gen. Bullard, who does not retire until 1925, and give them special consideration. So I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be voted down and that the motion of the gentleman from Kansas be concurred in. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, my objection to this particular amendment is based on the wording of the amendment. I think it is most unfortunate that there should be any distinction made between generals who were in command of fighting units and generals of the S. O. S. or supply, whether in the supply department in France or in this country.

Now, if you will analyze the casualties among the generals in our Army you will find that not a single general was killed in action, and therefore I think it is unfortunate for us to make an invidious distinction between generals in command of fighting forces and, for example, Gen. Crowder and Gen. Wood in this country.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. I will.

Mr. HICKS. Is it not a fact that Gen. Bullard and Gen. Liggett were the only two generals in command of armies?

Mr. FISH. Gen. Bullard's name and Gen. Liggett's name are not mentioned in this amendment. My point is simply this, that it is unfortunate that there should be any distinction. If you want to make a distinction and a proper one, make it between the doughboys who fought in the front line and the doughboys who were not fortunate enough to be ordered overseas, but not between generals who did not incur the same risk as the enlisted personnel and company officers. I believe in promoting and rewarding our distinguished generals, but this is neither the proper time nor method of doing so.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] to recede and concur.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, what is the motion. I just came in. I ask that it be reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment No. 104 was again reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] to recede and concur.

The question was taken and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote is now on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] to insist on disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 117, noes 6.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 105, page 72, line 8, insert: "That in the cases of officers then in the Army who were nominated to the Senate by the President for brevet commissions for service during the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or the China Relief Expedition for extraordinary heroism or gallantry in action or especially meritorious services, such as to justify the award of the distinguished service cross or the distinguished service medal provided for in the act of July 9, 1918, such cases may be considered and acted on under the provisions of said act, notwithstanding that such recommendations may have been made more than three years before said cases shall have been considered as authorized by said act, but all consideration of, and action upon, any such case shall be based exclusively on official records of the War Department."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment. I would like to make the statement that when the war with Spain was fought, and the Philippine insurrection, and the Chinese relief expedition, the Army had no distinguished service cross or medal. In those wars there were men of our Army who performed just as distinguished service, participated in just as heroic actions, as the soldiers of any other war. The only recognition that came to them for this was their nomination by the President for a brevet rank, which they never received, although mentioned in orders for distinguished conduct, and which now would entitle them to the distinguished service cross or distinguished service medal. There are about 300 of these men, and the conferees felt it would be the proper thing to do to award them the ribbon at this time.

I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] three minutes.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, at the end of the three minutes I want to make a preferential motion that the House do not concur in the Senate amendment.

This amendment provides that the officers in the Army at the time of the Philippine insurrection and the Spanish War should be awarded distinguished service crosses. As every Member of this House knows, there has been a great abuse during this war in the awarding of medals. There is not a Member of this House that does not realize that there have been complaints from the enlisted personnel that they have been overlooked. And, as an officer in the war, and as an officer who has been decorated and therefore has no grievance, I am absolutely opposed to this amendment. What are we proposing to do? We are proposing by this amendment to give 300 officers, and no enlisted men, of the Spanish War decorations, if I read this amendment right.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I certainly will yield.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to call to the gentleman's attention that during the Spanish War the law permitted the enlisted man who rendered distinguished service to receive what was called a certificate of merit. There was no reward open to the officer except the congressional medal of honor, which can only be given in exceptional cases. So that an officer of that war was deprived of any recognition, whereas the enlisted man did receive it in a certificate of merit.

Mr. FISH. That may be the case. But this is absolutely an improper time and method of bringing this amendment up, unless we are going into the consideration of the cases of the enlisted men. Undoubtedly there are a number of enlisted men who are qualified to receive these decorations. I believe that there were less men killed in the occupation of Cuba than there were on November 11, on armistice day.

Now you come in here and ask for 300 distinguished service medals for officers of that war. I believe this should go over until the next session of Congress. I might be very glad to vote for such a bill, but not until the enlisted men have had their day in court. I speak that way because I had a cousin, a sergeant in the Rough Riders, who was the first man killed in the Spanish War, and I want those men to have the same consideration and their families the same consideration, to secure a distinguished service cross, as Regular Army officers.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for one minute?

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman from Kansas allow me two or three more minutes?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if he does not believe that an officer who served in the Spanish-American War or in the Philippine insurrection and rendered such service as would entitle an officer in the late war to this honor, the officer who served in the Spanish War or Philippine insurrection should have the same consideration at the hands of his Government as the officer who served in the late war?

Mr. FISH. I most certainly do.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is all there is to it.

Mr. FISH. I hope they will get it. At the same time, if you pass this legislation you are going to preclude the enlisted men, and I want to see them come in and get consideration.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I quite sympathize with the gentleman's views, but the law at that time provided that the enlisted man could get his, but the honor that came to the officer was a brevet rank. And so for the same service for which he now gets a cross he got a brevet rank then. But under the law it was necessary for those nominated for brevet rank to be confirmed by the Senate, and the nominations were sent in at such a late date that the confirmations failed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this motion and make a substitute motion that we disagree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I want to ask the chairman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Has the chairman of this subcommittee taken into consideration the possibility that there might be some who have since died who were entitled to this consideration, and that probably the heirs of those would be glad to obtain these medals?

Mr. ANTHONY. I think that is barely possible. But we were advised by the War Department that this language covers only the names of those officers who had been nominated by the President and whose nominations had been sent to the Senate immediately following those wars.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I take it that there were some whose names were sent to the Senate who have since died. If that is true, it seems to me the heirs of those would be glad to receive a medal.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think, under the law governing the distribution of medals and distinguished service stars and distinguished service medals, if the soldier dies his family is entitled to receive it and does receive it.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Would it not be better to insert a provision that the heirs of a deceased officer entitled to this under the act shall receive it?

Mr. ANTHONY. I am quite sure that the general law now makes such provision.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Upon that assurance of the chairman, I will be content.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why does not this amendment make provision for granting distinguished service medals to volunteer officers of the Spanish-American War?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know whether any brevet rank was granted to volunteer officers, but I presume it was not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There are many of them.

Mr. ANTHONY. We have volunteer officers who served in that war in the House. Among them is Col. CRAGO. He tells me they were not given them.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes. That is the "nigger in the woodpile." This having been prepared to benefit a few officers of the Regular Army, it reads, "In cases of officers of the Army who were nominated in the Senate for brevet commissions for service during the war." My impression is that the law allows the President to confer brevet commissions on the volunteer officers without nominating them to the Senate.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CRAGO. The fact is that in 1898 and in 1899 the Volunteer officers serving were commissioned by the governors of the States, so that they could not, of course, come under the provisions of that act. I have my commission yet.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes. But you will find that on the face of it it says you were commissioned in the Federal service. That was done to obviate the labor of first commissioning an officer by the State and then later by the Federal Government.

Mr. CRAGO. But the gentleman will not say that those officers were nominated to the Senate and confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Oh, no. But it was not a State commission.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This applies only to officers of the Regular Army—at least, that is my impression—who served in the Spanish-American War and excludes Volunteer officers who served in the same war.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the gentleman must be mistaken. I do not think there would be any attempt on anybody's part to exclude a Volunteer officer.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think not, too. But the attempt was to take care of the officers of the Regular Army, and whoever drew this amendment was a Regular Army officer who was not interested in the gentlemen who served in the Spanish-American War as Volunteers and had been out of the service for many years. He was interested in getting a distinguished service medal for himself.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think what the gentleman says is quite true. At the time these nominations were made to the Senate most of the Volunteer officers in the Spanish-American War had been mustered out. But among these 300 officers whose nominations were sent to the Senate by the President were a number of Volunteer officers, quite a large number of them, who had remained in the service. We took hundreds of Volunteer officers into the Regular Army.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, I do not know what the facts are; and that leads me to believe that they, having waited 20 years or more, we might wait a few moments longer until somebody did know.

Mr. ANTHONY. The committee had in mind some 300 distinguished officers whose nominations for brevet rank had been sent to the Senate and who failed of confirmation. We thought it was the decent and proper thing to do to give them this recognition.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We are here a long time after the Spanish-American War closed. Has any bill ever been introduced on this subject?

Mr. ANTHONY. A bill is now pending in the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, introduced by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER], who has been very urgent in trying to get it reported and brought before the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is that an argument in favor of it, that the Committee on Military Affairs would not report it favorably?

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Military Affairs, as I understand, have failed to take action because they would have no show whatever to bring the bill onto the floor.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, well, that is not the case. Of course, if the gentleman from Washington introduced it yesterday, it would not have very much show.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it has been pending for some time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Committee on Military Affairs is now the committee on call on Calendar Wednesday. Until last week Calendar Wednesday came up every week, and the Committee on Military Affairs on any Wednesday for the last two months could have called up such a bill for consideration in the House.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will permit me, of course I am not authorized to speak for the entire Committee on Military Affairs, but I am advised somewhat as to the state of the business of that committee. There were other matters which seemed to the committee to be of more pressing importance, and that more insistently demanded immediate consideration; but that, of course, ought not to prejudice and does not prejudice the merits of this particular bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Of course, the gentleman knows we have not had any Calendar Wednesday since December 15.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know that any member of the Committee on Military Affairs could have objected to dispensing with Calendar Wednesday by unanimous consent, and if any Member had desired the consideration of any bill on the calendar he could have had his day. The fact is that Calendar Wednesday was dispensed with principally because the Committee on Military Affairs called up a claims bill which the House did not want to vote for and did not want to vote down.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman does not mean to charge that the Committee on Military Affairs are obstructionists?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They are obstructionists in this case, because the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] is trying to put through the House now a provision relating to a matter 22 years old, and says it is pending before the Committee on Military Affairs and therefore ought to be passed by the House now, the Committee on Military Affairs having obstructed its report to the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield, just to allow me to convey the information that the gentleman from Kansas is not trying to put anything through the House. As conferees we accepted this amendment pressed upon us by the Senate, because we recognized that it had merit in it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As a conferee the gentleman could not accept it under the rules of the House, and the conferees have not accepted it.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is a meritorious piece of legislation, and as such the conferees indorsed it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. As I say, you are trying to put it through the House, and I expect you will succeed, because under the new rule all you have to do is to move to recede and concur, and the House votes to do it.

Mr. FISH. There is an unfortunate feeling now among the reserve officers and National Guard officers to the effect that of the decorations handed out in this war the Regular Army got 50 per cent, whereas they represented only 5 per cent of the officers in our entire Army. Out of 210,000 officers there were less than 10,000 Regulars, yet they got 50 per cent of the decorations handed out to the officers of this war. I think we could well afford to vote this down and bring it up in proper course, where we could decorate the ones who merited it, and also the volunteer officers and soldiers of the Spanish War.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas.

The question being taken, the motion was rejected.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House further insist.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 106: Page 72, line 22, insert: "For the preparation of plans, the initiation of work, including the employment of all necessary engineering, technical, clerical, and other services, and for any and every purpose connected therewith, for an increased water supply for the District of Columbia, in accordance with Potomac project 'E,' described in the report submited by Maj. M. C. Tyler, Corps of Engineers, $200,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur with an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas moves to recede and concur with an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANTHONY moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 106, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "expended," in the last line of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert: "Provided, That 60 per cent of this sum shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and 40 per cent from the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a motion.

Mr. ANTHONY. Let me make a statement first. This amendment appropriates $200,000 to be paid on a 60-40 basis for the purpose of inaugurating the work of increasing the water supply of the District of Columbia.

The conferees had some doubts about the propriety of an amendment of this kind appearing on the Army appropriation bill until they were shown that the initial legislation providing for the present water supply of the District originated on an Army appropriation bill when Jefferson Davis was Secretary of War.

The statement has been made that if this second tunnel or conduit for bringing additional water from the Great Falls to the city is constructed, instead of a pipe line which other engineers have proposed, it will prevent the utilization of the falls for power purposes.

The conferees investigated that criticism very carefully, and we have the assurance of Col. Kutz, engineer officer of the District, and of Secretary of War Baker, who sat on a board which investigated this matter, and others, that there is no basis for such contention, and the conferees submit the proposition for the consideration of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. This initial expenditure of $200,000 is going to result in an expenditure of how much?

Mr. ANTHONY. About $9,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. This is the beginning of quite an expensive end.

Mr. ANTHONY. This is the beginning of the work. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, this seems to me to forcibly illustrate the danger that is likely to result from legislation by riders on appropriation bills. Here is one of the most important propositions that could be raised, as far as the District of Columbia is concerned, and before the House takes any action upon it I think it ought to know what it is doing or at least it ought to know that it does not know what it is doing.

It has never been considered by any legislative committee. The Engineers of the Army made a report a short time ago on the subject, but it is not yet available for the membership of the House. A few days ago the Senate ordered it printed as a Senate document, but it has not been delivered from the Public Printer, and I have been trying ever since I understood that the conferees were going to make this motion to get a copy of the report, but I have been unable to do so. I submit, without fear of successful contradiction, that there is not a Member of this House who has read the report of the Army Engineers. Certainly no committee of the House and no committee of the Senate has considered the proposition or considered any bill pertaining to it.

This is an amendment put on in the Senate to this appropriation bill, and as was said here the other day in regard to another matter it was put on because a Senator asked for it, and he happens to be a member of the conference committee. It ought not to be agreed to until the House knows what it is. If we adopt this amendment we will be putting ourselves in the same position we are in in regard to Muscle Shoals. This provides an appropriation of $200,000 to start the project, and if we pass it we are irrevocably committed to the project. The gentleman from Kansas says it may cost $9,000,000. Yes; and it may cost $100,000,000. No one knows.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman concede the necessity of an additional water supply for the District of Columbia?

Mr. MAPES. I do not concede it; I do not know. I know that we have had more people in the District of Columbia in the last two years than we have now, and we got along very nicely. If we let this go over, Congress reconvenes in a few weeks and can take it up in an orderly manner. There is no need of getting hysterical about it, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said a few minutes ago in regard to the last amendment we voted on. We have gone along for a good many years without doing anything about the proposition, and it seems to me that we can go on for 15 minutes longer without taking this important action until it is properly considered. Congress will be back here in four or five weeks, and if this matter is important it can be referred to the regular committee and be reported back and acted upon intelligently. We ought not to embark on a proposition costing $9,000,000 and perhaps $100,000,000 without ever being considered by a legislative committee.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield to me to make a motion on a conference report?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman from New York for that purpose.

CLAIMS OF THE CHOCTAW, CHICKASAW, CHEROKEE, CREEK, AND SEMINOLE INDIANS.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 10105, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 10105. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, examine, consider, and adjudicate claims which the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole Indians may have against the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, I do not think it is necessary to say it, but I hope the conferees will not agree to the amendment which may involve the country in an expense of many million dollars that has no connection with the original bill. I have such faith in the conferees that I will not object.

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, what is the gentleman's request?

Mr. SNYDER. Simply to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed the following conferees: Mr. SNYDER, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, and Mr. CARTER.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan five additional minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas called attention to the fact that this was a rider affecting the District of Columbia upon an Army appropriation bill. It is doubly objectionable. First, it is a rider on the wrong appropriation bill; and, secondly, it is a rider affecting a very vital situation here in the District, which ought not to be passed upon any appropriation bill. The statement was made that this would not interfere with the development of the Great Falls power proposition. I do not know where gentlemen get their information, but I have a statement here appearing this morning in the Washington Herald, made by an eminent engineer, who says that there is no question but what it will interfere with the Great Falls power proposition. I submit that we ought to wait until a committee of the House and a committee of the Senate have had a chance to investigate on their own responsibility and find out whether that is true or not.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think it would make any difference whether it interfered with the Great Falls water-power project or not? The most important thing in the world is the water supply to the human beings who live in the community, regardless of the fact that it might interfere with the Great Falls water-power project.

Mr. MAPES. I have no knowledge of any shortage of water here in the District of Columbia that would require any such hasty action as this.

We have gotten along very nicely for a good many years with the present facilities; we have gotten along the last two or three years, when there were more people in the District of Columbia than there will be again in a great many years to come.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I am sorry, but I have only a short time, and I can not yield. I call the attention of the House to the report of this engineer who has investigated this matter. He says:

It is not commonly known that the proposed appropriation of $200,000 for preliminary work under the Tyler plan is an effort to commit the Congress to a scheme that will prohibit the construction of an efficient power development on the Potomac River.

If another tunnel is built at an elevation of 30 feet above the present one it will prevent a dam from being built at Great Falls. If the purpose is to get an additional supply of water for the District, a water main could be laid at one-tenth the cost and in one-fourth the time it would take to construct another tunnel.

A water main could be adapted or changed to conform to any dam location, but a tunnel once built will be a permanent barrier to any efficient power development.

There is the statement of an engineer. I do not know whether he is correct or the other people are correct, but I do know that we ought not to pass legislation of this importance upon an appropriation bill when the conferees have not seen the report upon which it is based, nor has any Member of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to move that the House further insist upon the disagreement to Senate amendment No. 106.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ZIHLMAN].

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I consider this one of the most important propositions brought in on this bill. I take issue with the statements that have been made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]. This matter has been before Congress for 20 years. Away back in 1906 Congress appointed a commission to study sources of additional water supply for the District of Columbia, and there has been spent in investigations the sum of $33,000. Last year during the last session of the present Congress we appropriated $25,000 additional and authorized the water-power commission to make an investigation of the sources of additional supply, and this commission has made its report, based upon the findings of the Army engineers, and two propositions are submitted to Congress, one for an additional source of water supply and the other a water-power project. The Army engineers who investigated this matter agreed unanimously that the two should be separated, that the taking up of one proposition will not in any way endanger the other, and in that finding of the Army engineers the water-power commission, consisting of three members of the Cabinet, unanimously agree.

This proposition involves an expenditure of $200,000 for initial work on this project as outlined in the report of Maj. Tyler. The city of Washington at the present time is dependent for its water supply upon a single conduit built 60 years ago. The distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], who is in favor of waiting awhile before taking up this proposition, makes the statement here that the water supply of the District has not been endangered. I agree with his statement in so far as that there have not been any evidences of water famine, but the facts are that the safe dependable water supply of the District of Columbia through the present conduit system is about 68,000,000 gallons per day. During the heated term last summer water was used to as high an amount as 75,000,000 gallons a day, while the present conduit system can not bring down more than 68,000,000 gallons a day as a supply upon which we can depend.

The Army engineers in charge of the conduit can not clear it of water for more than two days at a time, and it is therefore absolutely impossible to make repairs when needed. Therefore the city of Washington is dependent entirely upon a single source of supply. The need for increasing this supply has been apparent for years. Congress has attempted to deal with it by securing the very best technical advice upon the subject. The report of these Army engineers is now before Congress, and we are asked to make an initial appropriation of $200,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If this work is done, may we hope that it will be unnecessary to press the bill to compel the Government to pay for water used in the District of Columbia, as I believe is contemplated by some bill introduced here?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I would say that if a source of additional supply is found, it will be unnecessary to take drastic steps to conserve the present supply, although the per capita consumption is greater than it should be. I introduced the resolution to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. RICKETTS. The same source of supply was in use during the period of the war, covering two years.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Away back in 1905 we were using about 65,000,000 gallons of water per day. During the peak of the war-time influx of population we were able by metering the Government establishments and by conserving water and repairing leaks to maintain that usage of 65,000,000 gallons a day.

Mr. RICKETTS. There were a great many more people in Washington then than there are now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I am in sympathy with what the chairman of the Legislative Committee on the District of Columbia has to say about legislation going on an appropriation bill. Of course we did not put this legislation here, but there is a portion of this property which is not directly under the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia and which never has been. All of the water supply was originally a plan of the War Department to supply water primarily to the Government. There have been various changes made from time to time in respect to the method of permitting the citizens of the District of Columbia to use this water, but of late years legislative provision after legislative provision has gone onto the District of Columbia appropriation bill until the water system is maintained out of the District revenues, but the title to all of this property is in the War Department, and as was said by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY], the chairman of this conference committee, the whole water supply was instituted by the War Department and all of this conduit was made by it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman mean to say that the water mains laid throughout the District of Columbia belong to the United States Government?

Mr. SISSON. No; the water-supply system.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman made a mistake.

Mr. SISSON. The mains were originally laid, that is the conduit main, by the War Department.

Mr. MADDEN. Just the conduit?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; and the ancillary, or smaller mains, were originally charged up to the property owners of the District of Columbia, but I do not want to go into that at this time.

Now, this, in my judgment, might properly go upon the Army bill. I think, as a matter of fact, it might go upon a Regular Army bill just as logically as it could go on a District of Columbia legislative bill. I think either committee that the Speaker might refer this matter to would have jurisdiction of it. Now, as to the question whether this ought to have gone on this appropriation bill, not the Army legislative bill, but this appropriation bill, it is subject to the criticism we usually get. Now, when the Senate puts these amendments on, as they contend they have the right to do, we are compelled to bring this matter back and submit it to you for your consideration. Now, so far as the information was concerned, as it was stated to you, this matter has been gone into in detail. But, mark you, this: It is more in the nature of the preparation of plans than it is for the actual beginning of work. I do not know whether I myself would be willing to commit myself to the proposition of developing water power or not, but I do know that while there is no particular alarm about the water situation, the maximum capacity is more than 68,000,000 gallons a day, but the safety point is estimated by the engineers to be 68,000,000 gallons a day, and they have gone over seventy-odd millions a day for several months during the summer season; I do not know just exactly what the greatest capacity would be, but there has been no great danger of water; in fact, you have got more than three days' supply already stored in the reservoirs throughout the territory of the District, but in my judgment this is the time to have an investigation made, because the growth of the city has been so abnormal within the last few years that the time is rapidly approaching when you have got to do this work.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio. Is it a fact the excessive use of water in recent times is owing to the prohibition amendment?

Mr. SISSON. Well, I am inclined to believe it reduces the consumption of water, because the morning after the man usually drinks a good deal of water, but the gentleman has had more experience than I have and therefore I will not testify as an expert.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. CROWTHER. Does not the gentleman think that the great danger is not in the fact that the general supply is only between sixty-eight and ninety million gallons but in the fact it is conducted in a single pipe line, and in a good water system to-day there is a double pipe line, so while they repair one they could use the other?

Mr. SISSON. This line was built under the direction of Jefferson Davis when he was Secretary of War, and as an evidence of the fact he did a magnificent job the conduit is the only portion of the water system that has given them absolutely no trouble.

Mr. CROWTHER. I agree that they did better work in those days.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. SNELL. Under the reading of the amendment, which says it is to initiate the work, if we should appropriate the $200,000 here, does not the gentleman think we are committed to this proposition as set forth in the Tyler plan?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I think that is true. I would like to have two more minutes.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. SISSON. I think that would be absolutely true.

Mr. SNELL. Then there would not be any question but what we would go on with this if we once started?

Mr. SISSON. In my judgment, when Uncle Sam puts his hand to the plow he never turns back unless we make an exception of Muscle Shoals, and I hope we will not do that, because we have put our hands to the plow and we ought not to turn back, and we will not turn back, because Mr. Weeks as Secretary of War——

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield? I want to ask one more question——

Mr. SISSON. I have the yielding—and when he becomes Secretary of War he will not only provide for Muscle Shoals properly but at the same time I believe he will be able to help handle this water supply of the District of Columbia. That is all I have to say.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, prior to about 1860 the water supply in the District of Columbia, both for the Government and for the people, was gotten from wells, cisterns, and springs. The spring in Franklin Square furnished water for the White House. It is now an underground stream, carried away into a sewer. Commencing about 1860 the present conduit was built. It was built entirely at the expense of the Federal Government for the purpose of furnishing the official buildings with water. After water had been brought into the District of Columbia in that way the people of the District of Columbia asked permission to connect with this end of the conduit for the purpose of getting water. That was granted. More and more, year after year, has been granted. All the time the people of the District of Columbia were getting water cheaper than any other city in the world. If the people here had to pay a reasonable price for the water they get, there would be no apprehension of a scarcity; and there is no real apprehension of a scarcity. It is a well-known fact there is an abundance of water here for the District of Columbia, but there is not enough to reach out in the adjoining jurisdictions which seek to get water at the expense of the Federal Government.

Mr. RICKETTS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. RICKETTS. Does the gentleman mean to say that the citizens of Washington are getting water free, without paying for it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; but they have been paying a very small price for it.

Mr. RICKETTS. Does the gentleman know how much?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I do not. Recently the price was slightly increased, and when the price was only slightly increased the consumption of water was reduced.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. SNELL. How far outside are they trying to take the water at the present time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Into adjoining States.

Mr. SNELL. Into the State adjoining?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. HICKS. I understood the gentleman to state that the rates for water here in Washington are exceptionally low?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. I am surprised at that statement, for the reason that I have a house here of about the same size as my house in New York City, and the water rates here are about the same as in New York.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman is the only man to be found in the District of Columbia that would make such a statement. There must be a leak or a mistake somewhere.

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say that my own experience is somewhat different. My own bill for all purposes connected with the House, including lawn privilege, is about $8 a year. It is about half of what I pay for water in a small town in Michigan.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have not the time, unless the gentleman will yield me more time.

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I know the gentleman would not wish to make a misstatement. I call his attention to the fact that the District of Columbia has $4,000,000 invested in what they call a purification plant, which is under Government control—under control of the engineers. And I am reading now from the report of the engineer in charge. Nearly half of the cost of the present system was paid for by the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It was paid for in this way: When the people at this end of the conduit—the people of the District of Columbia—were connected, water was distributed to them, and they paid only a small charge for it, and the money they paid went to the credit of the District of Columbia, and they took that money and extended the pipe system, and now they own it. They acquired it by collecting rent for water that the Federal Government brought into the District of Columbia and almost gave to them. When this amendment was put on there was no provision except that the Federal Government should build another conduit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman three more minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. To-day, in a private discussion among several of us here on the floor, attention was called to the fact that the District of Columbia was to get the benefit of this proposed new conduit without paying a cent for its construction. But now an amendment has been offered providing that the District of Columbia shall pay 60 per cent and the Federal Government 40 per cent of its cost. This House is on record, overwhelmingly so, several times, that the 60 per cent and the 40 per cent basis was all wrong; and yet by this amendment you wish to estop Congress in the future from arriving at a just contribution from the District of Columbia by fastening in this resolution the per cents of 60 and 40. I say that this should not be done; but whatever the Government is to contribute should be contributed under the provisions of the Mapes bill, which passed this House overwhelmingly, but which has been ignored at the other end of the Capitol in order that favoritism might be shown to the people here to the detriment of the people in the rest of the United States. I sincerely trust that this proposition may be voted down.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield to an inquiry?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will.

Mr. GARD. I want to ask if this Potomac project "E" is a purely power project?

Mr. ANTHONY. We are informed the present project is purely a water project with power possibilities in the future.

Mr. GARD. Is there any commitment of any legislative body to this project "E"?

Mr. MAPES. I can not answer the question of the gentleman.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I think this matter can be stated in a few general propositions. First, it is necessary to enlarge the water supply of the District of Columbia. The present water supply flows through a single conduit from the Great Falls of the Potomac. That, as has been stated, is a brick conduit, the construction of which was begun in 1853. Two years ago, according to the Tyler report, the volume of water brought by means of that conduit had reached a point where there was no longer the assurance of a sufficient supply. In addition, it is pointed out in the Tyler report that the conditions are now such that it is impossible to unwater that conduit for more than two days at a time, and therefore repairs can not be made. And as repairs can not be made, the report says that a breakdown is liable to occur at any moment, which would create a water famine in this community. Now, as has been stated, there have been inquiries from time to time into the situation, and the most recent survey is by the engineers of the War Department, with the result that I have indicated.

If there were time to send to the Clerk's desk and have read the report on this point of the engineers—the Tyler report—it would afford the most impressive evidence that can be had as to the existing necessity and danger.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Does not the report that the gentleman refers to show this: That it takes just about as long to clear the conduit by pumping as the storage supply would last? In other words, there would not be any time after you cleared the conduit in which to repair it during which time the city would be supplied with water?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; the remarkable condition exists that there is a single conduit upon which this city and the District are dependent and no means of repairing it. It is a brick tunnel, something over 60 years old, and is liable to go out of use at any time through an accident.

Now, can there be anything more serious for the House to consider?

The second proposition is that no one except the man who has been quoted by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] believes, so far as I understand, that there is any sort of connection between the matter of the water supply and the matter of the possible development of the water power of the Potomac River. When the gentleman quoted the unofficial engineer whom he has in mind I called up Maj. William B. Harrison, one of the engineers who worked under Tyler, and he stated that no such connection is involved. I also called up Mr. Hardy, who is in charge of the filtration plant of the District, and he made the same reply. So no one need think that in voting for this measure he runs any risk whatever of impeding the water-power development plan.

That may be left out of the case absolutely, and if my friend from Michigan had kept up with the matter by attending the sessions of the power commission and taken the trouble, as I have done, to secure a copy of the Tyler report and studied it, he would not have accepted the view that has been put into the newspapers by the engineer he has quoted.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Perhaps the gentleman can answer the question propounded by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] as to whether Congress has ever settled upon a program for this work? I will say to the gentleman that I have other work to do besides attending the meetings of the engineers.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If Congress had acted heretofore, of course, this bill would not be before the House.

Mr. MAPES. Does the gentleman think this is the orderly procedure for Congress to adopt?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do. When the engineers and the Water Power Commission inform us that it will take a considerable time to complete the work of constructing a new conduit, and that delay will put the entire matter where there will be constant peril to the people of the District and to all the interests of the District. And unless there is some better reason that can be given for the delay than any thus far assigned, I protest that action should not be postponed.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. CRAMTON. The estimate is that this work will require $9,000,000, and we are beginning with an appropriation of $200,000. At that rate it would take about 50 years, would it not?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That is not the way to state it. An initial appropriation of $200,000 is asked for now. If sufficient additional appropriations are made hereafter the work will be completed in about two and one-half years.

Another thing, and this is the third proposition, is that the engineers have reached the conclusion that the plan E, as designated in this bill, is the most economical plan that can be adopted. There is no way to get water out of the Potomac, either at or above the Chain Bridge, that can be executed for less than $9,000,000, which is what plan E will cost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does the Federal Government pay for the water it uses in the public buildings in the District of Columbia, and, if so, at what rate?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand that it does not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. May I ask the gentleman whether or not the water is brought to the Federal Government through its own conduit, a conduit that it has built at its own expense?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I can not say as to that, but I think such details are immaterial. The larger matter is the need of water here and the necessity of making provision for a greater supply. Whatever be the answer to the question as to who pays or who does not pay, I can not see that the fact bears on the essential issue with which we are dealing.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia whether he shares the opinion that we see expressed in the public press every day that the Federal Government should be made to pay for the water which it brings into its buildings through a conduit built by itself at its own expense?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I have no opinion on that point, and I do not see that that point is drawn into the consideration of this measure. The main thing, as I have tried to state, is the urgency of the case with reference to the necessity of the increase of the water supply. It seems to me that there ought not to be any hesitation about taking action. If we hesitate now there is no guaranty whatever that steps can be taken to initiate this work at any early date during the next session of Congress, and every day and every hour of delay increases the danger to which the people of the District are subjected. [Applause.]

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the parliamentary situation will permit it, I am going to ask for a division of the question and am going to offer a substitute that the entire amount of this appropriation be paid out of the funds of the District of Columbia and not out of the United States Treasury. If the matter is as urgent as is made out by those who are supporting the appropriation, most assuredly the District can afford to stand for the appropriation. It seems passing strange that if it is as important as it is claimed by those who are supporting it that the engineer should not have discovered it before the closing hours of this session of Congress; and if the engineer who is in charge and those who are taking care of the situation have not been vigilant enough to discover it a little sooner, it seems to me their opinion is not worth acting upon so hastily and hurriedly. Now, I am tired of this rushing in here with appropriations in the closing hours of a Congress. If appropriations are to be had or legislation of this character is to be enacted, the engineer and those in charge of the work ought to go before the proper committee and present the matter in the regular way. If these conduits and this water plant have been needed all these years, why is it that those engineers have not brought it before the proper committee and had proper hearings in order to start this work before this great emergency arose?

Mr. ZIHLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. ZIHLMAN. I want to answer the gentleman's question by telling him that this matter is here now because of its urgency, and at the request of the Secretary of War.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Of course, the Secretary of War did not go down and crawl through the water main. He is taking the word and the recommendation of an engineer who has made the investigation. Now my friend from Virginia [Mr. MOORE], who is usually very conservative, comes before us in the habiliments of a ghost and tells us about the urgency that now exists. I understand from a number of members of the committee that this ghost has been stalking around for several years. Some one is always coming up here hoping to get work started in the closing hours of the session. They not only ask for this appropriation for the plans, but also ask for the appropriation for engineering and for clerical help and for anything that may be necessary to get this thing on its feet and started.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And that would include condemnation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That would include condemnation.

Now, if the water supply for the District of Columbia is in such danger, why is it that those whose business it is to keep that water supply in working order did not discover it in time to present it to a committee in the regular way and let the proper committee consider this and present it in regular order and in due course of business? I for one will not vote to appropriate $200,000 to start a project of this size in order to save a delay of some three or four weeks.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Do I understand that there have been any hearings, either here or in the Senate, on this project? I myself am not informed.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I am not informed, but I take it that there were no hearings. There has been no mention of hearings by those who are supporting the project. If there were hearings, it seems to me that if the proposition has merit the proper committee that should have charge of this ought to have presented the matter of the water supply of the District, especially if it is so serious that the water supply is going to break down and we are going to perish during the intermission between now and the next session of Congress.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A gentleman at my side says there have been hearings.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If there were hearings, then either that committee is not willing to do what is necessary to furnish a water supply or else the Committee on Appropriations is acting hastily in starting a $9,000,000 project in the closing hours of the session.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move the previous question on the motion.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. ANTHONY. I will yield to the gentleman to offer his motion.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a motion and have it pending that the House further insist on its disagreement.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I desire to have a division and then offer a substitute.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman can not do that now; we will have to have a division first.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion for the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Mr. JONES of Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands a division, and the question is on the motion to recede.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL) there were 55 ayes and 39 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present; the Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 227, nays 82, answered "present" 3, not voting 115, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. ANTHONY. But, Mr. Speaker, I made a motion to concur with an amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I offer a substitute for that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not offer a substitute; the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I gave notice that I would offer a substitute, and sent the amendment to the desk before the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. But there was no understanding about it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I may have misunderstood the gentleman from Kansas, but I understood that it would be considered.

Mr. ANTHONY. My motion to recede and concur was a preferential motion and would have to be disposed of first. If that was voted down, then the gentleman could offer his substitute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to concur with an amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. A parliamentary inquiry. Will the substitute which I offer be in order if the motion of the gentleman from Kansas is voted down?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I offered the substitute prior to the time the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the substitute was never reported.

Mr. JONES of Texas. It was not reported but I offered it in the colloquy and I understood that it could be considered. I think the gentleman from Kansas so understood it.

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I think I made a clear statement that my motion would first have to be disposed of; or at least I intended to convey that information.

Mr. JONES of Texas. There was some confusion at the time and I might have misunderstood the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to concur with an amendment.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, is it permissible to demand a division of this question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not. The question is on agreeing to the motion to concur with an amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The House having receded, is not the amendment first to be put, before the motion to concur with an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moved to recede and concur with an amendment. A division of the question was made and the House voted to recede. The Chair would think that the vote came now on the motion to concur with an amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the previous question had not been ordered, the question would not be put on the motion to concur with an amendment; if some one else first offers an amendment, the question would be on agreeing to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. On the amendment the other gentleman offered?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. On both, I would think.

The SPEAKER. If an amendment was pending, or if the previous question had not been ordered, the first motion would be on the amendment to the amendment, and then the Chair thinks the vote would still be on the motion to concur with an amendment, either as amended or not amended. The Chair thinks the vote is on the motion to concur with an amendment. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to concur with an amendment. The gentleman from Texas has demanded a division.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 99, noes 9.

So the motion to concur with an amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 113: After the figures "$4,000," in line 6, page 82, insert: "Provided, That these civilian instructors employed in the department of modern languages and the department of tactics shall be entitled to public quarters and to the same allowances with respect to fuel and light as those of a first lieutenant when occupying public quarters."

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this is to put back into the bill language which went out on a point of order. It is a provision that has been carried in the Military Academy appropriation bill for many years. We offered this amendment which, instead of providing the allowances of a second lieutenant to these civilian instructors, simply provides them with quarters, fuel, and light. I move to recede and concur with an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Anthony moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 113, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert: "Provided, That these civilian instructors employed in the department of modern languages and the department of tactics shall be entitled to public quarters and fuel and light."

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes.

Mr. DALLINGER. Does this include all of the instructors?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; it refers to only two instructors. All of the other instructors have quarters and fuel and light.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas to recede and concur with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask for a further conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. CRAMTON, Mr. SLEMP, Mr. DENT, Mr. SISSON.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report upon the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate numbered 11, 12, 31, 32, 33, 79, 80, 82, 115, 116, and 119 to the bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 31.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 79 and 80, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 12: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$501,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 32: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,649,270"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$3,147,770"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 82: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 82, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$382,810"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 115: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 115 and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 116: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 119: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 119, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$36,404,259"; and the Senate agree to the same.

SYDNEY ANDERSON,
WALTER W. MAGEE,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
Managers on the part of the House.

A. J. GRONNA,
WM. S. KENYON,
E. D. SMITH,
THOS. P. GORE,
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, there were only two major items involved in the proposition under consideration in the conference. The first of these was amendment No. 31, which provides for the congressional seed distribution. Upon that amendment the Senate recedes. The other major proposition was the amendment inserted by the Senate providing for loans to farmers for the purchase of seeds in the drought-stricken sections of the country. Upon that proposition the Senate recedes from its disagreement to the House amendment. The remaining amendments involve only totals, with one exception, which is the item for an assistant in the seed distribution, which goes along with the congressional seed distribution.

Mr. LONGWORTH. So that the loan now is limited to $2,000,000?

Mr. ANTHONY. Yes; $2,000,000 instead of $5,000,000, and the maximum loan to each farmer is $200 instead of $300.

Mr. GARRETT. This ends the differences between the two Houses?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. And it is a complete report?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts submits a report on the Shipping Board operations. It is ordered printed.

POSTMASTER GENERAL BURLESON.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I have here a communication addressed to me by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], who will be minority leader in the next House, to which is attached an address defending the Postmaster General against a newspaper attack. He has asked me to read the communication into the RECORD, it will probably occupy five or six minutes of time, and I ask unanimous consent to send the letter and address to the Clerk to be read at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to have read at the Clerk's desk the letter to which he refers. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I object. The gentleman from Oklahoma will not let anybody else in here with any extension of remarks. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the objection. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, March 1, 1921.

DEAR HENRY: Here is a statement which I have prepared. I hope you will put it in the RECORD for me, since I fear I will not be able to be down before Congress adjourns. My doctors state that I will be all right in a few days.

Your friend,

CLAUDE KITCHIN.

[Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, but for my untimely illness the statement I purpose making now would have been made during the last session of Congress. I am not content, however, to permit this session of Congress to expire without conclusively demonstrating the gross falsity and injustice of the statement upon which I shall now comment.

Shortly before the return of the President from his last trip to Europe, in one of the most mendacious sheets published in America, the New York World, a paper constantly given to misrepresenting and slandering public officials, an editorial was printed, which was carried under the caption "Burleson," and the following excerpt is taken therefrom:

When Mr. Wilson was elected President he had had little experience in national politics. He had dealt with principles and ideas rather than with politicians and organizations. His advisers urged him to follow precedent and name a Postmaster General who could attend to the political affairs of the administration, and as bad luck would have it Albert Sidney Burleson, of Texas, was selected.

Mr. Burleson had had a great deal of political experience. He had served eight terms in Congress from the Austin district, and Mr. Wilson's advisers insisted that inasmuch as Mr. Burleson possessed exceptional knowledge of the ways of Congress he would prove invaluable as a link between the executive and legislative departments of the Government. The prospectus was alluring, but the goods were never delivered.

Taking the record of the last six years, the Burleson appointment, on the whole, has proved the most unfortunate that the President ever made—unfortunate for Mr. Wilson himself, unfortunate for his administration, unfortunate for the Democratic Party, and unfortunate for the country. Mr. Bryan was a sorry misfit as Secretary of State, but Mr. Bryan's selection was inevitable, and in naming him Mr. Wilson followed the political traditions of the country. Moreover, Mr. Bryan's opportunities for mischief were narrowly circumscribed, because Mr. Wilson, in reality, was his own Secretary of State and decided all questions of policy. There have been no such restraints upon Mr. Burleson. He has roamed at large, been allowed to administer his office in his own amazing way, and the consequences are appalling.

Instead of being a link between the President and Congress, he has been a source of continuing contention. Disliked and distrusted at the Capitol, he has made the President's relations with Congress more difficult. As a political adviser to the President he has been a Democratic tragedy. If there has been any instance in which Mr. Wilson has not involved himself in trouble by taking counsel of Albert Sidney Burleson, we should like to know when it happened.

Mr. Speaker, the statements in this editorial were either true or false, and if not true, their falsity should be easily demonstrable.

There are three distinct assertions set forth therein. First, that Burleson was disliked by his former congressional associates. Second, that he was distrusted by those associates. Third, that as "a link between the Executive and the Congress" he has been "a source of continuing contention" and "has made the President's relations with Congress more difficult."

First. Is it true that Burleson was disliked by Members of Congress with whom he had served for 14 years?

At the time he resigned from Congress in 1913 to enter the Cabinet Mr. Burleson was the ranking majority member on one of our most important committees—Appropriations—and had been a member of this committee for years. He had just been unanimously elected, without being a candidate for the honor, chairman of the caucus of his party members. He was universally respected by his fellows because of his recognized ability, his high character, and sterling integrity, and notwithstanding his rugged and unwavering partisanship he numbered among his friends and now enjoys the affectionate regard of many among the older Members on the other side of this Chamber. Every man here who knew Burleson liked him and knows full well without further statement from me that the statement made that he was disliked by his former associates is absolutely false and without a scintilla of evidence to support it.

Second. Was he distrusted by his former associates?

Mr. Speaker, the grant of appropriations asked by him is a fair measure of the confidence of the Congress in a Cabinet officer. I now assert without fear of contradiction that never has the Congress shown greater confidence in a Cabinet officer than it has given to Postmaster General Burleson. The fact is known of all Members of this body, and testimony in support thereof has often been borne, by the opposition members on the great Committee of Appropriations that he is one Cabinet officer in whom they have such confidence that they always give him what he asks because, to quote from one of the most distinguished members of the opposition, "He never asks for anything in the way of an appropriation that is not allowed for the reason that he never asks for anything unless actually needed."

Thus it is shown, Mr. Speaker, that the statement that he was distrusted by his former associates is as vile a slander as was ever directed against a public official.

Now, is there any truth in the third philippic directed by this maliciously mendacious sheet against Albert Sidney Burleson?

It was a well-recognized fact, approved at the White House, and known to every chairman of an important committee of the Congress that during the Sixty-third, Sixty-fourth, and Sixty-fifth Congresses the Postmaster General was "the link between the President and the Congress," just as has been stated by this paper in its editorial—the only true statement in the entire editorial. That fact is not denied, but the issue is whether he has been "a source of continuing contention" and had "made the President's relations with Congress more difficult."

Mr. Speaker, it will be admitted by even the partisan opposion that during the first six years of Woodrow Wilson's administration a very remarkable program of constructive legislation was enacted into law. Many of these measures were bitterly contested. Frequently they were passed through the Congress by a very narrow margin of votes. I now assert, and this assertion will be assented to by every chairman of an important committee dealing with this program of legislation, that President Wilson will perhaps never know in how great a degree the Postmaster General contributed to the passage of these measures. At many strategical points his timely aid and influence helped save the day. This fact will be glady acknowledged by the gentlemen who were in charge of the various measures and will not be denied by anyone who is in a position to speak the truth. Sometimes many, if not all, of the leaders on both sides of this Chamber were in opposition and yet, Mr. Speaker, for six years the administration had the unparalleled record of never having lost a legislative battle, and honesty and truth compels the statement that Albert Sidney Burleson is entitled to no little credit for this accomplishment, as we all know. I speak in the presence of the men who know the truth and I unhesitatingly say that a more unjust falsehood was never uttered than that made in this editorial that Burleson made the President's relations with Congress more difficult. Just the reverse is true, and I speak from a full knowledge of all the facts. More than once he made the way smoother, more than once he aided in overcoming what might otherwise have become insurmountable difficulties.

This, Mr. Speaker, was true with reference to the passage of the Federal reserve act, the tariff act, the farm loan act, the canal tolls act, the Alaskan Railway act, the Clayton Antitrust Act, as well as the acts growing out of the World War, like the draft act, the McLemore resolution, and others too numerous to mention.

Thus it is seen, Mr. Speaker, when the light of truth is turned upon these editorial denunciations of the Postmaster General they are clearly shown to be a tissue of malignant falsehoods.

We all know the animus of these newspaper and magazine criticisms of Burleson. The underlying reason for all this denunciation of him is the fact that second-class postage rates, which had been talked about for 30 years, were put over during his administration as Postmaster General. I myself had charge of the bill which increased the rates in second-class mail matter, and know that Burleson was largely instrumental in its passage, and I gladly recognize the great service he rendered in that matter. Because of his courage and honesty as a public official it was sought by those who have been feeding at the public trough, and whose feet he has lifted out of that trough, to make the people believe that he is disliked and distrusted. The effort has failed. The record has been made and speaks for itself.

INCORPORATING NATIONAL CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC OF AMERICA.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business before the House is the suspension of the rules and the passing of the bill on which a division was held last evening. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 1351. An act to amend an act approved March 3, 1891, incorporating the National Conservatory of Music of America.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The House divided.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is in doubt.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 30.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair thinks there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 203, nays 60, answered "present" 1, not voting 163, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
2d March, 1921.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of rescue work on the Mississippi River.

Mr. RAYBURN. Are these the gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. KING. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAYBURN. I shall have to object.

Mr. KING. What is the purpose in the gentleman's objecting?

Mr. RAYBURN. Because everybody else's remarks are objected to.

Mr. KING. I wish the gentleman would let me in on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. RAYBURN) objects.

MINUTES OF INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD the minutes of the meeting of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union. It is less than 300 words in length.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the minutes of a recent meeting of the Interparliamentary Union of this body.

Mr. GARRETT. I understand that is an official body.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. It is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The minutes are as follows:

The regular annual meeting of the Interparliamentary Union was held in the Caucus Room of the House of Representatives at 10 o'clock the morning of February 24, Mr. William B. McKinley, the president, presiding.

The election of the officers for the ensuing year being the order.

The president, William B. McKinley was, on the motion of Mr. Fred Britten, of Illinois, seconded by Mr. Henry Garland Dupré, of Louisiana, unanimously reelected president.

On motion the following members were reelected:

Vice presidents: Andrew J. Montague, Virginia; Halvor Steenerson, Minnesota; William A. Oldfield, Arkansas.

Mr. Henry Garland Dupré, of Louisiana, was reelected secretary.

Mr. Arthur Deering Call was elected executive secretary for the union.

The following members were unanimously named members of the executive committee: William B. McKinley, Illinois, ex-officio (chairman); Andrew J. Montague, Virginia; Fred Britten, Illinois; Theodore Burton, Ohio; Henry Allen Cooper, Wisconsin; William W. Rucker, Missouri; William A. Oldfield, Arkansas; Joseph T. Robinson, Arkansas; Thomas Sterling, South Dakota; Henry W. Temple, Pennsylvania; Halvor Steenerson, Minnesota; James C. McLaughlin, Michigan.

There were expressions of regret at the continued illness of the efficient executive secretary, Dr. S. N. D. North, who was compelled to retire on account of his state of health, and hope was expressed that he would be speedily restored to his normal condition. On motion the meeting adjourned.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, the House stands in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

ABANDONMENT OF FORT DODGE, IOWA.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. Res. 636) requesting the War Department to furnish information to the Committee on Military Affairs regarding the abandonment of Camp Dodge and providing that pending the furnishment of such information and action thereon no action toward the wrecking and abandonment of said camp be taken.

The title of the resolution was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects. The Clerk will report the next one.

AMERICAN NATIONAL RED CROSS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15482) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the American National Red Cross," approved January 5, 1905.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, has it not already been passed?

The SPEAKER. A similar Senate bill has been passed. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15830) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved October 20, 1914.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold it.

Mr. SINNOTT. This bill is a bill recommended by the Interdepartmental Bureau for Alaska; that is, the various departments of the Government which deal with Alaskan affairs have recommended the passage of this act. I introduced the bill at the request of the Secretary of the Interior. A similar bill has passed the Senate. At the present time there is no provision in the Alaskan coal laws for a prospecting permit. We have that provision in the general coal act for the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In building the Alaskan Railway and the subsequent acts which have been passed, appropriating very large sums of money, it was then stated that it would be instrumental in producing for the use of the United States on the Pacific coast great quantities of valuable coal, and that the greatest coal deposits known in the history of the world were out in this Territory of Alaska. Now, in the closing hours of Congress comes a bill which, if passed, will be passed without any consideration. We do not know how many jokers there may be in it. We do not know how many Guggenheims there may be who will swallow up that coal in Alaska under the ground by reason of this bill if passed, and my idea was that we might well hesitate and wait until some other term of Congress, when we can give the matter more careful consideration.

Mr. SINNOTT. This bill is a very simple bill. It simply perfects the present law relative to the mining of coal in Alaska. A great deal of the coal that the gentleman refers to is withdrawn by the general coal-leasing act relating to Alaska. This bill merely provides for a prospecting permit, and then if coal is discovered on a prospecting permit one may secure a lease of the land under the provisions of the general coal-leasing law of Alaska.

Mr. BLANTON. What does the Government get out of it?

Mr. SINNOTT. It gets a revenue out of it.

Mr. BLANTON. A royalty of about 2 cents per ton.

Mr. SINNOTT. Whatever royalty the Secretary of the Interior may fix.

Mr. BLANTON. And we have built a railroad up there for prospectors to go out there and get the benefit of this coal?

Mr. SINNOTT. It is a minimum of 2 cents a ton. Then they have to pay 25 cents an acre for the first year and 50 cents for the second, third, fourth, and fifth, and then a dollar a year for every year after the fifth year.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the urgency now?

Mr. MONDELL. Just a moment. When we passed the coal-land leasing act I called attention to the fact that the act was faulty because it had no prospecting provision in it. A man had to go out and lease a tract of land without any opportunity of previously exploring it, and had to locate his claim and develop it, so that he could not tell where he wanted to lease. It was a fault in the bill that they are trying to remedy, in so far as Alaska is concerned. We ought to have the same provision in the bill as it relates to the United States. It simply provides that in advance of the lease a man will have a prospecting permit, during which time he may prospect the ground and determine the area that he desires to lease. We ought to have had a provision of that kind in the bill for the continental area of the United States. I endeavored to get such a provision placed in the bill when it was passed by the House, but I was unable to do so. There was no reason why it should not have been done, except that the bill we passed was not written that way.

Mr. BLANTON. When was the report made on this bill?

Mr. SINNOTT. The report was made some time ago.

Mr. BLANTON. Several months ago?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; not several months ago.

Mr. BLANTON. It was made in January, was it not?

Mr. SINNOTT. It was reported to the House on January 29.

Mr. BLANTON. And we have waited all of this time, when we have had a good many spare hours, until now we are in the closing hours of the session.

Mr. SINNOTT. No; this bill has waited in its place on the calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows it is very easy to pass measures in the Senate and bring them over here, when claims involving $714,000, like the McClintic-Marshal Construction Co. claim, can be put on as riders on an appropriation bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Summer is coming on in Alaska, and prospectors will want to be at work. I have discussed this matter with the Delegate elect from Alaska, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Interdepartmental Bureau, and they are all in favor of it. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will yield, this bill simply adds to the existing law the exploration rights?

Mr. SINNOTT. The exploration rights, that is all.

Mr. MADDEN. For the period of four years?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And the man who does the prospecting does it at his own expense?

Mr. SINNOTT. At his own expense.

Mr. MADDEN. And if he discovers coal he may have the right to lease on the terms fixed in the law?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, I have had some experience in this sort of thing. We never can lease coal land in Alaska unless we give the man the right to go on the ground and explore the territory and develop the thickness of the vein, learn the character of the vein, and determine what area he can successfully mine.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman surely heard the speech of the Delegate from Alaska on the coal situation there?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not heard any speech on this subject at all, but I know we ought to have had a provision of this sort in the coal bill when we passed it, and I insisted then that a provision of this kind was essential.

Mr. BLANTON. The coal is not going to get away from us by waiting. It is in the ground.

Mr. SINNOTT. Of course, several months will go by. The Alaskan coal law that will attach to this bill is the coal law that was passed since the so-called frauds took place in Alaska.

Mr. BLANTON. I feel compelled to object.

Mr. SINNOTT. I am sorry the gentleman objects.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oregon to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass S. 4864.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon moves to suspend the rules and pass a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 4864) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved October 24, 1914, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the leasing of coal lands in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved October 24, 1914, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to said section the following proviso:

"And provided further, That where prospecting or exploratory work is necessary to determine the existence or workability of coal deposits in any unclaimed, undeveloped area in Alaska, the Secretary of the Interior may issue prospecting permits for a term of not to exceed four years, under such rules and regulations and conditions as to development as he may prescribe, to applicants qualified under this act, for not to exceed 2,560 acres, and if within the time specified in said permit the permittee shows to the Secretary of the Interior that the land contains coal in commercial quantities, the permittee shall be entitled to a lease under this act for all or any part of the land in his permit.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Texas has 20 minutes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that this bill needs any further explanation than has already been made, except to say that this is a measure which has been introduced at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, who sent it to Congress on the recommendation of the Interdepartmental Alaskan Board, which is a board made up from the various bureaus that deal with Alaskan affairs. It merely provides for a prospecting permit in Alaska, the same as we incorporated into the coal and oil leasing act.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CURRY of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. CURRY of California. I understood the gentleman to refer to an Interdepartmental Alaskan Board.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. CURRY of California. Can the gentleman cite me to any law creating such a board?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; I am not familiar with any law creating the board. It was created in the departments and consists of a representative of the Secretary of the Interior, a representative of the Secretary of State, a representative of the Secretary of Commerce, and of the various other departments that deal with Alaskan affairs.

Mr. CURRY of California. Do you know of any law authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to create such a board?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; I am not familiar with that; it may be an informal board called together for the purpose of discussing Alaskan affairs.

Mr. CURRY of California. Does not the gentleman think that Congress has permitted the Secretary and the heads of bureaus to exercise powers and functions not authorized by law long enough without our recognizing the right of the Secretary of the Interior to do it when there is no law whatever to create such a board?

Mr. SINNOTT. What I am impressed with is the merits of the recommendation rather than the legality of the creation of the board.

Mr. CURRY of California. As a Member of the House, I would prefer to have the chairman of the committee recognize them as individual citizens and not as occupying official positions.

Mr. SINNOTT. The chairman has recognized the Secretary of the Interior rather than the board.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I notice that the bill provides for the issuing of permits for 2,560 acres; does that mean that one person can get 2,560 acres?

Mr. SINNOTT. No one permit can exceed 2,560 acres. That is the maximum he may take now under the coal laws relating to Alaska. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the present law provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall lease coal lands and the royalty shall be fixed at a certain price per ton. This does not change that law in any respect, except that it does what the other law should have done, namely, authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue permits to any person to prospect for coal in Alaska. If by any chance he finds coal, he may then enter into a lease for its production on the permit provided in the existing law. It seems to me the addition to the law that now exists which is provided in this bill is a provision which ought to have gone into the law originally when it passed. There can be no wiser provision than the one sought to be enacted in this law, because it enlists the cooperation of private individuals with their own capital to develop coal in the territory where coal is very much needed. We ought to encourage the activity and initiation of private individuals to the extent that it is possible to encourage it. If there is any other way that such encouragement could be given in addition to that provided in this bill it should be added. I think this covers the case and accomplishes the object.

Mr. KING. Is the issuance of the permit entirely discretionary with the Secretary?

Mr. MADDEN. I should judge so; it should not be discretionary with anybody else. He ought to have the only authority, because the Secretary of the Interior has jurisdiction over the public lands.

Mr. KING. And he can withhold the permit if he desires?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly.

Mr. CROWTHER. Does this apply only to individuals, or can a large corporation go in and prospect for coal?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. How many acres can they take up?

Mr. MADDEN. Two thousand five hundred and sixty acres is the limit that any company or corporation can take.

Mr. CROWTHER. Suppose they divide up into two or three corporations?

Mr. SINNOTT. There are provisions in the law to specifically guard against anything of that kind.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there are two things which prevent the passage of sane legislation in the House of Representatives. One of these things is the want of intimate knowledge on the part of the membership concerning what the bill contains and its real effect under the law. The other reason that prevents sane legislation from being passed is what we know here on the floor as the courtesy custom among our colleagues. That is, if our friend from Oregon has a certain bill here that is his pet measure, which he wants to pass, he is our friend, we like him, and we want to accommodate him, because, forsooth, he is our friend and we must therefore support his bill. It is those two things which prevent the passage of only the right kind of legislation in this House. This is no time, in the closing hours of Congress, to bring up measures of importance, when the Members have no intimate knowledge whatever of what they contain. Let me call your attention to some of the measures that we have rushed through here in the closing of this Congress. Yesterday there came to us from the other body at the other end of the Capitol an amendment on an appropriation bill which prevented under the former decree of the House, and which, therefore, we had passed, the instruction being sent to the Secretary of War to sell at once 2,000 tractors which the farmers of the country are anxious to have placed on the market. What was the result of that action? If the membership of this House had understood the proposition that amendment of the Senate would have been turned down and that instruction would have been sent to the Secretary of War. For these tractors should be sold. What are the facts in that respect? There are several thousand tractors now in the hands of the Secretary of War which have been deteriorating in value ever since the armistice was signed.

Why have they not been sold? The farmers of the country want them. It is because there has been a secret understanding between the Secretary of War and the manufacturers that he will not flood the market with them. When this House put that proper provision in the bill, providing that those 2,000 tractors should be sold at once, and that bill went to the Senate, a howl was heard from the manufacturers somewhere, and out of that bill by way of Senate amendment that matter was stricken. Yesterday when the matter came up for decision here I forced a roll call upon it, and only four men, I think it was, voted to require those tractors to be sold. If all my colleagues had understood the matter, there would have been no question about the result.

Let me call your attention to other matters which we have hurriedly passed in the closing hours of this Congress. Last week on an appropriation bill, from the Senate, came four different amendments, every one of them voting out large sums of money, being what are known as the Mississippi Valley claims. One of them amounted to $362,140.98; another to $204,307.98; another, if I am not mistaken, to nearly $125,000; and another one to $15,561.23, if you please—claims of that character coming in as riders on appropriation bills. The distinguished chairman of your Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD], got up on the floor and read to those few who were present the statement of the Secretary of War in substance that it would be outrageous to allow those claims and advising not to pass them, and we know that if Congress allowed them it would open up the doors of the Treasury to a billion dollars of such claims now existing. Mr. GOOD tried to keep those claims from passing, and when he forced a record vote upon them, if you will look at the RECORD you will see that there was a minority who voted against them, and they all passed.

Let me call your attention to another one. There has been pending here in the House of Representatives ever since I have been here, for four years, a claim for $714,007.39, known as the McClintic-Marshal Construction Co. claim, for building the Gatun Locks on the Panama Canal.

When I was on the Committee on Claims in the Sixty-fifth Congress, when the manager of that firm was down before the committee he gave some testimony, and I would like for you to look into the RECORD and into the minority report which I filed and see his testimony. There is not a man in this House who is unprejudiced who will read that man's testimony who would have voted for that bill. I had the old contract dug up in the Treasury Department. I had an auditor give us a statement, in which he said that in addition to the contract price we had paid the McClintic-Marshal Co. an extra sum of about $400,000, if I remember correctly, at the end of the contract more than the contract price. They were then coming in here wanting nearly a million dollars more, and because Gen. Goethals, forsooth, recommended the payment of it Congress took the position that it ought to be paid. This is the distinguished Gen. Goethals who during the war wanted this Government to pay several million dollars more for steel than the President thought ought to be paid, and you will remember that the President took him out of that job and put somebody else in his place. The President did not take his judgment of what we should pay for steel.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is not addressing himself to the bill under consideration, and, therefore, he is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has listened to the gentleman, and he has not thought that the gentleman has been discussing the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I am trying to show the Congress that if matters of that kind are considered in the closing hours of Congress we are liable to make mistakes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not hear the gentleman argue. The gentleman must confine himself to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I think I shall confine myself to it. I want you Members to get the RECORD of a month ago and read the testimony in this case which I then put into the RECORD at the time I last objected to its consideration.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not complying with the order of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to quote concerning such claims as this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must take his seat when the point of order is made and sustained.

Mr. BLANTON. I thought the Chair sustained me.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair recollects, the rule of the House provides that the gentleman can proceed only by the consent of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. When the point of order is made the Member takes his seat until after it is decided.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will quote the rule, being paragraph 4 of Rule XIV:

> If any Member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any Member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another Member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case without debate.

Mr. BLANTON. After the Chair decides does not the Member resume the floor?

The SPEAKER (reading)—

> He shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another Member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case without debate; if a decision is in favor of the Member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise.

The Chair does not wish, if this is new to the gentleman——

Mr. BLANTON. It is a new rule to me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has read from one of the rules of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. That never has been enforced on a Member since I have been here.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed out of order for 10 minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the proper motion is to ask that he proceed in order.

Mr. KING. I move that the gentleman proceed in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I ask that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed in order.

Mr. KNUTSON. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the gentleman proceed in order.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am just trying to convince my good friends that this is no time to take up this mining bill, which involves the splendid coal deposits out in Alaska. This House knows how many hundreds of thousands of dollars we have spent for the development of the great Northwest.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If the gentleman will yield, will the gentleman kindly indicate how much coal development there has been in Alaska under the present law during the last six years?

Mr. BLANTON. Just a minute, I will get to that. We have built a railroad out in Alaska that has cost an immense sum of money. We have been told that one of the greatest coal deposits known to geology is out in Alaska, and that when properly developed it will furnish every ton of coal that the Government will need for the Pacific coast.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment, please. We have heard of the Guggenheims and their grabbing up things in Colorado and other places. Without this bill they can not grab the coal lands in Alaska, but with this bill they can send their expert geologists out there, they can explore that country, and each person who applies, if the Secretary of the Interior desires to give him a permit, can get an exploration permit that covers 2,560 acres of land.

The Guggenheims can send five men out there, each one of them can obtain an exploration permit, and each one of them could cover 2,560 acres of land under an exploration claim for four years, and finally gobble up all the coal. Every bit of these coal deposits might be embraced within those five holdings of 2,560 acres each. Coal deposits are not scattered all over the country broadcast; they are in pockets here and there; and when discovered, men like the Guggenheims can get control and other men and the Government are cut out. How much under this law and this bill would the Government get out of it? A little 2 cents a ton for coal. Two cents a ton. That is about the kind of division that is usually made with the Government. We paid as high as $15 a ton for coal here in Washington this winter, but the Government is to get 2 cents a ton under the bill and under the law that now exists. Now, if my friend thinks this is a proper time, when everybody's mind is stirred up by many things, when there is not a proper normal equilibrium here in this House, when your minds are on other things—if you think it is a proper time to take up important measures which may mean hundreds of millions of dollars to the people of this country, then go at it, go at it, but I am performing my duty as a Representative in the House of Congress, registering here my feeble protest, and doing it earnestly, honestly, and conscientiously. Now I will yield to the distinguished gentleman from Idaho, who has something on his mind.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I desire to inquire of the gentleman if he knows how much coal has been developed in Alaska during the last six years—that is, under the present law—and if he is aware of the fact that that law has not worked well, and this proposed legislation possibly will be helpful in developing the coal resources of Alaska?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH], who seems to be so much interested just now, all of a sudden, in the immediate development of coal in Alaska, has been seated in this House for the last two years, and not a time has he risen in his seat during the two years and said, "Mr. Speaker, we must pass an emergency coal-leasing law for Alaska," but he sits in his seat and waits until we are about to close Congress, when everything is in a stir, when the Capitol is turned upside down, and all the east end of it is turned over to the Ways and Means Committee. Then he comes in all of a sudden and says that if you do not pass this coal-leasing bill, God knows the Government is going to perdition.

Mr. CLARK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. I can not refuse.

Mr. CLARK. Does the gentleman mean, when he says the Capitol is turned upside down, to refer to the controversy he had with his colleague a few days ago, Mr. SUMNERS? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. In due time that matter will be answered. And if the gentleman from Florida had been here, he would have been one man who would have stood up and said, "Mr. Speaker, I am one man for the salary increase." Would you not? Because he is a man who stands for what he stands for. [Laughter.]

Now, I have used up all the time I want. I have not taken up this time idly. I have not tried to get out of the RECORD. I have tried to perform my duty in the matter, and if you outvote me, it will not be the first time you have done it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to consume any time on this or any other bill. It is late in the session. My duties as a Representative in Congress are through. However, a word may not be out of place on an amendment to a bill that was committed to my charge.

Six years ago the Public Lands Committee, by the aid of the Interior Department, passed for Alaska the best sort of a law it knew how to pass. We did not think it was perfect then, but we did our best. We had no selfish interest to serve. We were engaged in trying to conserve the Nation's resources and develop Alaska. It has not proved to be perfect. Bills are so seldom perfect. It was so tight and so rigid in its terms that the coal men could not make a success under it. It was not sufficiently attractive to them. The transportation question makes it necessary to have the law liberalized. We had hoped to conserve every interest that the Government had, but we really conserved the interest so securely that the coal could not be mined and worked. It is not being worked. That great estate is lying idle. People are moving out of Alaska. A territory rich in resources is not being developed. So true is that that coal had to be shipped from the United States to Alaskan coal consumers. The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Payne, has asked the distinguished chairman of the Public Lands Committee [Mr. SINNOTT] to introduce this bill and let the coal men have four years—a permit merely to investigate and ascertain if conditions are feasible for the operation of a coal mine. Large expense is necessary to operate a coal mine in Continental United States, and correspondingly more in remote Alaska, with frigid climate and poor railway facilities.

Investigations must be made. That Territory is remote from the United States. It was necessary to go into it at great length and spend large sums of money. The Secretary asked Chairman SINNOTT to introduce the bill, and he did it. Every member of the Committee on the Public Lands has asked this relief, and the Alaskans asked for it. It only grants a permit of four years, to let the coal operators ascertain whether or not they can work under the law at all. I submit, the Congress ought to do that much for Alaska, that they ought to do that much for the coal field, that they ought to do that much for the coal operators, and that they ought to do that much for the consuming public, who really want to utilize the Alaskan coal. There is no well-founded reason for any furor about this bill. It is proper legislation—not only proper but necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back any time I may have remaining. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 181, noes 2.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays, and pending that I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] The Chair has counted a quorum, and without counting all of the Members present.

Two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the bill is passed.

CENSUS OF THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Mr. SIEGEL and Mr. SINCLAIR rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 251 and pass the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and pass Senate Joint Resolution 251, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution 251, to authorize payment to members of the Army and Navy who were employed as enumerators during the Fourteenth Decennial Census to take the census of persons in the Army and Navy.

Whereas it appears that in making an enumeration of persons in the Army and Navy for the Fourteenth Decennial Census, in the judgment of the Director of the Census it was impracticable to do otherwise than, with the official sanction of the Army and Navy, employ officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy as enumerators, and that such officers and enlisted men were duly employed to make the enumeration and were promised compensation at the rate of 3 cents for each person enumerated; and

Whereas the vouchers for such compensation have been disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department on the ground that payment thereof was unwarranted; and

Whereas it further appears that in the judgment of the Director of the Census the census of the military and naval forces was taken more accurately by reason of the assurance of compensation to such enumerators than if it had been taken under orders of the War Department: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the appointment of such enumerators be, and the same is hereby, validated and that the moneys appropriated for the Fourteenth Decennial Census are hereby made available for the payment of their services as such enumerators.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Is the request to consider generally the Senate bills, or just this bill alone?

The SPEAKER. This bill alone.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask, under the reservation of the right to object, whether or not it is the intention of the Chair to recognize bills called from the floor or as they appear upon the printed calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair ruled that we would follow the printed calendar, but this is a bill on the Speaker's table, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I understood the gentleman correctly he said that this was a resolution to pay men in the Army.

Mr. SIEGEL. It is to pay the soldiers and sailors who were asked to take the census while the census was being taken. They were each promised 3 cents a name. They did the work. The money long ago was appropriated, but a question arose as to the propriety of the payment, because they were in the employ of the Army and Navy, and they have not been able to get the money.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The men were already drawing pay from the Army?

Mr. SIEGEL. This work was done at the request of the Director of the Census.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman tell us how much is involved?

Mr. SIEGEL. Less than $5,000.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Let me say this to the gentleman from Oklahoma in order that you may have a concrete illustration: At Fort Sam Houston, Tex., there is a considerable population of from 25,000 to 35,000. Those soldiers were detailed by their commanding officers to go through the tedious, long-drawn-out work of census enumerators, under the promise that they would be compensated at the rate of other enumerators.

Mr. McCLINTIC. My thought was that they were already receiving compensation.

Mr. BEE. They were. This work was done in extra hours.

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes. This work was done in extra hours.

Mr. BLANTON. They get this as extra pay?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This extra pay is the same pay that other census enumerators received?

Mr. SIEGEL. Surely.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is aware of the fact that the census enumerators elsewhere give all their time to this work and receive no pay from anywhere else?

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, yes. But many of these enumerators got 4 or 5 cents a name. The soldier boys and sailors were promised 3 cents.

Mr. BLANTON. Supervisors who gave their entire time received less than enough to pay their expenses in some instances.

Mr. SIEGEL. I do not think that is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not a bill pending before the gentleman's committee to pay them extra?

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, yes. They want a thousand dollars' bonus.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WINGO. I demand a second.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

FEDERAL BUILDING AND SITE AT GASTONIA, N. C.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 4332, to exchange the present Federal building and site at Gastonia, N. C., for a new site and building.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 4332. Has the gentleman got a copy of the bill?

Mr. HOEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to exchange and convey to the Citizens National Bank of Gastonia, N. C., by the usual quitclaim deed, the present Federal building and site at Gastonia, N. C., for the site at the northwest corner of South Street and West Franklin Street, in said city, offered by said bank, and in addition to said land said bank shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury $175,000 to cover the cost of the erection of a stone-faced public building thereon adequate and suitable for the needs of the United States in such city. The present Federal building and site to remain in the custody and control of the United States until the completion of the proposed new building.

That upon the said new site, when acquired as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a suitable and commodious building, with fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, approaches, etc., for the accommodation of the post office and other governmental offices in said city, at a limit of cost, exclusive of the site, of not exceeding $175,000, which is hereby appropriated. Said amount being hereby authorized and made available from the moneys to be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury by said Citizens National Bank of Gastonia, N. C., as hereinbefore mentioned.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is this bill the one which provides for the transfer of the present site of the post office at Gastonia to another site in the same city and provides also for the payment by the grantee of the old site of $175,000 to erect a new post-office building? It seems to be a rather unusual contribution. Has it the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. HOEY. Yes, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen. This bill provides for the exchange of the present post-office site in the town of Gastonia to the Citizens' National Bank, and the Citizens' National Bank submitted to the Government a proposition to give them a new site, because the present building is insufficient, and they would furnish in addition to this new site a sum sufficient to erect a new building, not to exceed $175,000. The Supervising Architect has recommended it, and the Treasury Department has recommended it. The estimate was not to exceed $160,000, but in order that there might be no possibility that the Government would incur any expense under it, the bank will put up an amount not exceeding $175,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. HOEY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. How long has this building that is proposed to be sold been erected?

Mr. HOEY. This building was erected in 1916; but the town of Gastonia made the largest percentage of increase in population at the recent census of any town in the United States.

Mr. MADDEN. How much did the building they now have cost?

Mr. HOEY. Sixty-six thousand dollars.

Mr. MADDEN. How much did the ground cost?

Mr. HOEY. Fourteen thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. MADDEN. That makes $80,000.

Mr. HOEY. Eighty thousand dollars.

Mr. MADDEN. What is proposed to be done?

Mr. HOEY. The Government estimates the value of the site which is to be given to the bank at $27,000, but the value of it is nearer $50,000. In addition to that, the bank pays $175,000 more.

Mr. MADDEN. Why does the bank want to do this?

Mr. HOEY. There are two reasons: One is that the bank likes the present location of the post office, and the other reason is that the present post-office site is so small that no addition can be made to the building.

Mr. MADDEN. How does it happen that only four years after the erection of the building it is suddenly discovered that what they expended $80,000 on is not what they want?

Mr. HOEY. I started to state that. The town of Gastonia has made a growth of 123 per cent.

Mr. MADDEN. What is the population?

Mr. HOEY. Twelve thousand eight hundred and fifty.

Mr. MADDEN. And we propose to put up a building to cost $175,000 in a town of 12,850 people?

Mr. HOEY. Yes; and the bank pays for every dollar of it.

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection? What is the objection to letting the people of this city construct a post-office building, to cost $175,000 or $1,175,000, if they furnish the money and there is no expense to the Government? [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. This is my objection to it: In the first place, we put up a building there in 1916 which was presumably fit for the public needs. Now it is suddenly discovered that that building is not fit for what we put it up for, and it is proposed to sell that building for $175,000 and a vacant lot.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is proposed to sell the land for what it is worth and have them contribute $175,000.

Mr. MADDEN. That is not the proposition.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; it is.

Mr. MADDEN. The proposition is that the bank is going to give them a vacant lot said to be worth $27,000 and put up a building to cost $175,000. That is the proposition, if I understand it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, if we can sell this building for $175,000 or $202,000, as the case may be, why not sell it and put the money into the Treasury?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We could not sell it for $75,000 except to this bank.

Mr. MADDEN. This town is going to get a new public building, something that no other town in the United States is going to get.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And it will not cost the Government anything.

Mr. MADDEN. The great city of Chicago would like to have a public building.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And if the city of Chicago put up four or five million dollars I think the Government would let us do it.

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

Mr. HOEY. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill as amended. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MADDEN. I demand a second, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOEY. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. WALSH. I think when a motion to suspend the rules is made the bill ought to be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it should be again reported as amended. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to exchange and convey to the Citizens National Bank of Gastonia, N. C., by the usual quitclaim deed, the present Federal building and site at Gastonia, N. C., for the site at the northwest corner of South Street and West Franklin Street, in said city, offered by said bank, and in addition to said land said bank shall pay to the Secretary of the Treasury $175,000 to cover the cost of the erection of a stone-faced public building thereon adequate and suitable for the needs of the United States in such city. The present Federal building and site to remain in the custody and control of the United States until the completion of the proposed new building.

That upon the said new site, when acquired as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed a suitable and commodious building, with fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, approaches, etc., for the accommodation of the post office and other governmental offices in said city, at a limit of cost, exclusive of the site, of not exceeding $175,000. Said amount being hereby authorized and made available from the moneys to be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury by said Citizens National Bank of Gastonia, N. C., as hereinbefore mentioned.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve my time.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. MADDEN. You can get plenty of time to vote. Do not be in a hurry. I do not take up much of the time of the House, and I think this is a question upon which somebody should be heard.

There is in this town down here in North Carolina a public building said to have cost $80,000 in 1916. Nobody knows how much it is worth to-day. It may be worth $200,000. Yet we propose to sell it to a bank, and the bank gives us a vacant lot, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY] says the vacant lot is worth $27,000. Nobody knows whether it is worth a cent or not. We have not had any report from any official authority to say what it is worth. Then the gentleman says the bank, in addition to that, is going to put up a building to cost $175,000. Now, how do we know that? If we are going to sell the property that we own, the money ought to go into the Treasury, and if we are going to erect a new building in this town it ought to be appropriated for in the ordinary way. Now, of course, the gentleman from North Carolina realizes that he could not get an appropriation for a building in his town, as nobody else in the United States can.

We have not been appropriating money at this session for any public buildings in any city in the United States. The gentleman from North Carolina is smarter than anybody else or some Senator thinks that he has an opportunity to make a trade by which they can get a new public building by indirection when they can not get it directly. I do not propose to stand here and submit to any city in North Carolina or any other city getting by indirection out of the Treasury of the United States that which they would not be able to do by direct appropriation. I know that the leader of the House says that he wants this bill passed; that objection ought not to be made; but if anybody came to him and said that they wanted an appropriation for a building anywhere in the United States he would say, "No, sir; not under any circumstances." The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House have tried day after day to report a public building bill, and there are many cities in the Union that would like a public building—in many cities where they need them—but I apprehend that there is no need of a public building in this place, where we already have an elegant building.

It will not do to say that we are not making an appropriation. We are, where we are disposing of the property that we already own and in which we transact public business. Who can say to-night that this building we own is worth only $80,000? Who can say that this building we are proposing to get is worth $175,000? Who can say that it is wise for us to transfer Government property to a bank? Who knows what the bank wants to make the trade for, or how much advantage it will be for the bank and how much disadvantage for the Public Treasury? For myself I unhesitatingly say that it ought not to be done. We have given no study to the question. The Senate passed the bill, it is true, but you can pass a tapeworm through the Senate without any consideration. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. What kind of a building is it proposed to erect, a frame or brick building, and who makes the plans?

Mr. MADDEN. Nobody knows; we have not been told; the bill comes up under a request for unanimous consent, which is refused, and then comes a motion to suspend the rules, and there is no opportunity for amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Has the gentleman read the report of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Here is the report, containing an answer to every question the gentleman has asked.

Mr. MADDEN. It makes no difference what the Secretary of the Treasury says about it; I say the general policy ought to be if there is going to be a public building it ought to be where it is needed, and not where we already have an adequate public building in which we are doing business. We ought not to sell Government property to accommodate any private individual.

Mr. HOEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill was recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury. An expert went down and made a thorough examination. He passed on the value of the vacant property, of the vacant lot. It was passed in the Senate unanimously. It was submitted to the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and received a unanimous report. There is no suggestion from any quarter that it has not merit, as far as the value is concerned.

I started to say a moment ago that one reason why the present building is inadequate is on account of the marvelous growth that the city has made—123 per cent since the building was erected. There are now over 150 applications for boxes that can not be supplied. The present site is inadequate. The new site is in the civic center of the town, next to the county courthouse. Now, it is provided that the $175,000 is to be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury in the regular way and the building will be constructed by the Treasury Department.

Mr. MADDEN. And for every dollar that was estimated in 1916, to-day to do the same work, with the same material, would cost $2.

Mr. HOEY. The estimate was made last year, when material and labor were high, and they estimate that the building would not cost over $160,000, but in order to be safe the bank offers to pay $175,000 if necessary.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I am on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that heard this case, and we were satisfied after the hearing that there was nothing wrong in this proposition. I believe it is a proposition that is safe for the House to pass. I think it went through the committee unanimously.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman must realize that it will cost $3 to-day to do what every dollar did in 1916.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4664) to amend the first paragraph of section 20 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, as amended by the act of Congress approved April 20, 1920, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 20 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, as amended by the act of Congress approved April 20, 1920, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 20. That bonds provided for in this act shall be issued in denominations of $40, $100, $500, $1,000, and such larger denominations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may authorize; they shall run for specified minimum and maximum periods, subject to payment and retirement, at the option of the land bank, at any time after the minimum period specified in the bonds, which shall not be longer than 10 years from the date of their issue. They shall have interest coupons attached, payable semiannually, and shall be issued in series of not less than $50,000, the amount and terms to be fixed by the Federal Farm Loan Board. They shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 5 per cent per annum."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DALE. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for the consideration of this bill under these circumstances because of the urgent importance of time in the matter. This bill changes the present law in a very slight respect, in one particular. It simply relates to the call period of the bonds of the Federal Farm Loan Association. Under the present law the minimum call period is five years. That is, you understand that if a bond is issued by the Federal Farm Loan Association in which the minimum period is 5 years, the maximum period may be 10, 15, or 20 years, and yet lying back of the specified time in the bond is this law which says that the bond may be called at the end of the 5-year period. Therefore, as a bond on the market, it will be seen that it lessens its value by being subject to call, even though the time may be specified as a longer time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALE. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand the Federal farm loan law, it is all for one and one for all, and if one organization fails, then the organizations under the law as it is must make up the deficit. If all the organizations do not agree to this, if Congress should pass this law, and there should be failures, how about the balance of the organizations? Could it be collected?

Mr. DALE. Let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that this bill relates only to the call period in the bonds issued by the association. It has no reference to the mortgages of the association, but simply the bonds issued on which the money is raised to loan out on the mortgages.

Mr. CANNON. It has been loaned now and the holders have it, but if Congress enacts a law changing the liability, without the assent——

Mr. DALE. But it does not relate to the liabilities of mortgages at all. It relates simply to the bonds that are issued by the association.

Mr. CANNON. Are not the bonds secured by the land upon which the mortgages are issued?

Mr. DALE. That is true.

Mr. CANNON. I used to be somewhat of a jackleg lawyer, and it seems to me there would be danger that if you did not have the assent of the people who have to pay the loss, that you would release the people from that liability by the law. I make that suggestion.

Mr. DALE. I would suggest to the gentleman that I do not quite see how this affects the liability in any particular. It does not affect the liability of the farmer who gives the mortgage in any way. It is the association that issues the bond on which the money is raised and loaned to the farmer.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. DALE. This bill simply changes the present law in this particular. While the call period at the present time under the present law is limited to 5 years, this bill extends the time to 10 years, so that the Federal Farm Loan Association can issue bonds the call period of which may be 10 years instead of 5.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALE. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I am much in sympathy with the gentleman's position. As I understand it in the bonds that you propose to sell now the call period will be extended from 5 to 10 years, thereby making them much more attractive to buyers.

Mr. DALE. Precisely; that is the purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Thereby enabling the farmer to raise money with which to carry on his crops?

Mr. DALE. It would seem to me that the law as amended by this bill if enacted into law would lessen the liability——

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Why, surely.

Mr. DALE. Of the farmer rather than increase it.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALE. I will.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The gentleman feels certain that they will be able to sell these bonds?

Mr. DALE. That is one reason why this bill is asked for. It is one purpose of getting this into the law. Of course, you gentlemen know the difficulty the Federal Farm Loan Association has had in selling its bonds. You know what has had to be done. Things have had to be done here in the House you and I felt were out of line with our best judgment; but we had to do that when ordinarily we would not give our approval, because we had to get the funds for this association for the reason that these bonds were not salable; that is, they were not very attractive on the market, but we had to get funds for the association. Now, the purpose of this law is to make them more attractive.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Has the gentleman considered the proposition of increasing the rate of interest?

Mr. DALE. Yes; but that is objected to immediately. The minute you talk about raising the rate of interest above 5 per cent on the loans to the farmers you know what goes up all over the country. They say, why we can not do that.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. They would rather have the loans than no money.

Mr. DALE. There is a lot more I would like to say, but I have some one who can tell you much more about this, and I want to yield to him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Just this question: Now, if the gentleman's bill passes it will enable these farmers to raise money through this association, and if it does not pass there is danger of these men having to pay more for money they would borrow?

Mr. DALE. It would result in just what the gentleman from Minnesota indicated. The only relief that you can get under this condition is to raise the rate of interest from 5 to 5½ or 6 per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Increasing the call term to 10 years will make the bonds more attractive?

Mr. DALE. All of which makes them so much more attractive.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. And facilitates the sale of bonds.

Mr. RANDALL of California. What effect will making the farm-loan bonds attractive have on the Liberty bonds?

Mr. DALE. There will not be any.

Mr. RANDALL of California. If the bond buyers are attracted by the farm-loan bonds, they will not want to buy Liberty bonds?

Mr. DALE. Yes; but the gentleman will remember that we had to take care of $200,000,000 of these bonds when we were selling Liberty bonds. We had to do it.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Will the Liberty bonds be worth more or less under this provision?

Mr. DALE. I do not think it makes any difference. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY].

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the purpose of this bill is to increase the optional period of the Federal farm loan bonds from 5 years to 10 years. This will increase the attractiveness of the bonds to the purchaser and will enable the board to offer the bonds at a decreased rate of interest, and to that particular proposition I will address my remarks. At the present time bonds are limited to five years' optional period before they can be called. Now, a bond bearing 5 per cent interest on its face and offered on a basis to earn 4½ per cent for five years would be worth 102.22. That is, a $1,000 bond would be worth $1,022.20.

But if the optional period were increased to 10 years, that same bond would be worth $1,039.90, or $17.70 more—be worth that much more to the sellers of the bond; that is, to the farmers of the country—and that would effect in itself the reduction of about a quarter of a cent per year in the interest rate. If the bond buyers were willing to accept 4½ per cent interest on their investment, the $1,000 bond would be worth $1,033.50 for a five-year period, but if the optional period were increased to 10 years it would be worth $1,060.60, or, the bond would be worth to the seller $27.10 more than it is now. This would decrease the interest rate about one-third of 1 per cent. But, if the bond buyer who was willing to earn 4 per cent on his investment, which is a fair rate of return on tax-exempt securities of first-class character, the bond would be worth $1,044.90 for the five-year period; but if we pass this bill and increase the optional period to 10 years the bond would be worth $1,081.80, or $36.90 more to the seller, which would effect a reduction in the interest rate of nearly one-half of 1 per cent. So that by increasing the time from 5 to 10 years we increase the attractiveness of the bond to the purchaser and at the same time decrease the interest rate to the farmers who have to pay it.

The investment demand is always for long-term securities; that is, for a long term before the optional period expires. Purchasers desire in investing their money to obtain securities that will run for a considerable period of time.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. How will that affect the bonds already issued?

Mr. HAWLEY. It will not affect them at all in my opinion. We do not propose to invalidate the obligation of any contract now outstanding. The legislation proposed relates only to future issues. There has been a general demand for the increase in the length of the optional period.

I have some knowledge of associations that would buy these bonds who do not care to buy a bond which may be called at the end of five years, because the time is so short in which to realize the amortization of any premium paid—and these bonds have been sold in times past at some premium—that it puts an element of speculation in the purchase that buyers of bonds for investment purposes do not care to assume. But if we increase the rate to 10 years, then we open the market for these bonds to a very much larger body of purchasers, who will buy them in considerable quantities if the time before they can be called for payment is extended.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Will not the effect of this be to depreciate the value of outstanding issues?

Mr. HAWLEY. Not necessarily, because the outstanding issues, most of them, have run for a considerable portion of the five-year period, and the investors who will receive their money for those bonds when called will be very glad to have an opportunity to reinvest that money in the longer-term bonds. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the only thing that this bill does is to amend the present law in one simple particular. On April 20, 1920, we changed section 20 of the act with reference to bonds, but we did not change the 5-year optional period. I will read section 20 as the present law exists, and read what we propose to substitute for it. Section 20 reads:

SEC. 20. That bonds provided for in this act shall be issued in denominations of $40, $100, $500, $1,000, and such larger denominations as the Federal Farm Loan Board may authorize; they shall run for specified minimum and maximum periods, subject to payment and retirement, at the option of the land bank, at any time after five years from the date of their issue. They shall have interest coupons attached, payable semiannually, and shall be issued in series of not less than $50,000, the amount and terms to be fixed by the Federal Farm Loan Board. They shall bear a rate of interest not to exceed 5 per cent per annum.

Now, the language that we propose in the pending bill is the same, until it gets down to the question of the optional period, and it reads as follows:

Subject to payment and retirement, at the option of the land bank, at any time after the minimum period specified in the bonds, which shall not be longer than 10 years from the date of their issue.

In other words, under the present existing law, if the Farm Loan Board issues a 20-year farm loan bond, the investor who desires to buy that bond has no assurance he is buying a permanent investment—that is, a 20-year investment—because under the law there is an option of retirement at the end of five years. Now, that has had a tendency to depreciate the market value in some instances on farm loan bonds. Now, we propose in this act to make it possible for the board to fix the minimum option period 10 years instead of 5. While we give the right, if they want it, to have it 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, and up to 10, the latter is the maximum optional minimum period, and permits them to make it 10 years, and that is what we have intended to do in future years, namely, to have the 10-year optional retirement privilege.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. If a purchaser has at this time bonds of the Federal Farm Loan Board, when these new bonds are issued, with the preferred bonds, preferred because there is a longer callable period, do you not necessarily depreciate his existing bonds?

Mr. WINGO. Of course, theoretically you do.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. If you buy them and wanted to sell them, you would have to sell them in competition with this new bond of a preferred class, would you not?

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman in his mind the idea that anybody having these farm-loan bonds would be willing to sell them now?

Mr. WHITE of Maine. They would be hurt if they were to sell them for less than they paid for them.

Mr. WINGO. Yes. Let me tell the gentleman what the facts are: Bids were made on the market the day before the Supreme Court decision was announced in the case at 95, I believe, and no bonds sold for that. Yesterday 95¾, as I recall, was bid, and no bonds were sold. Anyone who has those bonds now who sells them for less than par ought to have a guardian appointed for him, because he does not know what property is worth.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Many of the bonds were bought at less than par.

Mr. WINGO. I can not follow the gentleman.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. You have a bond that you have paid for at par. It is callable in five years.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman must know that there is a distinction between these bonds and bonds issued under an ironclad, rigid rule, which a man has bought with his eyes wide open, for what they are worth. In this case you know that nobody, in fact, is going to suffer. Of course, theoretically, if you put out a more preferable bond, in theory it ought to bring a higher price than the other. But the fact is you can not buy farm-loan bonds on the market to-day. For illustration, to show that I know what I am talking about instead of guessing, I will say that a friend of mine to-day wanted to invest in those bonds, and he could not find them at par. They are gilt edge now, since decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WINGO. Let me finish this. It has been stressed that these bonds would be more attractive to investors if they were put at 10 years. The main purpose here is to so provide that the business of the board and the business of the banks can be handled in a more businesslike way. That can be done better if they are handled in 10-year periods than if they are handled in periods of five years. I do not think the situation is as serious as some think. They think they ought to make them as attractive as possible. I know they could issue more on the same terms as the bonds now outstanding, and they could sell them overnight. But with a minimum period fixed, they can make the financial arrangements and the sinking fund and other requirements for the 10-year period at less expense and with less trouble than for a 5-year period.

I shall take the liberty of inserting in the RECORD the decision of the Supreme Court holding the farm loan act constitutional.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Supreme Court of the United States. No. 199. October term, 1920. Charles E. Smith, appellant, v. Kansas City Title & Trust Co. et al., appellees. Appeal from the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Missouri.]

(Feb. 28, 1921.)

Mr. Justice Day delivered the opinion of the court.

A bill was filed in the United States District Court for the western division of the Western District of Missouri by a shareholder in the Kansas City Title & Trust Co. to enjoin the company, its officers, agents, and employees from investing the funds of the company in farm-loan bonds issued by Federal land banks or joint stock land banks under authority of the Federal farm loan act of July 17, 1916 (39 Stat., 360), as amended January 18, 1918 (40 Stat., 431).

The relief was sought on the ground that these acts were beyond the constitutional power of Congress. The bill avers that the board of directors of the company are about to invest its funds in the bonds to the amount of $10,000 in each of the classes described, and will do so unless enjoined by the court in this action. The bill avers the formation of 12 Federal land banks and 21 joint stock land banks under the provisions of the act.

As to the Federal land banks, it is averred that each of them has loaned upon farm lands large amounts secured by mortgage, and after depositing the same with the farm loan registrar has executed and issued collateral trust obligations called farm loan bonds, secured by the depositing of an equivalent amount of farm mortgages and notes; and that each of said Federal land banks has sold and is continuing to offer for sale large amounts of said farm loan bonds. The bill also avers that various persons in different parts of the United States have organized 21 joint-stock land banks, the capital stock of which is subscribed for and owned by private persons; that the joint-stock land banks have deposited notes and mortgages with the farm loan registrar, and issued an equivalent amount of collateral trust obligations called farm loan bonds, which have been sold and will be continued to be offered for sale to investors in large amounts in the markets of the country. A statement is given of the amount of deposits by the Secretary of the Treasury with the Federal land banks, for which the banks have issued their certificates of indebtedness bearing interest at 2 per cent per annum. It is averred that on September 30, 1919, Federal land banks owned United States bonds of the par value of $4,230,805; and the joint-stock land banks owned like bonds of the par value of $3,287,503 on August 31, 1919; that pursuant to the provisions of the act the Secretary of the Treasury has invested $8,892,130 of the public funds in the capital stock of the Federal land banks, and that on July 1, 1919, the Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the United States held $8,265,809 of the capital stock of the Federal land banks; that pursuant to the provisions of section 32 of the act, as amended, the Secretary of the Treasury has purchased farm loan bonds issued by the Federal land banks of the par value of $149,775,000; that up to September 30, 1919, bonds have been issued under the act by the Federal land banks to the amount of $285,600,000, of which about $135,000,000 are held in the Treasury of the United States, purchased under the authority of the amendment of January 19, 1918; that up to September 30, 1919, 27 joint-stock land banks have been incorporated under the act, having an aggregate capital of $8,000,000, all of which has been subscribed and $7,450,000 paid in; that bonds have been issued by joint-stock land banks to the amount of $41,000,000, which are now in the hands of the public; that the Secretary of the Treasury up to the time of the filing of the bill has not designated any of the Federal land banks nor the joint-stock land banks as depositaries of public money, nor except as stated later in the bill has he employed them or any of them as financial agents of the Government, nor have they or any of them performed any duties as depositaries of public money, nor have they or any of them accepted any deposits or engaged in any banking business. The bill avers that during the summer of 1918 the Federal land banks at Wichita, St. Paul, and Spokane were designated as financial agents of the Government for making seed-grain loans to farmers in drought-stricken sections, the President having at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture set aside $5,000,000 for that purpose out of the $100,000,000 war funds. The three banks mentioned made upward of 15,000 loans of that character, aggregating a sum upward of $4,500,000, and are now engaged in collecting these loans, all of which are secured by crop liens; that these banks act in that capacity without compensation, receiving only the actual expenses incurred.

Section 27 of the act provides that farm-loan bonds issued under the provisions of the act by Federal land banks or joint-stock land banks shall be a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds and may be accepted as security for all public deposits. The bill avers that the defendant trust company is authorized to buy, invest in, and sell Government, State, and municipal and other bonds, but it can not buy, invest in, or sell any such bonds, papers, stocks, or securities which are not authorized to be issued by a valid law or which are not investment securities, but that nevertheless it is about to invest in farm-loan bonds; that the trust company has been induced to direct its officers to make the investment by reason of its reliance upon the provisions of the farm loan acts, especially sections 21, 26, and 27, by which the farm-loan bonds are declared to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and as such with the income derived therefrom, are declared to be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, and are further declared to be lawful investments for all fiduciary and trust funds. The bill further avers that the acts by which it is attempted to authorize the bonds are wholly illegal, void, and unconstitutional and of no effect because unauthorized by the Constitution of the United States.

The bill prays that the acts of Congress authorizing the creation of the banks, especially sections 26 and 27 thereof, shall be adjudged and decreed to be unconstitutional, void, and of no effect, and that the issuance of the farm-loan bonds, and the taxation exemption feature thereof, shall be adjudged and decreed to be invalid.

The first joint-stock land bank of Chicago and the Federal land bank of Wichita, Kans., were allowed to intervene and became parties defendant to the suit. The Kansas City Title & Trust Co. filed a motion to dismiss in the nature of a general demurrer, and upon hearing the district court entered a decree dismissing the bill, from this decree appeal was taken to this court.

No objection is made to the Federal jurisdiction, either original or appellate, by the parties to this suit, but that question will be first examined. The company is authorized to invest its funds in legal securities only. The attack upon the proposed investment in the bonds described is because of the alleged unconstitutionality of the act of Congress undertaking to organize the banks and authorize the issue of the bonds. No other reason is set forth in the bill as a ground of objection to the proposed investment by the board of directors acting in the company's behalf. As diversity of citizenship is lacking, the jurisdiction of the district court depends upon whether the cause of action set forth arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States. (Judicial Code, sec. 24.)

The general rule is that where it appears from the bill or statement of the plaintiff that the right to relief depends upon the construction or application of the Constitution or laws of the United States, and that such Federal claim is not merely colorable, and rests upon a reasonable foundation, the district court has jurisdiction under this provision.

At an early date, considering the grant of constitutional power to confer jurisdiction upon the Federal courts, Chief Justice Marshall said:

"A case in law or equity consists of the right of the one party, as well as of the other, and may truly be said to arise under the Constitution or a law of the United States whenever its correct decision depends upon the construction of either" (Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. 264, 379); and again, when "the right or title set up by the party may be defeated by one construction of the Constitution or law of the United States, and sustained by the opposite construction." (Osborn v. Bank of the United States, 9 Wheat., 738, 822. These definitions were quoted and approved in Patton v. Brady, 184 U. S., 608, 611, citing Gold Washing Co. v. Keyes, 96 U. S., 199, 201; Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S., 257; White v. Greenhow, 114 U. S., 307; Railroad Co. v. Mississippi, 102 U. S., 135, 139.)

This characterization of a suit arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States has been followed in many decisions of this and other Federal courts. See Macon Grocery Co. v. Atlantic Coast Line (215 U. S., 501, 506, 507); Shulthis v. McDougal (225 U. S., 569, sec. 3). The principle was applied in Brushaber v. Union Pacific Co. (240 U. S., 1), in which a shareholder filed a bill to enjoin the defendant corporation from complying with the income-tax provisions of the tariff act of October 3, 1913. In that case, while there was diversity of citizenship, a direct appeal to this court was sustained because of the constitutional questions raised in the bill, which had been dismissed by the court below. The repugnancy of the statute to the Constitution of the United States, as well as grounds of equitable jurisdiction, were set forth in the bill, and the right to come here on direct appeal was sustained because of the averments based upon constitutional objections to the act. Reference was made to Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S., 429), where a similar shareholder's right to sue was maintained, and a direct appeal to this court from a decree of the circuit court was held to be authorized.

In the Brushaber case the Chief Justice, speaking for the court, said:

"The right to prevent the corporation from returning and paying the tax was based upon many averments as to the repugnancy of the statute to the Constitution of the United States, of the peculiar relation of the corporation to the stockholders and their particular interests resulting from many of the administrative provisions of the assailed act, of the confusion, wrong and multiplicity of suits, and the absence of all means of redress which would result if the corporation paid the tax and complied with the act in other respects without protest, as it was alleged it was its intention to do. To put out of the way a question of jurisdiction, we at once say that in view of these averments and the ruling in Pollock v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. (157 U. S., 429) sustaining the right of a stockholder to sue to restrain a corporation under proper averments from voluntarily paying a tax charged to be unconstitutional on the ground that to permit such a suit did not violate the prohibitions of section 3224, Revised Statutes, against enjoining the enforcement of taxes, we are of opinion that the contention here made that there was no jurisdiction of the cause since to entertain it would violate the provisions of the Revised Statutes referred to is without merit. * * *

"Aside from averments as to citizenship and residence, recitals as to the provisions of the statute and statements as to the business of the corporation contained in the first 10 paragraphs of the bill advanced to sustain jurisdiction, the bill alleged 21 constitutional objections, specified in that number of paragraphs or subdivisions. As all the grounds assert a violation of the Constitution, it follows that in a wide sense they all charge a repugnancy of the statute to the sixteenth amendment under the more immediate sanction of which the statute was adopted."

The jurisdiction of this court is to be determined upon the principles laid down in the cases referred to. In the instant case the averments of the bill show that the directors were proceeding to make the investments in view of the act authorizing the bonds about to be purchased, maintaining that the act authorizing them was constitutional and the bonds valid and desirable investments. The objecting shareholder avers in the bill that the securities were issued under an unconstitutional law, and hence of no validity. It is therefore apparent that the controversy concerns the constitutional validity of an act of Congress which is directly drawn in question. The decision depends upon the determination of this issue.

The general allegations as to the interest of the shareholder, and his right to have an injunction to prevent the purchase of the alleged unconstitutional securities by misapplication of the funds of the corporation, gives jurisdiction under the principles settled in Pollock v. Trust Co., and Brushaber v. Union Pacific Co., supra. We are therefore of the opinion that the district court had jurisdiction under the averments of the bill and that a direct appeal to this court upon constitutional grounds is authorized.

We come to examine the questions presented by the attack upon the constitutionality of the legislation in question. The Federal farm loan act is too lengthy to set out in full. It is entitled:

"An act to provide capital for agricultural development, to create standard forms of investment based upon farm mortgages, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes."

The administration of the act is placed under the direction and control of a Federal Farm Loan Bureau established at the seat of government in the Treasury Department, under the general supervision of the Federal Loan Board, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury and four members appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The United States is divided into 12 districts for the purpose of establishing Federal land banks. Each of the banks must have a subscribed capital of not less than $750,000, divided into shares of $5 each, which may be subscribed for by any individual, firm, or corporation, or by the government of any State or of the United States. No dividend shall be paid on the stock owned by the United States, but all other stock shall share in dividend distributions without preference. The Federal Farm Loan Board is to designate five directors who shall temporarily manage the affairs of each Federal land bank, and who shall prepare an organization certificate which, when approved by the Federal Farm Loan Board and filed with the Farm Loan Commissioner, shall operate to create the bank a body corporate. The Federal Farm Loan Board is required to open books of subscription for the capital stock of each Federal land bank, and if within 30 days thereafter any part of the minimum capitalization of $750,000 of any such bank shall remain unsubscribed, it is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe the balance on behalf of the United States.

The amendment of January 18, 1918, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase bonds issued by Federal land banks, and provides that the temporary organization of any such bank shall be continued so long as any farm loan bonds shall be held by the Treasury, and until the subscription to stock in such bank by national farm loan associations shall equal the amount of the stock held by the United States Government. When these conditions are complied with a permanent organization is to take over the management of the bank, consisting of a board of directors composed of nine members, three of whom shall be known as district directors and shall be appointed by the Farm Loan Board, who shall represent the public interest, six of whom to be known as local directors, shall be chosen by and be representative of the national farm loan associations.

Federal land banks are empowered to invest their funds in the purchase of qualified first mortgages on farm lands situated within the Federal land bank district within which they are organized or acting. Loans on farm mortgages are to be made to cooperative borrowers through the organization of corporations known as national farm loan associations, by persons desiring to borrow money on farm-mortgage security under the terms of the act. Ten or more natural persons who are the owners of or are about to become the owners of farm land qualified as security for mortgage loans, and who desire to borrow money on farm-mortgage security, may unite to form a national farm loan association. The manner of forming these associations and the qualifications for membership are set out in the act.

A loan desired by each such person must be for not more than $10,000 nor less than $100, and the aggregate of the desired loans not less than $20,000. The application for loan must be accompanied by subscriptions to stock of a Federal land bank equal to 5 per cent of the aggregate sum desired on the mortgage loan. Provision is made for appraisal of the land and report to the Federal Farm Loan Board. No persons but borrowers on farm loan mortgages shall be members or shareholders of national farm loan associations.

Shareholders in farm loan associations are made individually responsible for the debts of the association to the extent of the amount of the stock owned by them, respectively, in addition to the amount paid in and represented by their shares.

When any national farm loan association shall desire to secure for any member a loan on first mortgage from the Federal land bank in its district it must subscribe to the capital stock of the Federal land bank to an amount of 5 per cent of such loan, which capital stock shall be held by the Federal land bank as collateral security for the payment of the loan; the association shall be paid any dividends accruing and payable on the capital stock while it is outstanding. Such stock may, in the discretion of the directors and with the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, be paid off at par and retired, and shall be so retired upon the full payment of the mortgage loan. In such event the national farm loan association must pay off at par and retire the corresponding shares of its stock which were issued when the land bank stock so retired was issued; but it is further provided that the capital stock of the land bank shall not be reduced to less than 5 per cent of the principal of the outstanding farm loan bonds issued by it. The shares in national farm loan associations shall be of the par value of $5 each.

At least 25 per cent of that part of the capital of any Federal land bank for which stock is outstanding in the name of National Farm Loan Associations must be held in quick assets. Not less than 5 per cent of such capital must be invested in United States Government bonds.

The loans which Federal land banks may make upon first mortgages on farm lands are provided for in section 12 of the act. By section 13 these banks are empowered, subject to the provisions of the act, to issue and sell farm loan bonds of the kind described in the act and to invest funds in their possession in qualified first mortgages on farm lands, to receive and to deposit in trust with the farm loan registrar, to be held by him as collateral security for farm loan bonds, first mortgages upon farm lands, and, with the approval of the Farm Loan Board, to issue and to sell their bonds secured by the deposit of first mortgages on qualified farm lands as collateral, in conformity with the provisions of section 18 of the act. By the amendment of January 18, 1918, the Secretary of the Treasury was empowered during the years 1918 and 1919 to purchase farm loan bonds issued by Federal land banks to an amount not exceeding $100,000,000 each year, and any Federal land bank was authorized at any time to repurchase at par and accrued interest, for the purpose of redemption or resale, any of the bonds so purchased from it and held in the United States Treasury.

It is also provided that the bonds of any Federal land bank so purchased and held in the Treasury one year after the termination of the pending war shall, upon 30 days' notice from the Secretary of the Treasury, be redeemed and repurchased by such bank at par and accrued interest. By section 15 it is provided that whenever, after the act shall have been in effect for one year, it shall appear to the Federal Farm Loan Board that national farm loan associations have not been formed and are not likely to be formed in any locality because of peculiar local conditions, the board may, in its discretion, authorize Federal land banks to make loans on farm lands through agents approved by the board on the terms and conditions and subject to the restrictions prescribed in that section.

The act also authorizes the incorporation of joint-stock land banks, with capital provided by private subscription. They are organized by not less than 10 natural persons, and are subject to the requirements of the provisions of section 4 of the act so far as applicable. The board of directors shall consist of not less than five members. Each shareholder shall have the same voting privileges as the holders of shares in national banking associations, and shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such bank to the extent of the amount of stock owned by them at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount paid in and represented by their shares. The joint-stock land bank is authorized to do business when capital stock to the amount of $250,000 has been subscribed, and one-half paid in cash, the balance remaining subject to call by the board of directors, the charter to be issued by the Federal Farm Loan Board. No bonds shall be issued until the capital stock is entirely paid up. Except as otherwise provided, joint-stock land banks shall have the powers of and be subject to all the restrictions and conditions imposed on Federal land banks by the act, so far as such conditions or restrictions are applicable.

Federal land banks may issue farm loan bonds up to twenty times their capital and surplus. Joint-stock land banks are limited to the issue of farm loan bonds not in excess of fifteen times the amount of their capital and surplus. Joint-stock land banks can only loan on first mortgages upon land in the State where located, or in a State contiguous thereto. No loan on mortgage may be made by any bank at a rate exceeding 6 per cent per annum exclusive of amortization payments. Joint-stock land banks shall in no case charge a rate of interest on farm loans which shall exceed by more than 1 per cent the rate established by the last series of farm loan bonds issued by them, which rate shall not exceed 5 per cent per annum.

Provisions for the issue of farm loan bonds secured by first mortgages on farm lands or United States bonds, as collateral, which must be deposited with the Federal Farm Loan registrar, are made for Federal land banks and joint-stock land banks; in each case the issue is made subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board. The farm loan mortgages, or United States bonds, which constitute the collateral security for the bonds, must be deposited with the Farm Loan Commissioner.

Section 26 of the act provides as follows:

"That every Federal land bank and every national farm loan association, including the capital and reserve or surplus therein and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by said bank or association under the provisions of section 11 and section 13 of this act. First mortgages executed to Federal land banks or to joint-stock land banks and farm loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the Government of the United States, and as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation.

"Nothing herein shall prevent the shares in any joint-stock land bank from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares in assessing taxes imposed by authority of the State within which the bank is located, but such assessment and taxation shall be in manner and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in section 5219 of the Revised Statutes with reference to the shares of national banking associations.

"Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of Federal and joint-stock land banks and national farm loan associations from either State, county, or municipal taxes to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed."

Since the decision of the great cases of McCulloch v. Maryland (4 Wheat., 316) and Osborn v. Bank (9 Wheat., 738), it is no longer an open question that Congress may establish banks for national purposes, only a small part of the capital of which is held by the Government, and a majority of the ownership in which is represented by shares of capital stock private owned and held, the principal business of such banks being private banking conducted with the usual methods of such business. While the express power to create a bank or incorporate one is not found in the Constitution, the court, speaking by Chief Justice Marshall, in McCulloch v. Maryland, found authority so to do in the broad general powers conferred by the Constitution upon the Congress to levy and collect taxes, to borrow money, to regulate commerce, to pay the public debts, to declare and conduct war, to raise and support armies, and to provide and maintain a navy, etc. Congress, it was held, had authority to use such means as were deemed appropriate to exercise the great powers of the Government by virtue of Article I, section 8, clause 18 of the Constitution, granting to Congress the right to make all laws necessary and proper to make the grant effectual. In First National Bank v. Union Trust Co. (244 U. S., 416, 419), the Chief Justice, speaking for the court, after reviewing McCulloch v. Maryland and Osborn v. Bank, and considering the power given to Congress to pass laws to make the specific powers granted effectual, said:

"In terms it was pointed out that this broad authority was not stereotyped as of any particular time, but endured, thus furnishing a perpetual and living sanction to the legislative authority within the limits of a just discretion, enabling it to take into consideration the changing wants and demands of society and to adopt provisions appropriate to meet every situation which it was deemed required to be provided for."

That the formation of the bank was required, in the judgment of the Congress for the fiscal operations of the Government, was a principal consideration upon which Chief Justice Marshall rested the authority to create the bank; and for that purpose being an appropriate measure, in the judgment of the Congress, it was held not to be within the authority of the court to question the conclusion reached by the legislative branch of the Government.

Upon the authority of McCulloch v. Maryland and Osborn v. Bank the national banking system was established, and upon them this court has rested the constitutionality of the legislation establishing such banks. (Farmers & Mechanics National Bank v. Deering, 91 U. S. 29, 33, 34.)

Congress has seen fit in section 6 of the act to make both classes of banks, when designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, depositaries of public money, except receipts from customs, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and has authorized their employment as financial agents of the Government, and the banks are required to perform such reasonable duties, as depositaries of public moneys and financial agents as may be required of them. The Secretary of the Treasury shall require of the Federal land banks and the joint-stock land banks, thus designated, satisfactory security, by the deposit of United States bonds or otherwise, for the safekeeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with them, and for the faithful performance of their duties as the financial agents of the Government.

Section 6 also provides that no Government funds deposited under the provisions of the section shall be invested in mortgage loans or farm loan bonds.

It is said that the power to designate these banks as such depositaries has not been exercised by the Government, and that the Federal land banks have acted as Federal agents only in the case of loans of money for seed purposes made in the summer of 1918, to which we have already referred. But the existence of the power under the Constitution is not determined by the extent of the exercise of the authority conferred under it. Congress declared it necessary to create these fiscal agencies, and to make them authorized depositaries of public money. Its power to do so is no longer open to question.

But, it is urged, the attempt to create these Federal agencies, and to make these banks fiscal agents and public depositaries of the Government, is but a pretext. But nothing is better settled by the decisions of this court than that when Congress acts within the limits of its constitutional authority, it is not the province of the judicial branch of the Government to question its motives. (Venzie Bank v. Fenno, 8 Wall., 533, 541; McCray v. United States, 195 U. S., 27; Flint v. Stone-Tracy Co., 220 U. S., 107, 147, 153, 156, and cases cited.)

That Congress has seen fit to make of these banks fiscal agencies and depositaries of public moneys, and also to grant to them banking powers of a limited character, in no wise detracts from the authority of Congress to use them for the governmental purposes named, if it sees fit to do so. A bank may be organized with or without the authority to issue currency. It may be authorized to receive deposits in only a limited way. Speaking generally, a bank is a moneyed institution to facilitate the borrowing, lending, and caring for money. But whether technically banks, or not, these organizations may serve the governmental purposes declared by Congress in their creation. Furthermore, these institutions are organized to serve as a market for United States bonds. Not less than 5 per cent of the capital of the Federal land banks, for which stock is outstanding in farm loan associations, is required to be invested in United States bonds. Both kinds of banks are empowered to buy and sell United States bonds.

In First National Bank v. Trust Company (244 U. S., supra), this court sustained the power of Congress to enable a national bank to transact business which, by itself considered, might be beyond the power of Congress to authorize. In that case it was held to be within the authority of Congress to permit national banks to exercise, by permission of the Federal Reserve Board, when not in contravention of local law, the office of trustee, executor, administrator, or registrar of stocks or bonds.

We therefore conclude that the creation of these banks and the grant of authority to them to act for the Government as depositaries of public moneys and purchasers of Government bonds brings them within the creative power of Congress, although they may be intended, in connection with other privileges and duties, to facilitate the making of loans upon farm security at low rates of interest. This does not destroy the validity of these enactments any more than the general banking powers destroyed the authority of Congress to create the United States Bank, or the authority given to national banks to carry on additional activities destroyed the authority of Congress to create these institutions.

In the brief filed upon reargument counsel for the appellant seem to admit the power of Congress to appropriate money for the direct purposes named, and in that brief they say: "Tax exemption is the real issue sought to be settled here." Deciding, as we do, that these institutions have been created by Congress within the exercise of its legitimate authority, we think the power to make the securities here involved tax exempt necessarily follows. This principle was settled in McCulloch v. Maryland and Osborn v. Bank, supra.

That the Federal Government can, if it sees fit to do so, exempt such securities from taxation seems obvious upon the clearest principles. But it is said to be an invasion of State authority to extend the tax exemption so as to restrain the power of the State. Of a similar contention made in McCulloch v. Maryland Chief Justice Marshall uttered his often-quoted statement:

"That the power to tax involves the power to destroy; that the power to destroy may defeat and render useless the power to create; that there is a plain repugnance in conferring on one government a power to control the constitutional measures of another, which other, with respect to those very measures, is declared to be supreme over that which exerts the control, are propositions not to be denied." (4 Wheaton, 431.)

The same principle has been recognized in the National Bank cases declaring the power of the States to tax the property and franchises of national banks only to the extent authorized by the laws of Congress. Owensboro National Bank v. Owensboro (173 U. S., 664) involved the validity of a franchise tax in Kentucky on national banks. In that case this court declared (pp. 668, 669) that the States were wholly without power to levy any tax directly or indirectly upon national banks, their property, assets, or franchises, except so far as the permissive legislation of Congress allowed such taxation; and the court declared that the right granted to tax the real estate of such banks and the shares in the names of the shareholders constituted the extent of the permission given by Congress, and any tax beyond these was declared to be void.

In Farmers' Bank v. Minnesota (232 U. S., 516) this court held that a State may not tax bonds issued by the municipality of a Territory; that to tax such bonds as property in the hands of the holder is, in the last analysis, an imposition upon the right of a municipality to issue them.

The exercise of such taxing power by the States might be so used as to hamper and destroy the exercise of authority conferred by Congress, and this justifies the exemption. If the States can tax these bonds, they may destroy the means provided for obtaining the necessary funds for the future operation of the banks. With the wisdom and policy of this legislation we have nothing to do. Ours is only the function of ascertaining whether Congress, in the creation of the banks, and in exempting these securities from taxation—Federal and State—has acted within the limits of its constitutional authority. For the reasons stated we think the contention of the Government and of the appellees that these banks are constitutionally organized and the securities here involved legally exempted from taxation must be sustained.

It follows that the decree of the district court is affirmed.

Mr. Justice Brandeis took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Clerk Supreme Court, United States.

Mr. WINGO. Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois. If he does not wish to respond, I will reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker, and will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to do one thing, and one thing only.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. In just one minute.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is the gentleman in favor of the bill?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is the gentleman from Arkansas in favor of the bill?

Mr. WINGO. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is everybody else in favor of the bill?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then what on earth are we talking about? Why not vote?

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PHELAN. No; I will not yield to anybody.

I will tell the gentleman why I am talking. It is because two or three Members have asked me to talk and explain the bill, and some of the Members wanted to know what the bill was, and I will try to tell them.

When we put this farm loan act through, I, more than anybody else, was responsible for this five-year limitation. This was the situation: The mortgages are the security behind the bonds. The mortgages could be paid at any time within five years after they are due. In a new and untried system in which we had no experience I was not willing that bonds should be put out for a greater period of time than the possible length of the mortgages that were behind them. In other words, I did not want a situation to develop where farm-loan banks would have bonds out for 10 or 15 years and have the mortgages which were behind them paid in less time than that.

The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] was on the commission and argued as he did here to-night, and argued very well, that the rate would be better in the case of a long-time bond. I agreed with what he then said, and I agree with what he said to-night.

The thing I was afraid of, however, was that a number of new directors in a new system, men who had had no experience in this kind of work, might get the bank tied up in a position where there would be outstanding bonds on which they would have to pay interest, perhaps not sufficient mortgages outstanding and drawing interest with which to pay the bond interest. The European systems have almost uniformly made the length of the period of the mortgages and the minimum period of the bonds the same. The farm-loan system has now been running for some years. The Farm Loan Board inform us that they have bonds maturing frequently, so that they can safely have a longer minimum period. The act originally provided that there could not be a longer minimum period than 5 years. In other words, you could not have a bond that was not callable in 5 years. You could not have a bond outstanding that was callable in 6 or 8 years. Your bonds must all be callable in 5 years. They might, at the option of the bank, remain out for more than 5 years, but the bank must have the right to call them in 5 years. This bill provides that your bonds must be callable in 10 years. They might be callable in 8, 7, 6, or 5 years, but they can not be callable in 11, 12, or 13, or any period of years more than 10. That is all there is to the proposition.

Now, as to the market for the present bonds, it is the simplest matter in the world. It is a question of the kind of bargain that the banks can make. They ought to sell 10-year bonds on better terms than they sell 5-year bonds. They ought to get a little lower rate of interest on 10-year bonds than on 5-year bonds. If that is so as an ordinary proposition, and they can get a better rate of interest on a 10-year bond than they can on a 5-year bond, how is that going to affect the 5-year bonds that are outstanding? They sell the 10-year bond at a little lower rate. That is the only difference. Now, if it happens that these bonds which go out for 10 years sell at the same rate or a little higher rate than the 5-year bonds that are already outstanding, it is because the market is different. So that there is nothing at all to the argument which has been used that they are going to hurt the bonds already outstanding.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman contend that under this legislation the bonds must be called in 10 years?

Mr. PHELAN. No; they must be callable in 10 years. A bank issues a bond which the bank has the right to call in 10 years.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The question was taken, and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 2, 1921.

Hon. F. H. GILLETT,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I desire to tender my resignation as a member on the part of the House on the Joint Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies.

Respectfully, W. W. RUCKER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints in the place of Mr. RUCKER, Maj. STEDMAN, of North Carolina. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15943) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, had agreed to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate Nos. 10, 22, 34, 54, 106, and 113, had insisted upon its amendments Nos. 18, 23, 104, and 105, and had agreed to the further conference asked by the House, and had ordered that Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. NEW, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. MCKELLAR be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

BURIAL OF AN UNKNOWN AMERICAN SOLDIER.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass House joint resolution 426.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules and pass a joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read House joint resolution 426, providing for the bringing to the United States of the body of an unknown American, who was a member of the American Expeditionary Forces, who served in Europe and lost his life during the World War, and for the burial of the remains with appropriate ceremonies, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, under regulations to be prescribed by him, to cause to be brought to the United States the body of an American, who was a member of the American Expeditionary Forces who served in Europe, who lost his life during the World War and whose identity has not been established, for burial in the Memorial Amphitheater of the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va.

Such sum as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of the joint resolution is hereby authorized to be expended by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? If not, the question is on suspending the rules and passing the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the joint resolution was passed.

STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, take House joint resolution 346 from the Speaker's table, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GARD. I demand a second.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. GARD. I made the demand for a second in order that the gentleman might explain the difference between the bill as it passed the House and the Senate amendments.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, the only difference between the House bill and the Senate amendments is that they have added another reservation—the Cheyenne Reservation. It permits the extending of the time of payment to the Cheyenne Reservation in addition to the Standing Rock Reservation. The other amendments that are in the bill are to make the language of the bill conform to that added reservation.

The bill simply extends the time of payment one year on account of the crop conditions out in that country for the last year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The House passes this resolution extending the time for the payment of the purchase money on homestead entries in the Standing Rock Indian Reservation.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And the Senate puts in the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, an entirely different reservation?

Mr. SINCLAIR. It is.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Here is a case where the House passes a bill extending the time of payment in one reservation, and having got that through some one goes to the Senate and adds an amendment to insert another Indian reservation in connection with it. I have no doubt the gentleman from North Dakota is acting in good faith. Then a motion is made to suspend the rules, nobody has reported on it, and nobody knows anything about it except the gentleman, and I assume that he does.

Mr. SINCLAIR. A report was submitted by Senator SMOOT of the Public Lands Committee of the Senate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, they may know something about it in the Senate, but we know nothing about it in the House.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The Secretary of the Interior has reported on it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then why was it not reported in the House in the proper way? Why pass a bill through the House and then go to the Senate and insert another reservation without anybody knowing anything about it?

Mr. SINCLAIR. I am not responsible for what was done in the Senate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman is responsible for what he is trying to do in the House without any consideration by a committee of the House. It is an entirely different proposition and never has been considered in the House.

Mr. SINCLAIR. The matter has been done several times by the House in respect to other Indian reservations. The time of payment has been extended on several reservations.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know, and I have voted for many of them. I voted intelligently, or at least with some information. Here we are asked to vote for one reservation without any knowledge or information at all.

Of course, I know that there have been times when gentlemen have passed bills through the House and have then gone to the Senate and had something added to them, and have had them finally passed without any consideration by the House of what has been added in the Senate. I do not believe the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. SINCLAIR] is guilty of any bad faith to the House at all, but I do not think it is a very good way to do business.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that the conditions in the Cheyenne Reservation are very similar to the conditions in the Standing Rock Reservation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why did not the gentleman put it in his original proposition?

Mr. SINCLAIR. It was not called to my attention. It is in another State.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, that is it. Some Senator from another State said "I will let your bill pass if you will add something for my State," and it is now proposed to do that without any knowledge or information on the part of the House in respect to it. Is that the way we are doing business here?

Mr. SINCLAIR. The gentleman is drawing a wrong inference in that. I am here to speak only for my constituency, and my people asked me for this legislation and I brought it before the House. It passed the House in December without a dissenting vote.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; but the gentleman's present proposition did not. Is there no one in the House who is asking for the Cheyenne Indian Reservation proposition?

Mr. SINCLAIR. The gentleman from Illinois knows more about it than I do.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know anybody who is asking for it in the House. The gentleman proposes that we agree to a Senate amendment which is inserted and which he says he does not know anything about. If there is anybody in the House who does, I hope he will rise and come to the rescue.

Mr. FOSTER. Do we not know as much about this as we did about the post office in North Carolina?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the House joint resolution.

The question was taken; and in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the joint resolution was passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER, S. C.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10963) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Haileys Ferry, and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga., which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to J. J. Smith and J. E. McGee, both of Starr, S. C., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Savannah River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Haileys Ferry, and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "successors and".
Page 1, line 8, strike out the words "at or".
Amend the title.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River near Haileys Ferry, and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga."

RELIEVING ELECTORAL VOTE MESSENGERS.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of S. J. Res. 248, relieving and discharging from the fine imposed by law and authorizing the payment of messengers appointed by the electors of certain States to deliver the electoral vote of such States for President and Vice President, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas certain of the messengers appointed by the electors of certain States failed, through incorrect legal advice, to deliver to the President of the Senate the certified copy of the electoral vote of such States for President and Vice President; and

Whereas certain messengers, learning of this erroneous advice, delivered such certificates after January 24 and before the passage of this act: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That messengers who failed to appear should be relieved and discharged from the $1,000 fine for such neglect imposed and that the President of the Senate be directed to authorize the payment of such messengers as appeared before January 31, 1921.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how many of these messengers are asking to be relieved?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I object, if the gentleman can not explain.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate joint resolution 248, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to suspend the rules and pass Senate joint resolution 248, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk again reported the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain how many of these messengers there are, and why it was they did not come down?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. As I understand it there are three and possibly four. I am going to ask unanimous consent to amend the resolution by making it read "On or before January 31, 1921," so as to include the fourth man.

The old law used to provide that the electoral vote should be delivered here on or before the first Wednesday in February. That law is changed. It now requires that the vote shall be delivered here on or before the fourth Monday in January. The secretaries of states in four States, at least, operating under the old law issued certificates to the messengers providing that they should report and deliver the vote on or before the first Wednesday in February.

Mr. WINGO. What States?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The State of Indiana was one. [Laughter.] The State of Utah another, the State of Maryland, I think, the third, and I am just informed by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] that the State of Oregon is the fourth.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. TILSON. Is the gentleman's motion now in form so that it will take care of what he wishes to do? As I understand, the gentleman now wishes to amend by unanimous consent before this motion is voted upon. Had he not better secure that consent before we go ahead and consider this bill under suspension of the rules?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is what I am going to ask after this explanation.

Mr. McARTHUR. I want to say to the gentleman this resolution will have to be amended to include January 31, if he is going to take care of the Oregon man who did not get here until that day.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. On or before January 31.

Mr. McARTHUR. But the resolution says before January.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is the reason why I am asking unanimous consent to say on or before January 31.

Mr. TILSON. Had not the gentleman better do that at this time, because if somebody objects to it he may need to go over it again——

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am now asking that the bill may be so amended as to read "on or before January 31, 1921."

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman has had the suspension of the rules accorded him for a certain proposition embraced in the bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I do not know how it can be amended.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. WINGO. I think to save time the House will give unanimous consent.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. In order that there may be no question about this thing I wish to offer just this word of explanation. I know that so far as the messenger from the State of Indiana is concerned that he was absolutely without fault and was acting entirely upon the certificate given him by the secretary of state, and I wish to say this, further: He was an old soldier, fought through the Civil War, spent a year in driving the French out of Mexico, looked upon this as a crowning honor and found it to be a humiliation, and I expect these other gentlemen acting in the same good faith came with the certificate and within the time only to find that they, too, were to be humiliated.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I will.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Who gave this information? This law has been in force for many years. Has there been any trouble about this before?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know whether there has been or not. I know as far as the State of Indiana is concerned that the secretary of state so advised the messenger and issued the certificate accordingly, but the Vice President would not receive the electoral vote when it came here; only upon the condition that a new certificate should be had would he receive it, and the messenger was sent back to Indiana and got back here——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Most of these messengers this year were Republicans?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is impossible for me to believe they are more ignorant and less intelligent than the messengers four and eight years ago who were able to obey the law.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It might have been possible that the gentlemen whose duty it was to receive them were a little bit more critical than they were four years ago.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, that may be. I do not know.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Perhaps they had an old volume of the Statutes.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. McARTHUR. I want to say in regard to the messenger from my State that he applied to the Secretary of State to know if it would be all right for him to get here on the first Monday in February.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for a suspension of the rules and the passage of Senate resolution 248, with an amendment on page 2, line 3, by adding before the word "before" the words "on or."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to amend the resolution in the manner in which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Would it not be better parliamentary practice for the gentleman to submit and have reread the proposition which he now offers under the suspension of the rules, rather than to have the amendment by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would save time. The Chair thinks if it were done by unanimous consent it would have to be read over again. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, insert before the word "before" the words "on or."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the resolution as amended.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the joint resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER, NEAR SAVANNAH, GA.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10883) authorizing the counties of Beaufort, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Savannah, Ga.

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Beaufort, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Savannah River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Savannah, Ga., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

COMMEMORATION COIN—ADMISSION OF MISSOURI INTO UNION.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 4893.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4893) to authorize the coinage of a 50-cent piece in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Missouri into the Union.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is the resolution similar in terms to that passed at the last Congress in reference to Massachusetts?

Mr. VESTAL. In the same language.

Mr. GARD. And with the same governmental safeguards?

Mr. VESTAL. The same safeguards.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Missouri into the Union there shall be coined at the mints of the United States 50-cent pieces to the number of 250,000, such 50-cent pieces to be of the standard troy weight, composition, diameter, device, and design as shall be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, which said 50-cent pieces shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value.

SEC. 2. That all laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for security of the coin, or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized: Provided, That the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VESTAL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CRADOCK, VA.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill 4924.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill 4924. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4924) to retrocede to the State of Virginia exclusive jurisdiction heretofore acquired by the United States of America over the property and persons of the town site or territory known as United States Housing Corporation Project 150A, located in Norfolk County, State of Virginia, and called Cradock.

Be it enacted, etc., That the exclusive jurisdiction heretofore acquired over the said town site or territory known as United States Housing Corporation Project 150A and called Cradock, and located in the county of Norfolk, State of Virginia, be, and the same is hereby, retroceded to the State of Virginia.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BLACK. I demand a second.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is the gentleman from Texas opposed to the bill?

Mr. BLACK. I am not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ELLIOTT] asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is a bill to retrocede to the State of Virginia jurisdiction over a tract of land down in Cradock, Norfolk County, Va. During the World War the Housing Corporation built quite an extensive city there and the State of Virginia ceded to the United States Government jurisdiction over this property.

Now, that the war is over, the Government has sold to different individuals all of the houses in that town, and the Government owns at this time the public utility plants that it built there for its own use. There is a town or city without a city government, and it can have no city government until the State of Virginia acquires jurisdiction over this land, so that the town can be incorporated under the laws of the State of Virginia. When the retrocession is made the town can be incorporated and its citizens can levy taxes upon themselves, and they can buy these public utilities that the Government owns that have been left over from the war.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Suppose this bill passes, and the jurisdiction is conferred on the State of Virginia, what becomes of the title of the United States Government to these utilities?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The titles to the utilities remain with the United States until the United States conveys them over. The United States has already deeded the land. This is governmental jurisdiction that it is ceding back.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND] represents the district in which this is located, and is looking after the interests of the people there; and I yield five minutes to him.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can add anything to what has already been said by the gentleman from Indiana. So far as the utilities are concerned, I would say that the Government still owns them. Cradock is an orphan child of the Housing Corporation, absolutely without any local government. The Government has disposed of its property to private individuals, but still holds jurisdiction over it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLAND. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. If the Government has ceded its title to private individuals, why is it necessary to have a government there?

Mr. HOLLAND. Because the United States still has jurisdiction over this property. The State of Virginia ceded jurisdiction to the United States Government.

Mr. BLACK. And it is now necessary, notwithstanding the conveyance of title to these private individuals, that this governmental authority be conferred?

Mr. HOLLAND. The United States district court of Virginia has held that it is essential that jurisdiction shall be ceded back to the State of Virginia before they can organize any local government. There is no legal entity with which any contract for light, or water, or anything else can be made. As soon as jurisdiction is ceded back these people can organize under the State laws.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to consume any time on the particular bill in question, but I have a letter from the Postmaster General that I would like to have read in my time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read it.

Mr. WALSH. What is it about? Is it about this bill?

Mr. BLACK. It is not about this bill. But I have been asked to make it public. It contains certain information about postal robberies that is pertinent at this time. If anybody objects to it as being out of order, all right.

Mr. KING. Has the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC] objected?

Mr. MCCLINTIC. I have not. The gentleman asked to have this read in his own time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 28, 1921.

Hon. EUGENE BLACK,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLACK: I thank you for the opportunity to glance at the newspaper clippings relating to accidents in the air mail service and the robberies of the mails which have recently taken place.

We all recognize that the air mail is a pioneer service and that, in the nature of things, accidents will occur. Some people, with small intellect, never seem able to grasp the point made in the couplet:

"Mother, may I go out to swim;
"Yes, yes, you may, my daughter;
"Hang your clothes on a hickory limb
"But don't go near the water."

Of course, I am indifferent to contemptible insinuations directed against the Postal Establishment by such newspapers as the New York Herald. Every person whose good opinion is worth while knows that base and unconscionable partisanship is the animus of attacks made by such newspapers.

Intelligent people know the causes underlying the crime wave which has recently swept over the country, finding its most acute expressions on Broadway and Fifth Avenue, New York. The unusual number of mail robberies at this period are mere incidents of the nation-wide and, in fact, the world-wide, wave of crime. A condition of great unrest exists everywhere, manifesting itself in disregard of personal and property rights, accompanied by attacks upon the foundation of government itself. How could the safety of the mails fail to be affected by such conditions?

An important factor making for the development of crime in the United States is the disposition on the part of certain judicial officers, notably in New York City, Washington, and Chicago, to impose nominal punishments when criminals are apprehended. It frequently happens that a day's confinement in jail is given upon a plea of guilty for theft from the mails, and it also often occurs that judges of bolshevistic tendencies, who from motives of policy had theretofore managed to conceal such feelings, find occasion for expressing sympathy for the criminal or make excuses for the crime committed.

A criminal instinct or predisposition is the basic cause of bolshevistic tendencies, and this applies to those in judicial place as well as to others.

Furthermore, the enactment of laws which are unsupported by public opinion, and for this reason unenforceable, provoke frequent and widespread breaches of such laws, thus engendering in the public mind disrespect for all laws and encouraging those who have criminal inclinations to law violation.

Another encouragement to crime commission is the mendacious and salacious policy pursued by a commercialized press. Newspapers, with of course some exceptions, not only spread before helpless readers day after day extended accounts, in utmost detail, of murders, robberies, divorces, and crimes of all sorts, but when law violators are apprehended and arrested they often treat in a maudlin, sentimental way, always characterized by the most yellow sensationalism, the crime committed, the criminal, and the various members of his family. This frequently results in eliciting the well-meaning but misdirected sympathy of a lot of sentimental reformers or self-constituted reform organizations, which have interfered with law enforcement until it has reached a point where criminals no longer fear the penalties of law violation. This, of course, through the power of suggestion, encourages others to like crimes. Such newspapers have not only become a menace to society but are becoming a danger to government itself.

This may not be palatable reading, but it is God's virgin truth, and I have hoped that the time would come when some one would have the courage to speak out in meeting.

The efficiency of the Post Office inspection force is such that no one will question the assertion that a larger percentage of those committing crimes against the United States mails are apprehended than in any other class of crimes committed.

These are the only comments I desire to make upon the clippings.

Again thanking you, I am,

Sincerely, yours, A. S. BURLESON.

During the reading,

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I object to the further reading.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks consent has been given.

Mr. KING. It is not addressed to the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. That is very true, but the gentleman should have objected when consent was asked.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman said that it would take only five minutes.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the letter.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House suspend the rules and pass the bill?

The question being taken, and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I submit a conference report on the Army appropriation bill (H. R. 15043) for printing under the rule, for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1885, as amended by the act of July 9, 1918 (40 Stat., p. 880), be, and the same hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"First. When such private property so lost, damaged, or destroyed was shipped on board an unseaworthy vessel by order of an officer authorized to give such order or direct such shipment.

"Third. When during travel under orders such private property, including the regulating allowance of baggage, transferred by a common carrier, or otherwise transported by the proper agent or agency of the United States Government, is lost, damaged, or destroyed; but replacement, recoupment, or commutation in these circumstances, where the property was or shall be transported by a common carrier, shall be limited to the extent of such loss, damage, or destruction over and above the amount recoverable from said carrier.

That except as to such property as by law or regulation is required to be possessed and used by officers, enlisted men, and members of the Army Nurse Corps (female), respectively, the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to damage to or loss of such sums of money or such articles of personal property as the Secretary of War shall decide or declare to be reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper for officers, enlisted men, or members of the Army Nurse Corps (female), respectively, as the case may be, to have in their possession while in quarters, or in the field, engaged in the public service in the line of duty.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain, and determine the value of such property lost, destroyed, captured, or abandoned as specified in the foregoing paragraphs, or the amount of damage thereto, as the case may be; and the amount of such value or damage so ascertained and determined shall be paid by disbursing officers of the Army, or such property lost, destroyed, captured, or abandoned, or so damaged as to be unfit for service, may be replaced in kind from Government property on hand when the Secretary of War shall so direct.

"SEC. 4. That the tender of replacement or of commutation or the determination made by the Secretary of War upon a claim presented, as provided for in the foregoing section, shall constitute a final determination of any claim cognizable under this chapter, and such claim shall not thereafter be reopened or considered.

"SEC. 5. That no claim arising under this act shall be considered unless made within two years from the time that it accrued, except that when a claim accrues in time of war, or when war intervenes within two years after its accrual, such claim may be presented within two years after peace is established.

"SEC. 6. That for the payment of claims arising and established under this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000.

"SEC. 7. That so much of the act of March 28, 1918 (40 Stats., pp. 479, 480), as makes provision for the presentation, adjustment, and payment of claims of officers and enlisted men for loss of private property destroyed in the military service be, and the same hereby is, repealed."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. GARD. I demand a second.

Mr. CRAGO. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order that a quorum of the House is not present.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 3, 1921.

(Legislative day of Wednesday, March 2, 1921.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The VICE PRESIDENT announced his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 15812) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. H. Overhue, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4924) to retrocede to the State of Virginia exclusive jurisdiction heretofore acquired by the United States of America over the property and persons of the town site or territory known as United States Housing Corporation project 150A, located in Norfolk County, State of Virginia, and called Cradock.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 10883. An act authorizing the counties of Beaufort, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Savannah, Ga.;

H. R. 10963. An act granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River near Haileys Ferry, and between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga.;

H. J. Res. 426. Joint resolution providing for the bringing to the United States of the body of an unknown American, who was a member of the American Expeditionary Forces, who served in Europe and lost his life during the World War, and for the burial of the remains with appropriate ceremonies; and

H. J. Res. 480. Joint resolution making appropriation to pay the widow of Champ Clark.

The message further announced that the House had passed, with an amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 248) relieving and discharging from the fine imposed by law and authorizing the payment of messengers appointed by the electors of certain States to deliver the electoral vote of such States for President and Vice President, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it is about 24 hours until, according to the Constitution of the United States, this session of Congress will end. From the experience that we have had in the attempt to pass the naval appropriation bill during the last four days, it is perfectly evident that it is utterly impossible to enact the bill into law at the present session of Congress. That being the case, I do not feel like assuming the responsibility of holding the time of the Senate to keep the bill under consideration, as a mere mummery of legislation, which can not result in any positive law, thereby preventing the consideration of a great many important and vital measures which are pending in the Senate and ready for senatorial action. I regret very much that already we have interfered with some of those measures. I think during the effort to get consideration of the naval appropriation bill we have caused a delay of three or four hours in the great, vital, national measure of a bridge across the Peedee Creek—or something like that—in South Carolina. I do not desire to stand in the way of measures of that kind.

Of course, there are a number of circumstances which have brought about a failure of the naval appropriation bill. The chief of them, I am perfectly frank to say, was the late date at which it was received from the House of Representatives. It was not received from the House of Representatives until February 15. As it came from the House of Representatives, the bill was in such form that, if it had been enacted into law, it would have led to the demoralization of the American Navy and to a paralysis of the great organization which has been undertaken and in progress successfully under the new plan of naval development which has grown out of the preparedness which was forced upon this country by the great European war.

The bill as it came from the House, leaving out of consideration certain fixed charges and considering those items which are appropriated for the maintenance and operation of the fighting force of the Navy, contained an amount approximately double that which was carried by the naval appropriation bill of 1916. Since 1916 the pay of American sailors has been doubled, the cost of rations for the Navy has been increased twofold, the wages of civilian employees are double what they were in 1916, the cost of material for the construction of ships and the other necessary work which enters into the Naval Establishment is twice what it was in 1916, so that if the bill had been passed by the Senate in that form it would have provided only for the maintenance in 1921, with all the military development of the world since 1916, for a 1916 Navy.

The bill as it came from the House contained no appropriation for aircraft. Great Britain is estimating and appropriating in her great aviation establishment for the current year 125,000,000 pounds sterling. The naval bill as it came from the House carried not a dollar for new aircraft or the construction or procurement of new aircraft. All the great naval powers in the world are providing the necessary accessories of naval aviation service, such as ships called airplane carriers, upon which airplanes are carried to the vicinity of the scene of action. The House bill provided nothing whatever for the construction of such ships, although at the present time we have none at all except one or two obsolete converted vessels used as a makeshift for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington is making an important statement. I should like to hear it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. So anxious was the Senate committee to promote the enactment of legislation upon the subject of the Navy, which it regarded as of more critical importance now than the question of naval power has been to the United States for several years past, that, although the House bill only provided for half speed in carrying out the program of naval construction in the appropriations which it made for that purpose, the Senate committee recommended no increase in that amount of $90,000,000 for the construction of the great capital ships and other vessels composing the 1916 program, which embraces the improvements and the developments in scientific progress which the intervening years have brought forth as the basis of the American naval program.

So it was necessary that the Senate should make certain amendments to the bill. It involved a great deal of labor, and no time was lost by the committee in making the necessary studies from the best evidence that was possibly obtainable, from the best naval authorities in the United States, the equals of those, we believe, of any in the world, and in revising the bill, which purported to be sufficient for the maintenance of a navy of 100,000 men, but which, we were advised by the Navy Department, actually carried appropriations only sufficient for 80,000 men, so that it would meet the exigencies of the time and be adequate for the year 1921 instead of embodying obsolete provisions which were only deemed sufficient for 1916.

By proceeding each day and every hour which physical endurance and the necessities and exigencies of such proceedings allowed we were able to report the bill to the Senate on the 25th day of February.

We were somewhat embarrassed by the fact that the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee was unfortunately ill and not able to assume the responsibilities of the place, but request was made in the Senate on Saturday last for consideration of the measure. From that time to this it has been attacked in the air—very largely in the air—on the surface, and to a considerable extent under the surface; but, notwithstanding those attacks, wherever through the difficulties of the interruptions and of the loving embraces of its friends and the open attacks of its enemies, it was able to come to an issue, it was supported by the Senate. There is not any question that the overwhelming sentiment of the Senate is in favor of adequate naval program based upon the practical developments of the world, not for a cessation of naval defenses upon the theory of those who believe that at some future time a different mode of naval warfare may be invented.

On Saturday night when we attempted to gain consideration for the bill, much to our surprise we were met by objections from those who are supposed to be friends of the bill that there was not a quorum present. It being impossible to obtain a quorum at that time, we lost practically a day in the consideration of the bill; but, notwithstanding that, if those who say that their only desire is to obtain a real consideration of the questions that are involved in the bill had allowed us to proceed with the consideration of the several features of the bill they all could have been examined with minute care; all the information that is capable of being developed by debate in the Senate could have been had; the bill could have been passed and could have become a law at this session of Congress.

However, it is said that the bill may pass at the next session of Congress. I do not know why that statement is made. It may; I can not look into the future and see what may happen. I do not know but that the situation in the next Congress may be the same as it is in this. There has been the same opportunity in this session of Congress to enact this bill that there will be in the closing days of the next session of Congress.

If we have a new set of witnesses who say that this great program should be suspended because they have heard somebody say or some newspaper writer has written an editorial that battleships are obsolete, and that before very long somebody is going to invent some way of destroying them, the naval bill may be defeated at that session. Whether it will be or not, it is the duty of this session of Congress to meet the responsibilities which devolve upon it, and not to pass them on to some future Congress which is called upon for the consideration of other matters of emergency of a different character and which are regarded as of sufficiently vital importance to occupy the time and the attention of the special session of Congress, instead of having it occupied, as it must necessarily be, by the consideration of appropriation bills which should have been passed at this session if there had been a sincere effort on the part of the friends and of the opponents of the bill to settle these questions by open and fair debate and to allow a decision in the great jury of the Senate.

I know how eager a number of Senators upon this side of the Chamber and some Senators upon the other side are to have an opportunity to go on record here in the Senate on the coal control bill; I know how they are chafing in the collar in their anxiety to make a record to the world of what their attitude is upon the soldiers' bonus bill; and I think that we ought to get out of the way and allow them to consider those bills and to make a record of their attitude upon those great measures, so long as it is impossible that any actual result could come from the further consideration of the pending measure.

I have been informed, Mr. President, by a Senator that when the motion was made to take up the naval bill for consideration he voted against it; that he was really in favor of the bill, but that he was advised by a leading Senator upon this side of the Chamber that it was not desired to pass it; and so he voted against it. That is an example of the nature of attacks to which the bill has been subjected.

Of course, under such circumstances it would have been impossible to enact it into law.

If we cease the mere occupying of time, which can not result in any practical benefit to the country, in connection with the consideration of this bill, it will give the Senate an opportunity to devote its attention during the remaining day and a half of the session to the consideration of the appropriation of $10,000,000 from the American Treasury for the muscles of Muscle Shoals; it will give an opportunity to the Senator from Alabama, who said last night that to-day he would take the opportunity of doing so, to explain to the Senate and to the American people why it is that he is willing to defeat finally the great sundry civil appropriation bill, containing appropriations for the maimed and sick soldiers of the World War, unless, perforce, there is attached to it an appropriation of $10,000,000 from the Treasury of the United States to be sunk into the Muscle Shoals Government project.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield in a few moments to the Senator. I can not yield just now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to hear what the Senator says. I was diverted when he commenced his discussion. Of course, I will answer the Senator in my own time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I was talking to another Senator when the Senator started, and I should like to hear what he says.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that I noticed the Senator was not paying attention when I first referred to the subject, but I thought he heard the substance of what I said. I will repeat it in just a few words.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish the Senator would, because I want to hear it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I said that, inasmuch as the naval appropriation bill can not be enacted into law, for, even if we should proceed with the bill now and endeavor to pass it, it could not go through conference and be enrolled and be enacted into law, we ought not to allow it to occupy the time of the Senate to the exclusion of the great project for getting $10,000,000 for the muscles of Muscle Shoals. I also referred to the remark of the Senator from Alabama to the effect that—I think he said on to-day—he would take occasion to explain and make known to the world why it is that the sundry civil appropriation bill is being held up, although it contains appropriations for the hospitalization of the sick and wounded soldiers of the great World War. I hope the opportunity will be given also to the Senator from Alabama to explain to those soldiers and to their families why it is that he insists that the sundry civil bill shall be defeated—I understand his attitude is, although I may be mistaken about it——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is certainly not my attitude.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me complete the sentence—that the sundry civil bill shall be defeated unless it contains an appropriation of $10,000,000 from the Public Treasury for Muscle Shoals, even though it should result in the defeat of the appropriations the bill contains for necessary hospitals for American soldiers. I say that he can explain that, and he can explain also to the families of those soldiers why he takes advantage of the necessities of the victims of national unpreparedness and of those who have paid the price with the loss of their limbs and their health of the poltroonery of an American administration which announced to the world that it was too proud to fight in order to avenge the murder of American citizens. I say that the Senator from Alabama will have an opportunity to do that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly, as soon as the Senator concludes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And also to explain why it is that, in addition to his proposal why that bill shall be defeated if it does not contain the Muscle Shoals appropriation, thereby depriving the country of the needed facilities for the proper care of the soldiers, that he proposes to tax them their proportionate share of taxes for the $10,000,000 to develop a project on the Tennessee River.

Mr. President, during the consideration of this bill we have had a repetition of a great many arguments that have been familiar for many years. I did not suppose that we would have repeated here the argument—of course, it appeals to the pride of American citizenship—that the American boy, callow, practically untrained, is equal to the trained, veteran sailors of a foreign country if we have a little superior number.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, since the Senator has referred to the statement I made, does the Senator claim that the Navy to-day is composed of callow, untrained boys? If he does, I think we ought to know it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am speaking of what the Senator said. Many of them are callow, untrained boys; many of them are in training camps; but that is not the question. I was referring to the remark that the Senator from Wisconsin made.

We have listened to the most eloquent presentation of proposals for a limitation of armaments, and the Senate adopted an amendment to the naval appropriation bill containing practically the identical language which had been advocated by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], on which he has conducted a great campaign, and which he has given evidence that he regards as of paramount importance to this country and to the world; and yet we witness, after it has been adopted, his continued opposition to the bill which was the vehicle and the only vehicle by which it could be enacted into law.

I listened with the utmost interest and admiration to the masterly argument of the Senator from Idaho, giving the reasons why France could not agree to go into a conference for the limitation of land forces so long as her national existence and independence depended upon the maintenance of her Army, and the justification by the Senator from Idaho of France's position in that regard, using that as an argument why we should exclude France from such a conference, and that we should invite a naval conference between Japan, Great Britain, and the United States for the purpose of a limitation of sea power. Every word that the Senator from Idaho said with such telling effect as to the justification of France for the position which she takes in regard to her Army can be used against the argument which he makes in his expectation that Great Britain will agree to reduce her Navy, because the position of Great Britain on the sea, her dependence upon her navy, is identical with the position of France upon the land and her dependence upon her army.

I heard the Senator describe in great detail the refusal of France even to entertain the question of a limitation of her land forces in an argument for modifying our naval program upon the expectation that Great Britain would agree to a limitation of her sea forces, for the Senator from Idaho said that he believed if such a limitation could not be brought about, and there was to be a dependence upon power at sea, if any nation was to dominate the seas of the world, that nation should be the United States of America. The only way in which that result could be accomplished would be for Great Britain to proceed to reduce her fleet and her sea power by 50 per cent; and notwithstanding the fact that the Senator excluded France from the possibility of such an agreement, because she had already announced that she would not consider a reduction of her army, he said nothing to the Senate about the fact that Great Britain had made a similar announcement in regard to her navy, and that when it was proposed at the peace conference in Paris that there should be a limitation of the armaments of the world Great Britain agreed to it upon the condition that it should not include consideration of the reduction of the British Navy, because the vitals of the British Empire depended upon its maintenance.

Mr. President, there has been a great deal of talk here about the fact that Great Britain has ceased to construct battleships, and it has been reiterated so often that the impression inevitably must have spread from it that Great Britain had abandoned her dependence upon her battleships. We have had that statement from a number of Senators on repeated occasions, but they fail to state in connection with their statement that Great Britain was not building additional capital ships; that Great Britain to-day has more than double the number of capital ships of any other naval power in the world. They fail to state that notwithstanding the alleged limitation of the naval power of Great Britain, she still maintains the so-called two-power status of her navy, and that to-day the British Navy is greater in power in all the branches of its service than any other two navies in the world. That being the case, she can well afford to suspend the construction of capital ships, due to the fact that she has more than twice as many as any other power in the world has. They fail to state that when this program is completed, even though the United States should be unable to carry out the plans of 1916, Great Britain would still be at least the equal of the United States even as to capital ships, even as to battleships; that she would have 6 battle cruisers to our 6—Japan would have 12, I may say, incidentally, to our 6—Great Britain would have 73 swift scout cruisers to 13 of the United States, and 35 submarine cruisers or fleet submarines to 12 of the United States.

So certainly it is perfectly evident that Great Britain has not ceased her reliance upon her sea power and that any impression which may go abroad from the reiteration of the statement that she has made no appropriations for naval construction is misleading if it leads to the conclusion that she is not still determined to maintain the same naval policy which has been the basis of her empire in the past.

Mr. President, conditions to-day are more critical than they have been in the world for two or three years—at any time since the immediate close of the great European war. I have read some information in the course of this debate in regard to the proceedings which are taking place in other countries which have rival interests and serious disputes with the United States; and yet the objection is made, and made so successfully that we have not even been able to secure consideration for an appropriation bill for meeting the emergency by the appropriation of an amount equal to that that we appropriated last year, more than $100,000,000 less than we appropriated the year before that, and more than $100,000,000 less than we appropriated the preceding year.

Last year's appropriation bill, together with the deficiency appropriation, amounted to $496,243,000.

In 1919 we appropriated $636,383,894.

In 1920 we appropriated $616,096,838.

And there was no strenuous objection to it, no great issue raised. It continued the same program and brought us into the middle of its completion, where it is perfectly useless unless it is carried still further forward, which the pending appropriation bill is intended to supply; and yet this year, in a much more critical situation of the naval affairs and relations of the United States, we are unable to secure consideration for a bill carrying a much smaller amount of money, more than $100,000,000 less.

During the debate we were edified by a great many arguments in favor of substituting brotherly love, good will, and a dependence upon the good nature of the world for military power; and it is a most appealing argument. The distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] said, in substance, that for the same reason that gentlemen in Oklahoma had quit carrying six-shooters the United States ought to quit depending upon its Navy. The trouble about that is that he overlooks the fact that the only reason why he does not have to carry a six-shooter is because the policeman carries it for him. The Senator from Oklahoma and those who believe in his pacifist policy would not tolerate for one instant the abandonment of police protection for himself and for his family. He would not tolerate for a single hour the removal of that security of this city or of his home city in Oklahoma, where he lives, which comes from the armed power of organized society which lies back of the law, which alone makes life tolerable and insures that liberty which is the chief object of the establishment of this Government.

Yet, while he would not tolerate the abandonment of protection for his own municipality, he argues upon the floor of the United States Senate that those immeasurably greater and more vital interests of the Nation should abandon the same sort of protection of organized force, which he himself claimed as a necessary adjunct of his relations as an individual to the community in which he lives.

Mr. President, if we adopted the policy which the Senator and those who agree with him advocate, and should apply it, to say nothing of the Nation, to even one city, notwithstanding the sanction and the restraint of religion, not a night would pass in the best-governed city of the land when the gutters would not run red with blood as a result of lawless force.

Yet we are asked, when there is at stake the greatest heritage of the age—the enlightened liberty and order, under the law, of the American people—that we should abandon that self-reliance on the strong right arm of their military force and rest upon the assumption that the good will of foreign Governments will not permit them to trespass upon our rights.

Mr. President, the opponents of this bill are willing to take the chance of some future Congress enacting a naval bill. I hope it may, and I sincerely trust that that hope may come to a better realization than the same hope and the same expectation which had been entertained in regard to this Congress.

We are told that we do not need these battleships, because some Senators think that we do not need them. They asked to be allowed to call certain witnesses and ask them if we did not need them, and every witness called who testified said that we needed the battleships. Somebody read a newspaper article saying that battleships are obsolete, and tried to create the impression that Great Britain has abandoned her reliance upon battleships, because some Senator has evolved, in the development of his military ability, a new species of naval warfare; and I am referring very largely to the argument along that line made by the Senator from Utah, ignoring the fact that the Government of Great Britain, which is the only authorized spokesman for the British Empire upon this subject, has officially announced that it still depends upon battleships as the backbone of the British Navy.

If the Government of Great Britain says that, why do Senators, because they have received an article from some writer upon the subject who occupies no responsible position, say that the policy of Great Britain is different? The First Lord of the Admiralty, in his enunciation of his naval program, the last expression upon the subject, has emphasized the fact that no experience or development of the late war justified the British nation in abandoning its previous policy in regard to battleships.

A part of this controversy was started on that subject and resulted in the delay, and in the now manifest defeat of the bill, because I take the responsibility of saying that while I would like to see this bill pass in the Senate, in my judgment, if it should pass, even in the quickest time that is possible, it would be impossible before 12 o'clock to-morrow to secure its passage through conference and through the House of Representatives. It could have been done if we had passed it yesterday evening, or had passed it last night, and had gone to work last night immediately in conference; possibly it could have been enacted into law, but it can not be done now.

This result is partially due to the fact that men with no responsibility in naval affairs, and after only a casual investigation of the subject, dispute the practice of the greatest naval nations in the world—Japan and Great Britain, for instance—and the General Navy Board of the United States as to the type of ships which we should have. They want to abandon the practice and the authority of the naval powers of the world and to establish in their place a new system, based upon the theory of amateur warriors, not as to what has actually been developed, but as to what they wish and hope will be the case at some indefinite time in the future, if somebody smart enough comes along and invents a different weapon.

Mr. President, they say we should have submarines and airships. Of course we should. One of the purposes of the amendments of the Senate to the House bill is to provide those things. But, Mr. President, if I may refer for a moment, not to a theory, but to actual events, battleships sail with safety through fleets of submarines, when the battleships are defended by destroyers and swift cruisers. There were no ships to speak of in the great World War sunk by submarines, notwithstanding the number of hulks that lie at the bottom of the sea as the victims of torpedoes, except slow-going merchant ships. Submarines are not a menace to swift vessels of war. The American battle fleet, surrounded by the destroyers which it has and the swift cruisers which it ought to have and which it has not, could sail harmless through any fleet of submarines which could be brought against it.

Admiral von Scheer, when the fate of the German Empire was hanging upon a slender thread, and the world was looking with eager interest to see what the great modern fleet of Germany would do to affect the result of that war, sent out his airships to locate and attack the British fleet five days before the battle of Jutland, and they could not locate it, and they were unable to attack it. He sent out his aircraft to make a diversion, and, if possible, to secure a division of the British fleet by making an attack upon them, and the aircraft failed.

So, in order to make an attack at all, he was compelled to stake the issue upon his battleships and his battle cruisers, without the aid of either submarines or aircraft. The German aircraft could not even find the German battle fleet at the Battle of Jutland; so, why should our legislative stategists say that the developments of this war indicate that aircraft are going to take the place of surface craft?

Are we going to carry the commerce of the world in airplanes? Somebody was just telling me here on the floor of the Senate a moment ago that the experience of our effort to establish an aerial mail service was that we had carried a sack of mail from San Francisco to New York. If that is the best we have been able to do after all of the effort we have made along that line, I assume we are not going to carry the commerce of the world in the air, and that it is going upon the surface of the sea in merchant vessels, as it has done heretofore, and if merchant vessels are to carry the commodities of the world upon the surface of the sea, it will be essential that there shall be war vessels upon the surface of the sea to protect the merchant vessels from the destruction of the enemy in case of war.

The proposition upon which this bill depends is whether or not we shall build the defenses of the Nation upon facts as they exist to-day or whether we shall be, as Kipling describes in his jungle song:

> Here we sit in a branchy row,
> Thinking of wonderful things we know,
> Dreaming of things we mean to do,
> Things that are great and wise and good,
> Won by merely wishing we could.

Mr. President, I move that the naval appropriation bill be laid aside.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am sorry to detain the Senate at all this morning, but the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has invited me into this controversy, and I am going to state my viewpoint very plainly on the matter he has discussed.

I have always admired the character, sterling integrity, and honesty of purpose of the Senator from Washington. I served with him in the House of Representatives years ago, and I have served with him here. But this morning the Senator from Washington has concluded to convert himself into a common scold in his efforts to put the failure of a great supply bill on some one else's shoulders besides his own. I do not say this with any disrespect to the Senator, or any ill-feeling, but the Senator has invited me in, and the Senator is entitled to a candid statement.

I am one of the Senators who, from the beginning, have given their cordial support to this bill and the efforts of the Senator from Washington to pass it. He has had more than an even support on this side of the Chamber. I have not a doubt in my mind that, if the roll were called on his naval program, his percentage of support on this side of the Chamber would be greater than on his own side. But candor compels me to say that if this great bill fails, its failure lies at the door of the Senator from Washington because of his inability to properly handle his bill before the Senate of the United States.

I do not say that in criticism, nor do I intend it as a reflection on the honesty of purpose of the Senator from Washington to pass his bill or his personal desire to have it become a law. Some men are endowed with some characteristics and some with others. I have seen great lawyers who were poor judges and great judges who were poor lawyers. I have seen able statesmen who did not have the tact to handle a bill on the legislative floor. The Senator from Washington, when he is further trained as the head of this great committee, may acquire those faculties which will enable him to carry his bills through the Senate of the United States without difficulty. But the Senator will learn in the course of experience that no chairman can sail a great supply bill through this great legislative body by attacking Members on the floor and attempting to place the blame on other men, and, when a supposed filibuster is in existence, occupy more time in debate than the filibusterers do. There is an old proverb which says, "Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." I fear the fate of the naval bill has fallen in line with that proverb.

I will say to the Senator, so far as his bill is concerned, that it is in a very dangerous condition, very dangerous, because of the loss of time, the failure to hold the nose of the bill to legislative desks and force its consideration, to let the men in opposition talk and depend upon the force of the majority that is behind him to drive his bill through. But the bill has not failed yet. So far as I am concerned, as I said and I repeat now, I believe the Congress of the United States should attend to its business and its business is to pass the supply bills.

The responsibility rests on the other side of the Chamber. There may have been some filibuster by individual Members, but no man can say that this side of the Chamber has not furnished its share of a quorum and lent its earnest efforts to the passage of the supply bills at this session of Congress, and yet it now looks as if incapacity in management at the two ends of the Capitol were about to defeat two of the great supply bills of the Nation. I hope that the Senator is not going to lay his bill aside. There are those of us here who believe as earnestly as anyone in the disarmament of the world, but we also believe that that disarmament can best be accomplished by having a strong Navy on the seas when the negotiations are in progress.

The Senator went out of his way this morning to attempt to place at my door the responsibility for the failure of the sundry civil appropriation bill, because he said I was interested in one of the items in the bill, the appropriation for Muscle Shoals. If I am responsible because I supported that amendment and we sent it back to conference, then the Senator's side of the Chamber is sixfold responsible, because they sent more than that number of amendments back to the House in disagreement that had not yet been agreed on, and, among others, the very item that the Senator speaks of in reference to soldiers hospitalization, which is still in disagreement. We might as well have a plain statement of the case. I hope the sundry civil bill will not fail.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is the Senator correct about the proposition that there are other items in disagreement?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will only look at the RECORD, he will know. After I moved to insist on item numbered 60, the chairman of the committee made a motion to insist on a number of other items about which there was no contest.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understood the chairman of the committee to state last evening that that is the only item in disagreement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am talking about what happened in the Senate. I am not on the conference committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the hospital amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not talking about what happened in the conference committee. The conference committee have been behind closed doors. They have not given anyone the advantage of knowing what was going on there. I am not a member of the conference committee. My responsibility begins and ends on the floor of the Senate, and I say the RECORD shows that after I had moved that the Senate further insist on its item numbered 60, the chairman of the committee moved to insist on six or seven or eight other items in the bill. I do not remember exactly how many there were, but there were at least that number.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator there were five items following that which had not been agreed to when the report was made to the Senate. In taking up the bill in conference, the House conferees insisted that we begin at the beginning and consider in their order the amendments that were in dispute, and of course the Muscle Shoals amendment blocked everything that was beyond that item in the bill; but I will say that there are four others following that upon which I have not any doubt we can agree in a very short time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly. The Senator chooses to say the Muscle Shoals item blocked the other items because he is opposed to it and is in favor of the other items.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no, Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just wait a moment. I am not talking about what was done in the conference committee, but what was done at the desk in the Senate. Does not the Senator agree with me that after we had further insisted upon the Muscle Shoals item the chairman of the committee moved that we further insist on four or five or six other items?

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course it is.

Mr. SMOOT. I was simply stating to the Senator what happened in the conference committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator does not hold me responsible for what is done in the committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all, of course; but I wanted the Senate to know the true situation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator from Washington is indicting me, and if the Senator from Utah will kindly allow me to defend myself, I shall be obliged. I am not responsible for what was done in the conference committee. My responsibility ceased on the floor of the Senate. That is the case. Then what happened?

There was not anything unusual about the Muscle Shoals amendment. The Senate committee itself put the item in the bill and reported it to the floor of the Senate. A motion was made to strike it out and it was lost by a substantial majority. It went to the House of Representatives and the House rejected the item by a very narrow majority, on a vote of 182 for and 193 against, or 11 majority out of a total of 375 men voting, which was a very narrow majority. Then the bill came back to the Senate for a further vote. It was perfectly proper and entirely in accord with parliamentary procedure that those who were in favor of the particular item should move that the Senate further insist, and I made the motion, and the motion was agreed to by an increased majority in the Senate. Then what happened? The bill again went to conference and the Senate conferees supported the Senate action, as they properly should have done, and asked the House conferees to take the bill back for another vote in the House. The House conferees broke up the conference. They did not agree on the Muscle Shoals item and they refused to make a partial conference report and agree on the other items. Is not that true?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator desires me to answer the question, I shall be glad to do so; but he rather criticized me for answering a question before. However, now he is asking me a question and I know he will not criticize me if I answer it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I will not.

Mr. SMOOT. All the items in the bill following the Muscle Shoals item have not been considered because of the very fact that the House conferees said we should take the bill and take the items in the order in which they appeared in the bill. The hospital item was the first, and we agreed to that. Then we tried to get the House conferees to pass over the Muscle Shoals item and agree to the other items, but they said they would not do it in that way, that we might as well settle that and go no further until it was settled.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly; but all of the other items were left still in dispute and the House conferees left the meeting. I am informed that the leader of the conferees on the part of the Senate called another meeting and attempted again to reach an agreement or a disagreement by which the bill could be considered, and that the House conferees again broke up the meeting; that the manager on the part of the House walked off with the bill in his pocket, neither coming to conference nor reporting it to the House; that he had the papers in his possession and absolutely, for three or four days, blocked consideration of one of the greatest supply bills of the Nation, and yet the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has said that I am interfering with the passage of the bill, when, as a matter of fact, I have had nothing to do with it.

No man can deny the right of the Senate to express its sense of interest in a provision that belongs in the bill; no man can deny the right of a Member of the House, when the bill comes before the House, to move to concur in the Senate amendments and bring the two Houses together to pass the bill. That is all that those in favor of the Muscle Shoals amendment in the House have ever proposed to do. If they won, they would have secured the passage of the bill.

No man has ever heard me utter a word to the effect that I would kill a great supply bill because of one item. I am inclined to conduct myself in accordance with legislative practices. I have a perfect right as a Senator to insist, as far as it is reasonable, on an item I believe in.

The House of Representatives have the papers. Those in the House who are in favor of the item are entitled and were entitled days ago to another vote on the proposition, but it has been refused, not by parliamentary procedure, but because the manager on the part of the House would neither attend a conference nor take the papers back to the House, where they could act. That is the situation, that is the fact, and I challenge any man here to deny it.

I hope yet that the managers on the part of the House will carry the bill back to the House of Representatives and allow the House either to accept or reject the item and go on and pass the bill. I can say that it is far from me to stand in the way of a great supply bill because of one item; but I would have been disloyal to my constituents if I had not made the request and if I had not made an earnest effort to present their viewpoint in the case.

Now, I desire to say this to the other side of the Chamber: Here is a bill containing $411,000,000, with not only $18,000,000 for hospitals for soldiers but $267,000,000 for the wounded and disabled soldiers, and the action of the management of the Republican Party in the House is endangering those propositions. Why? Because there is one item in the bill that he personally does not want and does not believe in. It is not an unusual item. It is an item that was in conformity of the law, a project that is in the course of building. The item was sustained by a regular estimate sent down by the executive branch of the Government. It is perfectly proper for the Congress to pass on it, and yet because he could put the bill in his pocket and refuse action of any kind, he has blocked the progress of the Congress of the United States, not only endangering a great bill but endangering appropriations that go to wards of the Nation, to the men to whom we owe the greatest debt of loyalty of any men under the flag, the soldiers who sacrificed their health and their limbs on the battle fields of Europe.

That is the situation. To charge that I am or other Members on this side of the Senate are responsible is simply an effort to camouflage a situation and shows the inability of the party in power to transact the business of the Government.

Mr. President, I have not filibustered on any of these measures; I have given an earnest effort to carry on the business of the country. I yet hope that the Senator from Washington will conduct the naval bill in the Senate so that we may pass it, and will himself refrain from debating it. I yet hope the manager of the sundry civil bill in the other House will carry his bill back to the House and let the House act on the item in disagreement. If the House rejects the item, we shall have to accept its rejection, and if the House concurs, then it would be a crime for the members of the majority party, because of one item, to refuse to pass the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the passage of both the sundry civil appropriation bill and the naval appropriation bill. I have had no sympathy with the effort on the part of any Senator, if such an effort has been made, to encompass the defeat of either of those bills. The legislative history of the sundry civil bill does not justify the attempt on the part of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to place upon the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] the blame for the defeat of the sundry civil bill if that bill shall be defeated. I can prove that statement to the satisfaction of every Senator present if he feels enough interest in the statement to listen for a moment to what I have to say.

On the occasion when the Senate conference committee last reported to the Senate it appeared that there were a number of items in disagreement between the two Houses. A motion was made further to insist upon the amendments of the Senate and to ask for a further conference. The Senate had a right then to vote down the motion further to insist upon the amendments, and if it had done so, the two Houses would immediately have been brought into agreement.

How can any Senator who knows anything about the rules of this body blame an individual Senator who, in the exercise of his right to make a motion, moves that the Senate insist, and the Senate in the exercise of its privilege to take whatever action it chooses to take concerning the subject, supports that motion? If the motion further to insist had been voted down, a motion to recede could have been made, and the Senate could at once have put itself in the attitude where an agreement could have been reached if the Senate had desired so to do.

The facts that have been disclosed in the statement of the Senator from Alabama as to the course the conference has taken are astonishing. No blame or censure, it appears, is attachable to the conferees on the part of the Senate. They could not consistently recede from those amendments including the so-called Muscle Shoals amendment, after the Senate had instructed them further to insist on the amendments. There is not a Senator hearing me who knows anything about parliamentary practice in the Senate who does not recognize the fact that after the Senate had voted further to insist on these amendments, including the Muscle Shoals amendment, if the Senate conferees had, in spite of that vote, receded, without further action on the part of the other body, they would have been open to criticism. They did what they had the right to do; they did what parliamentary practice prompted they should do. A fair and free conference required that the representatives on that conference of the body at the other end of the Capitol should have taken the matter back to the other House for another vote.

I have been told that the House chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—the chairman of the conference on the part of the House—refused to pursue the usual parliamentary course and take the items in difference back to the House for a vote, solely on the ground that he feared that the House would not sustain its former position, would not sustain his personal view of the matter, and might vote to agree to the Muscle Shoals amendment. However that may be, whatever may have prompted the course that was taken, it was disrespectful not only to the conferees on the part of the Senate but to the Senate of the United States itself.

Everybody knows that the principal purpose of conference committees is to bring the two Houses into agreement; and if the representatives of one of the Houses arbitrarily refuse to permit their body to make expression more than one time concerning any matters in difference and decline to proceed with the conferees on the part of the Senate the failure of the conference, of course, is inevitable.

Mr. President, there are some provisions in the sundry civil appropriation bill in which every Senator feels great interest. I refer now particularly to the so-called hospitalization amendment, carrying appropriations aggregating $18,600,000, to be immediately available for the enlargement of existing hospitals and for the procurement of additional hospitals. That amendment was agreed on in conference. The provisions of that amendment must in some way be incorporated into law.

Whatever may be the result as to the sundry civil bill, it is not fair for the Senate to vote further to insist upon the Muscle Shoals amendment, and then, because the conferees on the part of the body at the other end of the Capitol decline to engage in the conference unless the Senate recede to lay the responsibility upon the Member of the Senate who made the motion to insist. If the House conferees had taken the item back to the House for another vote and that vote had rejected the Muscle Shoals item, the sundry civil bill would have passed within a few hours after that vote was taken.

There is nothing unusual in the practice of the Senate and of the House to vote more than once upon a proposition in conference, especially when the vote is very close. The vote in the House of Representatives the first time upon the amendment was 193 against to 182 in favor—an exceedingly close vote.

The vote in the Senate on the motion to further insist was far larger in proportion in favor of the action which the Senate had assumed concerning the subject than was the vote in the House. Fairness and justice required that the House again should have been permitted to express itself concerning the subject. Statements were made about the matter in conversations here this morning by Members of the House of Representatives that the chairman of the House conferees had declared that the reason he would not pursue that course was the fear that the amendment of the Senate would finally be enacted and the former action of the House reversed.

My principal purpose in rising at this time is to show that the statement that the responsibility for the failure of the sundry civil bill is on the Senator from Alabama is unfounded in fact and in reason. Wherever that responsibility may rest, it can not be fairly placed upon him merely because he made the motion further to insist. The Senate has not been given an opportunity to take any other action than that taken upon the motion further to insist upon its amendments. The conferees of the Senate could not afford the Senate an opportunity for another vote for the reason that the conferees on the part of the House would not give them an opportunity to take further action. The attitude of the conferees on the part of the House was that the Senate conferees must yield this item without a further vote in the House on it, notwithstanding the fact that the Senate had just instructed them by a proportionately far larger vote to insist upon the amendments than the vote by which the House conferees had been instructed to reject the amendment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments to this bill were laid before the Senate yesterday, and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] moved that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House, to which objection was then made. That motion is pending, and the question is on agreeing to it.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15943) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3750) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for the loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States," approved March 3, 1885, as amended by the act of July 9, 1918, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

POSTMASTER AT CHATTANOOGA, TENN.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, while I read a telegram which I received this morning from Chattanooga, Tenn. It reads as follows:

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., March 2, 1921.

Hon. CHARLES B. HENDERSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I have not been apprised of positive information that the Republican Senators intend holding up all nominations made by President Wilson for post offices that become vacant before March 4. If the party has not determined upon a policy and there are to be exceptions, I am exceedingly anxious that Mr. T. Charlton Howell, Chattanooga, Tenn., be confirmed as reward of a worthy official, who has given general satisfaction and reflected great credit to the department. Mr. Howell has made a splendid postmaster. He was recommended by me, out of a list of 10 applicants, to the President in my official capacity, with indorsement of practically two-thirds Democrats and three-fourths Republicans. He is the only Federal officer appointed by me living in my home town. A large number of Republicans are now Federal officers in this district who were holding office when President Wilson was elected, and many have been appointed since his election. I have been confined to my bed with very severe sickness, and I regret my physical condition prevents me from being in Washington at expiration of my quarter century term in Congress. I am making final personal appeal to you as a friend from a sick bed that you confirm Mr. Howell as postmaster for another term, with the hope and belief that you will grant it if humanly possible, on account of my home town. His nomination went to the Senate December 7.

JOHN A. MOON.

In view of this request, coming from the sick bed of Representative MOON, I ask unanimous consent that, as in open executive session, the Senate may confirm the nomination of Mr. Howell for postmaster at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, this matter has been called to my attention by a similar telegram from Congressman MOON, for whom I have the most unbounded respect. I have been associated with him in committee work on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for many years. The Senator from Tennessee has called my attention to this same matter. I have this day answered Mr. MOON, in reply to the telegram that he sent me, in response to his question as to what policy was going to be followed, to the effect that it was altogether probable now that no confirmation of postmasters would be had at this session of Congress.

I have tried as best I could, by consulting with my colleagues on this side, to find out about what Senators wanted, with the hope that possibly something might be done that could establish something in the form of a rule that could be followed without exception. I find I am not able myself to devise such a rule, because some of the very nominations which Senators on the other side desire are opposed by other Senators on the other side. Therefore, it has seemed to me—and I think that is the consensus of opinion of most of the Democrats and of the Republicans—that it is better to treat them all alike in reference to the matter now, and let it go over until day after to-morrow. Therefore I shall have to object.

Mr. HENDERSON. I trust the Senator will not object. I should like to see this nomination confirmed without its establishing a precedent for any such further action being taken between now and the adjournment to-morrow. This request comes from Representative MOON, who is lying sick in Chattanooga; and it seems to me that as a Member of this Congress, out of courtesy and respect to him, we might confirm this one nomination, having it distinctly understood that it is not establishing a precedent in any manner whatever.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator does not feel any more deeply about this matter than I do in reference to Congressman MOON. He does not know him, I think, as well as I do. He has not served with him as long as I have.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is true.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If it were up to me—which it is not, however—it is not a matter that I can decide. The matter has not been submitted. I know that there have been some complaints in regard to some of these postmasters, including, I think, the one at Chattanooga, but I can not, so far as I am concerned, in justice to the other Senators in this body, consent to any exception to the rule. Therefore, I shall have to object.

REPEAL OF WAR LEGISLATION.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the House having concurred in the Senate amendments to House Joint Resolution 382, I ask unanimous consent that the request for a conference, and the order appointing conferees in the matter, be set aside and vacated.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I say a word before any more unanimous-consent agreements are had? In the language of the poet from Arkansas, I should like to know "where we are at." I have no objection if we can know what is the status of the naval bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The naval bill is before the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that it is formally before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I am going to object until we know what is going to be the final disposition of the naval bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. Will not the Senator withhold his objection in this case? This is simply a formal matter.

Mr. BORAH. I know, but that is what has been happening to the naval bill for the last three days, and some of us who desire to discuss it legitimately have been accused of filibustering, and the time has been occupied by those who profess to have a very deep interest in the success of the naval bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I was in the Senate yesterday from 11 o'clock in the morning to 12 o'clock last night, and was not on the floor two minutes of the time. The time was occupied by those who wanted other business transacted or who wanted the naval bill to pass. If we are going to consider it for the rest of the day, I am going to insist that it be considered; that it be not formally before the Senate and something else be considered in the meantime.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is sure the Senator from Idaho will bear with the Chair for a moment. In this particular matter a conference was requested with the House. It turns out to be unnecessary, because the House has agreed to the Senate amendments; so all there is to it is to set aside the order appointing conferees.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. I misunderstood the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is all there is to it. It is to clear the record and nothing else.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no objection, that will be done. Now the naval bill is still before the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. BORAH obtained the floor.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. HALE. I have a good deal of sympathy with the Senator from Washington and what he has said about the naval bill, and I think there is a good deal of truth in what the Senator from Idaho has said. The bill has been practically talked to death, by its friends almost as much as by its enemies, and when I say "by its friends" I mean its friends. I think they are really for the bill, many of them.

Before any action is taken to withdraw the naval bill I hope very much that the Senator from Washington will try to get a unanimous-consent agreement for a vote on the naval bill at some time this afternoon. I think the committee is willing to make reasonable reductions in the bill. It believes in the bill as it stands now, but in order to secure its passage it is willing to make reductions, and I believe that we can come to some arrangement whereby the bill can pass the Senate and can get through conference in time to secure its passage before the conclusion of the session.

I hope very much that the Senator from Washington will ask for a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, several members of the Naval Affairs Committee have indicated the desire of the committee to continue the consideration of the bill; and in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Maine, and in the hope that it will be accepted, I submit the request for unanimous consent which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed unanimous-consent agreement will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of March 3, 1921, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 15975, the naval appropriation bill, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition, and that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on said calendar day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill or more than once or longer than 5 minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator wish to speak to this particular matter?

Mr. MOSES. I merely wish to get some information as to whether, in the intervening time before the voting begins on the bill, all unanimous-consent requests with regard to other matters will be refused.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I can relieve the situation. I object to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Would the Senator consent to some other hour?

Mr. BORAH. No; I would not consent to any other hour. It is impossible to deal with all the matters here in three or four hours.

Mr. President, I desire to say just a word, and that is all, in regard to this matter.

The naval bill was brought here last Saturday. It was practically impossible, under any management of the Senator from Washington, to have brought it to consideration prior to last Monday. To my way of looking at it, viewing this bill as I do, involving not only the question of appropriations but several questions of policy, it was unreasonable to ask for the passage of this bill during the last three or four days of the session. It would preclude any real consideration not only of the appropriations, but certainly any real consideration of the great questions of policy which are involved in the bill; and that which I anticipated has actually taken place. The Senator from Washington has endeavored to keep the bill before the Senate, and the Senator has kept the bill before the Senate; but during practically two-thirds of the time that the bill has been before the Senate other matters have been taken up by unanimous consent, and always upon the part of those who are supposed to be friendly to the bill. The mere fact that they asked for the consideration of these other matters did not imply that they were against the bill, but it disclosed very clearly that we were considering a great bill, involving great questions of policy, under circumstances and conditions in which it was impossible to give it the consideration it was entitled to have.

Now we are asked, having reached page about 21 of the bill, without having considered a single vital amendment in the bill or a single one of the questions of policy involved in the bill, after having tried to consider it for three or four days, to dispose of it upon a 10-minute debate three or four or five hours from now.

I should not think really that that could be expected, but if it is expected, I am bound to say that I shall object; and I do object to the unanimous consent.

Let me say further, Mr. President, that there has never been a time since the bill was taken up when it was possible to pass it at this session, if we gave it the consideration which it was entitled to have.

I think the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] was in error in his remarks with reference to the management of this bill. There is a way by which it could have been passed through the Senate. I have seen the thing done many times since I have been here. It could have been done if everybody had closed his eyes and sealed his lips to the conditions and contents of the bill, and voted for it regardless of its merit or demerit. That is the only way in which it could ever have been passed by the Senate. It was impossible to pass it under any management if we gave it the consideration which it was entitled to have.

Feeling, as I do, very deeply about some of the matters in the bill, I am perfectly willing to share the responsibility at least with the Senator from Washington for seeing that this bill does not pass at this session.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator will admit, will he not, that on Tuesday practically the entire day was spent on a very important feature of the bill, the amendment relating to disarmament, which was pretty thoroughly and generally discussed, and a decision arrived at? If the same policy were continued, and amendments were offered in reduction of amounts specified where objection existed, we perhaps could get the bill to a position where a free and proper and necessary discussion would result.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps. If the Senator will recall, we came into the session yesterday at 11 o'clock. I think it was the Senator from Maine who called my attention to the fact that at 4 o'clock no consideration had yet been given to this bill, and the time had been occupied, not by the filibusterers so called, but by the filibusterers in fact, if there be any filibusterers at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me that the general situation which was indicated by what the Senator has described as taking place shows the positive opposition to the bill. I am not saying that the attitude of the Senate was not justified, because that is for the Senate to determine, but it was a deadly indifference as to whether the bill passed or not, which led Senators to present and ask the consideration of everything of minor or greater importance which any Senator had that he desired the consideration of, and a disposition in some quarters, if consent was not given, to take advantage of the situation, as they easily could, in the short time before the end of the session, to hold up the Senate and the bill for the purpose of forcing consideration of the matter desired to be brought up.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, just another suggestion before I sit down. Suppose we should keep this bill before the Senate for the rest of the day, say, until 7 or 8 o'clock. What would be the condition with reference to other things which we really should attend to? There are pending matters which really ought to be taken up and considered. There are some measures which should really be disposed of. I do not know yet what is going to happen to the hospital appropriations, but it is a fact that there is a great anxiety about voting supply bills, but the measure providing for the small amount of supplies necessary to keep the boys who were in the war from dying and rotting from the want of care is on the verge of being defeated. So far as I am concerned, I take some pleasure in the fact that I have an opportunity by my objection to give the Senate an opportunity to take care of that situation.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I can not see why proceeding with this bill should at all interfere with the taking care of the situation mentioned by the Senator from Idaho. I, of course, must yield to the judgment of the acting chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. If it is his wish and his opinion that the bill should be laid aside, I presume there is nothing to do but to acquiesce. I am always a good soldier, and prefer to follow the leader in a matter of this kind. But I have thought all along and even since the Senator rose to speak this morning, that there was a possibility of passing this bill, and that even now it may be passed to-day. It will have to pass the Senate by 5 or 6 o'clock anyhow in order to get any consideration in the House. Even then it could be considered, and the differences between the Senate and House could be adjusted. Certainly, however, it could not if the conferees on the part of the House adopt the policy of blocking conferences and assume to pocket bills in disagreement and refuse to go into conference at all.

I am informed by a Senator who is an experienced legislator that it would be safe if we could get the bill to the House by 8 o'clock.

Mr. BORAH. You can not get the bill to the House by 8 o'clock. Why not deal sincerely with this situation?

Mr. FLETCHER. I realize that if any Senator desires to discuss this bill all day. He can do it; there is no question about that. But I am taking the Senator from Idaho at his word, that he wants to deal with each item fairly, and consider it on its merits, without any undue elaboration, or extension of discussion unnecessarily. I think that the general policies of the bill, having listened to the Senator's able addresses, and others on the floor for many hours, have been pretty well covered. I doubt if there is any need to go into that in any further detail.

But we met this morning at 11 o'clock; it is now 10 minutes of 1, and we have not done a thing with the naval appropriation bill; and that has been happening day after day. I do not mean to criticize the handling of the bill at all. I think that in these circumstances, in the closing days of a very busy session, when there are conference reports coming in which must be acted upon, it is almost impossible to keep a bill continuously before the Senate. Appeals are made to yield for this conference report and for that conference report, and for this unanimous action and that, with representations that they will take only a minute here and a minute yonder, and the day is soon gone, with nothing done with the measure before the Senate. There is only one way to pass an important bill, and especially in the crowded hours of the closing of the session, and that is to take a lesson out of the book of the sailor, who keeps his ship head on to the wind and makes progress by the very forces that blow against him. You always have to do that in the handling of a great bill in the Senate, and I believe that could still be done and we could pass this bill.

I do not know of anything more important. Of course, the hospital matter is of vital concern to everybody, but that need not be delayed by going on with this measure. I believe that if the passage of the bill is undertaken and we proceed as rapidly as we can we yet have time to fully consider and discuss the merits of every item in this bill and pass it before 8 o'clock to-night.

I hesitate to differ with the acting chairman of the committee, but on his motion to lay the bill aside I shall have to vote against him.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I understand that the pending bill is still in the hands of the Committee on Naval Affairs and is before the Senate. I have a matter of very serious importance to bring up in the line of appropriation bills, but before proceeding further I want to say a word to my good friend from Washington, the acting chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

I know how severely his patience is tried and I know how ably he is seeking to conduct his bill. I wish to say to him that I have been in similar places oftentimes. It is very, very trying; but I have kept my seat and perhaps have used only a half hour or so in the two weeks while a pending appropriation bill was before the Senate, giving all the time to others, to those who opposed or upheld the bill, and after 10 or 12 days there would come a feeling of necessity on all hands that a great supply bill must not fail, and after all the storm, perhaps in a half hour or not to exceed three-quarters of an hour, the bill would be passed and the trouble over.

Because I dislike to see any one of these supply bills fail, I want to suggest to the Senator that I think, in justice to himself and in justice to the committee, to him personally and to the position he holds, he should yet try to get this bill through, of course relenting at times for those things which by rule and practice are always allowed to come in—in the consideration of a general bill—such as conference reports.

Having said that much, I leave it for the Senator himself, of course, to conduct the bill as he has a right to, in his own manner and time.

Now, I wish to refer to the other great bill that is in limbo and say only a few words in regard to it, because I do not wish to take up the time. The sundry civil bill passed the Senate and was sent to the House for its concurrence, the bill containing about 200 pages of matter and 168 amendments. The House thereupon voted upon many of the amendments severally, and some perhaps en bloc, but sent nearly all of them, at least 90 to 100 amendments, back to the committee. The conferees met with rather more instead of less than 100 differences, and we were able to agree, so far as our views on the amendments were concerned, in the very large proportion of them.

But under the somewhat triangular and troublesome rules which the House has within the last year or two adopted the conferees on the part of the House were compelled, by fear of this point of order or that, which would throw the bill back to conference, to go first to the House with almost all amendments. The House thereupon gave the bill attention and receded from a very large number of its positions and sent back to us less than a score of differences, whereupon the conferees again met, agreeably with the request of the Senate. When we came to the Muscle Shoals item, which had been adopted in the Senate, the House conferees said that was one thing they could not agree to, and we proceeded to other matters. We had some trouble with the others, something like 15 differences, and, of course, the only way out of it was to report back to our respective bodies; and I wish to interpolate here that we had not yet reported anything from our conference up to that time. But it was necessary, in line with all rules and usages, that we should report how far we had proceeded in these conclusions and seek an acceptance of the report.

We came back to the Senate with the conference report. The chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations moved a concurrence in the report of the partial agreement. Thereupon a Member of the Senate under his right objected to the acceptance of the report until consideration was had of one particular matter, and he moved with reference to that that the conferees should insist upon further consideration and go back to conference. The Senate, by a vote in a majority, I think, of nine, instructed the conferees to go back and insist. The House conferees in the meantime met us with the statement that in the House the vote on the Muscle Shoals proposition was, I think, 181 for and 192 against, a difference of 11, which, of course, was a less percentage of support to the House side of the question than that of the Senate.

We then had this condition before us. We had directly and diametrically the Senate upon the one side and the House upon the other. The House had once voted that they would not accept the item and send it back to the conferees. The Senate had voted to insist that the items should be maintained and had sent it back to the conferees.

Preceding that, the Muscle Shoals matter had come up on the floor of the Senate in different forms and had occupied the attention of the Senate for some time. As I recall, it was agreed to, although I believe I was among those who voted against it because it contained a good deal of matter other than straight appropriation. Thereupon an amendment, made in regular form, made under the estimates printed and sent to the committee days beforehand, with the most exact observance of all the rules, was before the Appropriations Committee, to add to the sundry civil bill this item of $10,000,000 for the prosecution of the work in continuing the dam at Muscle Shoals. The chairman felt it to be of sufficient importance to waive action on it in the subcommittee, and called a meeting of the full committee, with personal notice from the clerk to each member of the committee as to what important question would come before the committee. The committee voted 9 to 6 to adopt the $10,000,000 amendment. There were two of the committee paired, there were two who did not vote, which made up the personnel of the committee. While the matter was under consideration on the floor it was voted on and, I think, was carried by a majority of nine.

Now, let us waive the merits of the case as to Muscle Shoals. I do not care to enter into that at all at this time. There are others better posted who can do that. However, the dignity of the Senate, the privileges of the Senate, the rules and regulations written and unwritten, are such that the conferees had no other course than to insist upon the item, which insistence the Senate had transferred to them. Thereupon, when we called another meeting, when we sought to go on with the consideration of the matter, we were met with the frank statement of the chairman of the House conferees that the bill could fail; that they would not under any consideration at any time whatever take it back to the House until we had receded on that particular item. The chairman of the Senate conferees, later on in the consideration by the conference committee, after stating, which of course they well knew, the rules and regulations providing that it was incumbent upon them to go back again, informed them very frankly that the committee desired the passage of the bill to such an extent that if they took it back to the House and it should again carry against the Muscle Shoals proposition, the conferees on the part of the Senate would thereupon immediately recede and bring it before the Senate with the expectation that it would be so accepted, and that nothing worse could happen than that it might be again sent back on a motion of instruction as to adherence. The House conferees again refused and left the conference, stating that there was no use in talking and that the bill could fail.

This was about noon. That same evening the chairman of the committee requested the clerk of the committee to telephone the clerk of the House committee that if entirley agreeable and convenient to the conferees on the part of the House we would meet at 10 o'clock the next morning. Our conferees were on time and the others came somewhat later. The proposition on the part of the chairman of the conferees of the Senate was, "Let us try to agree to as many of the dozen remaining items as we can and report back. Let us commence at the other end of the line." Their reply was, "No; we will commence at the front end and we will commence on the Muscle Shoals item." We asked, "Can we not agree upon the other matters and go to the Senate and to the House and get a reconciliation of as many items as we can, as we always do in every case of appropriation bill conferences? We were told point blank that unless we receded, they would not have any further use for conferences. According to the rules of conference, the papers were in their hands, and they broke up the meeting and took the papers and went back to the House.

They have had several occasions since to reply to the inquiry whether they would again go to conference and would take that back, or whether they would again consider the question under the rules and usages. The same answer comes back, that the bill can fail.

There is one thing I desire to state emphatically. So long as I occupy the place I have, I shall not discredit the Senate nor humble it by doing the undignified and unreasonable thing; that is, by allowing either side, House or Senate, to say dogmatically, when a matter is put in a bill by one side and objected to by the other, that they can immediately at one sweep wipe it away and have superior rights the one over the other. Why do we have conferees? Why do we have conferences? It is to reconcile differences. I have here in this body late at night seen it often happen that we would repeatedly report a few items agreed to, cutting down gradually the number first disagreed to, and finally one side would give way or the other side would give way, or there would be a middle ground agreed upon, a meeting halfway or something of the kind, as has been done during this session with other bills before us.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he does not remember that when the item was under consideration, in order to keep the property from being destroyed and washed away and a $5,000,000 investment wasted, we offered to compromise the matter and reduce the appropriation from $10,000,000 to $5,000,000, or even to $2,000,000, in order to keep the work going on and protect the property of the Government in that great establishment, and that the conferees on the part of the House absolutely refused even to consider a compromise of the item.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes. We received but one answer—the dogmatic "We will have our way or the bill can fail." As I said, until instructed by the Senate I shall never surrender the rights of the Senate or its dignity by allowing a thing of that kind to take place.

In the meantime I understand how much feeling there is, and justly so, as to the hospitalization of these poor men, wounded and sick, disqualified for service, many of them without funds, who protected our flag and our honor in a foreign country, and who are now waiting for sufficient beds and quarters and hospital facilities. Therefore I desire to bring up a matter for action and to inform the Senate that we did, while conferring, agree entirely as to one part of the bill. The sundry civil bill, while it carries only about $400,000,000 altogether, and I wish this to be distinctly understood, appropriates $267,600,400 for the various lines of help for the disabled and disqualified ex-soldiers. In fact, that is the backbone of the bill. It is the larger portion of the bill. But that and many other things are laid aside in the one proposition that the House conferees will not consider the bill on its merits and on the usages of conferences.

We waited on the Senate side to have the hospital matter come to us in the regular way from the House. They should have sent us in some of the appropriation bills a proposition of appropriation for this immediate purpose, but they failed to do that. I think I spent a large portion of two weeks back and forth on the matter, and finally concluded that we would have to take the bill called the Langley bill, which provided only for authorization and not for appropriation, and build something upon that. After it had been reported favorably and we could wait no longer the committee took that bill and built on to it $5,600,000 more, the bill originally authorizing $13,000,000. We placed that additional sum in the bill, appropriating $18,600,000, which is for immediate use, and not only immediately available but available until it is expended.

The Langley bill itself came over afterwards, and the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, knowing the action we had taken, sought to have the Chair refer the bill to the Appropriations Committee. In the present state of affairs the Appropriations Committee considered the bill as it came from the House, and has moved an amendment which in effect is the striking out of the entire bill after the enacting clause and substituting therefor the exact matter as agreed to in the sundry civil bill as to the appropriation of $18,600,000 and its expenditure and has made a report (Rept. No. 828).

I send to the desk the bill and the report to which I have just referred. I wish to have the report read. I wish to say to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs that I am asking unanimous consent to have the bill reported and considered at this time for relief in the matter of hospitals for the wounded and disabled soldiers.

RELIEF OF DISABLED EX-SOLDIERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tenpore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to report a bill from the Committee on Appropriations and asks for its present consideration. The bill will be read by title.

The reading clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15894) to authorize an appropriation to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Division of Rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the making of the report.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, what relation does this bill have, if any at all, to the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. WARREN. It embodies in a separate measure certain matters in the sundry civil appropriation bill as they were finally agreed to in order that we may have immediate action on the hospital question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, it illustrates the situation that we have been confronted with all the time. It is almost impossible to refuse consideration to a measure of that kind when it is asked for pending the consideration of the naval bill. If consideration is granted, we shall be charged with abandoning the naval bill.

Mr. WARREN. I did not make the request with that intention.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I hope that no objection will be made by any Senator to the consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Wyoming. The bill as he has reported it from his committee represents the agreement of the conference committee on the sundry civil appropriation bill in so far as it relates to additional hospital facilities for sick and disabled soldiers. The Senate thrashed the subject out fully, considered it very carefully, and wrote into the sundry civil bill a provision the important features of which no doubt Senators will recall. In conference that provision, without material modification, was agreed to.

It now appears that the sundry civil bill is likely to fail of passage. If it should fail of passage, the department having charge of the sick and disabled soldiers would be lacking in the funds urgently required to provide for their hospitalization. This is a very important matter, and it is one that represents the conclusion of the Senate after very careful consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER rose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will permit me to make a brief further statement, I desire to say that I have not the slightest doubt that the body at the other end of the Capitol will pass this bill very quickly, for the reason that it represents an agreement already reached by the conferees on the sundry civil bill after very careful consideration.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall yield in just a moment. It is of the very utmost importance, whatever happens to the sundry civil appropriation bill, that this feature of it shall be passed. The bill, as I have already said, I think, represents the conclusion of the Senate after very careful consideration.

Mr. NEW and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senator from Washington first arose, and I yield to him with pleasure.

Mr. NEW. I merely wish to ask a question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have, of course, yielded to the Senator from Washington, he having yielded to me.

Mr. NEW. The Senator from Arkansas has stated that this bill represents the agreement of the conferees. I should like to know how nearly it represents the language of the bill as it passed the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is almost identical with it except, I think, there is an additional provision which is known as the McLeod resolution, which was incorporated in the conference report, making available for hospitalization a portion of the $46,000,000 which was appropriated last year for the maintenance of sick and disabled soldiers.

Mr. NEW. That is what I wanted to know.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to know whether there is objection on the part of any Senator to receiving the report which has been submitted by the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, does this bill make as liberal provision for the hospitalization of sick and wounded soldiers as does the sundry civil bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. It does, so far as the immediate requirements are concerned.

Mr. WARREN. It makes provision so far as it goes in exactly the same language as is contained in the sundry civil bill, but, of course, the sundry civil bill carries other large appropriations which would not be available until after July 1 next. Those proposed appropriations, outside of the amount carried by this bill, aggregate over $249,000,000; but if the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] will permit me, I desire to say that I hope we may yet come to some conclusion on the sundry civil bill, although it may be that there is only one chance in a hundred of our doing so. However, if we shall provide in this way for the immediate purposes of hospitalization, we expect there will be a sundry civil bill introduced, considered, and passed, containing the other items, immediately or very soon after the assembling of Congress in the special session.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the bill which the Senator from Wyoming has presented been reported by the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. WARREN. It came over from the House and was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate. At the request of that committee it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which committee has reported it with an amendment, and with the recommendation that it be passed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does it make provision for the use and fitting up of the forts that were mentioned in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. WARREN. It mentions specifically the three that were covered by the provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill, the three being Walla Walla, MacKenzie, and Logan H. Roots.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If this bill does not lead to debate, I will withhold my objection to it. I hope it will not lead to debate; I do not think it ought to lead to debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request for unanimous consent, so far as receiving the report is concerned. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming for the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15894) to authorize an appropriation to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Division of Rehabilitation, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, within the limits of appropriations made herein, to provide additional hospital and outpatient dispensary facilities for persons who served in the World War and are now or hereafter may be patients of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance or of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Division of Rehabilitation, (1) by purchase, gift, or lease of existing plants; (2) by construction on sites now owned by the Government or on sites to be acquired, when approved by the President, by purchase, condemnation, gift, or otherwise; or (3) by such remodeling or extension of existing plants and their equipment, owned or acquired by the United States, at places now being used or that have been used by the Public Health Service for hospital purposes, as may be necessary economically to adapt such plants to the uses and purposes herein provided. Such hospitals and out-patient dispensary facilities shall include the necessary buildings and auxiliary structures, mechanical equipment, approach work, roads and trackage facilities leading thereto, vehicles, live stock, furniture, equipment, and accessories, and also shall provide accommodations for officers, nurses, and attending personnel, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept gifts or donations for any of the purposes named herein.

The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to transfer without charge to the Secretary of the Treasury for the use of the Public Health Service such mechanical, construction, and miscellaneous material, hospital furniture and equipment, hospital and medical supplies, motor trucks and other motor-driven vehicles, not required by the War Department, as may be required by the Public Health Service for its hospitals.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, in his discretion, to employ technical and clerical assistants within or without the District of Columbia, without regard to civil-service laws, rules, and regulations, and to pay from the sum herein appropriated for construction purposes, at customary rates of compensation, exclusively to aid in the preparation of the plans and specifications for the above-named objects and for the supervision of the execution thereof, and for traveling expenses, field-office equipment, and supplies, commercial printing in or out of the District of Columbia incident thereto at a total limit of cost for such additional technical and clerical assistants and traveling expenses, etc., of not exceeding 3 per cent of the limit of cost for construction: Provided, That all of the above-mentioned work shall be under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

In carrying out the purposes herein authorized the President is authorized and empowered, in his discretion, to assign for use of the Public Health Service, under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury, such lands or buildings now owned or leased by the United States, not including property under the jurisdiction of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, which, in his judgment, can be used more efficiently for the care of patients of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to take over immediately Fort Mackenzie, Wyo., Fort Walla Walla, Wash., and Fort Logan H. Roots, Ark., with all lands, buildings, and equipment belonging thereto for the uses contemplated herein and to expend from the appropriation in the following paragraph not to exceed $600,000 at Forts Mackenzie and Walla Walla and not to exceed $250,000 at Fort Logan H. Roots for providing and increasing hospital facilities thereat.

For carrying into effect the preceding paragraphs relating to additional hospital facilities, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $18,600,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, of which sum not to exceed $6,100,000 shall be used for remodeling or extending existing plants.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I now wish to correct a statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I presume the Senator was led astray by some of the newspaper camouflage talk. For instance, there appeared in the Washington Post a couple of days ago an item stating what great things the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the other House had accomplished and what Representative McLEOD had done. The action of those Members has not added anything. It was stated that they had added $6,100,000 to the proposed appropriation, but that amount, of course, was a part of the bill itself as the Senate had amended it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand that perfectly well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, is the bill open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and is open to amendment.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, when there came before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate a proposal for the State of New York to build a hospital to cost in the aggregate $3,000,000 the committee voted adversely upon the proposition for the reason that as presented the hospital was to be used exclusively for New York patients, and the whole transaction involved the borrowing of money by the Government at the high rate of 10 per cent interest. Subsequently the proposition was somewhat modified so as to eliminate the exclusive feature of the bill, but nevertheless the committee unanimously voted against the proposition. I so voted with the expressed reservation that I should be willing cheerfully to vote $3,000,000 to construct a hospital, to be owned wholly by the Government, for the general use of mentally defective ex-service men without involving the Government in the payment of 10 per cent interest on the money. Therefore I feel under obligation now to offer to amend this bill by increasing the amount from $18,600,000 to $21,600,000 in order that the Secretary of the Treasury may meet the exigencies so forcefully presented by the Senator from New York and take care of mentally defective ex-service men.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia to the amendment reported by the committee.

The READING CLERK. In the fourth line from the bottom of the amendment reported by the committee, it is proposed to strike out "$18,600,000" and to insert "$21,600,000."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and a majority of the members of the committee, I am sure, are ready on all occasions to recommend sufficient appropriations for the care and treatment of ex-service men; but this matter has just been before the committee and a majority of the committee did not favor the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, because, and because only, we are in too delicate a position from a parliamentary standpoint at the present time in regard to doing anything for the ex-service men to adopt an amendment of the kind proposed to the pending measure. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the adoption of the amendment proposed by me would not involve any delay whatsoever in the passage of the bill. There are verbal alterations in the text of the bill which will necessitate its return to the House, and I feel sure that the House will agree to the amendment proposed by me, for, as a matter of fact, it has already voted for the proposition as presented by the State of New York, involving an interest charge of 10 per cent to the Government on the money.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia whether the House ever voted for $18,600,000, to say nothing of $21,000,000?

Mr. GLASS. No; but it voted to agree to the proposition of the State of New York to build a hospital, which was to be for the exclusive use of New York patients, and which involved an interest charge of 10 per cent to the Government on the money expended.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, as the bill came to us with that item included there was a total appropriation, I believe, of only $13,000,000. I wish to say to the Senator from Virginia, because I happen to be a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which very fully considered this question and which, in fact, asked the Committee on Appropriations to take the action they have taken, that if his amendment is adopted, considering the stage of the session, there is grave danger that the bill will be defeated; and any Senator who votes for the amendment must assume his share of the responsibility if it shall fail.

Mr. GLASS. I can not conceive, Mr. President, that the House of Representatives would vote against this amendment, when, as a matter of fact, it voted to accept the proposition of the State of New York, involving the exclusive use of a hospital for New York patients and involving also the payment of 10 per cent interest on the money.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, when the House did that they set a limit of $13,000,000 which they were willing to appropriate; and now, when we ask them to appropriate $18,000,000—$6,000,000 more than they were then willing to appropriate—when we have a proposition that has been agreed to by the conferees of the House in connection with the sundry civil bill, it seems to me that the Senator must see that he is taking very great chances of defeating this legislation entirely by urging his amendment.

Mr. GLASS. It is of record that the House voted to accept the proposition of the State of New York, after it knew the Senate Committee on Appropriations had increased the total amount to $18,600,000; and it is inconceivable to me, in view of the representations that have been made on this subject as to the immediate necessity for the relief of ex-service men, that there is any Member of the House who would object. As a matter of fact, this legislation must be had by unanimous consent in any event.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations have reported this bill exactly as the conferees agreed. I hope Senators will not make any opposition to it. There was opposition to this item in the House. It is true that a majority voted for it, as the Senator says; but why bring up that question now? This is an emergency matter, and we ought to report it just as it has been agreed to by the conferees, and when it goes upon the floor of the Senate there will be no explanations made and no opposition brought to it because of the item of $3,000,000. In my opinion, the only way we are going to get this thing passed is to pass it just as we have it; and I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. GLASS. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], which I transfer to the senior Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. I should like to ask if he has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is unfortunately not able to be present. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McCUMBER. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. HENDERSON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I am advised, however, that he would vote as I shall vote upon this question, and I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I am unable to secure a transfer and therefore am obliged to withhold my vote.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence, as I am unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I am informed that my pair, the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], has not voted. As I have a general pair with him, I am compelled to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 49, as follows:

Mr. TRAMMELL. While I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], I understand that if he were present he would vote as I shall on this measure, and I therefore vote "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act providing additional hospital facilities for patients of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, division of rehabilitation, and for other purposes."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I had intended to speak upon the bill which has just been passed, appealing to the Senate to enact it promptly, in order that a very serious condition which now exists among the wounded ex-soldiers who need rehabilitation might be relieved. In view of the fact that that has been accomplished and the bill has now passed the Senate, I wish to insert in the RECORD, supplementary to the passage of the bill, certain figures handed to me by Commander Galbraith, of the American Legion, showing the rising tide of ex-soldiers who need rehabilitation. They will be of great use to Senators in studying the needs for hospitalization in the future.

The bill just passed very largely relieves the situation, but the requests they have made contemplated an appropriation of $30,000,000. I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that certain facilities which the Government now owns can be utilized, and therefore, as a beginning, they will take care immediately of those tuberculosis and other patients who need attention.

I ask the Senate to study these figures to learn how the numbers of these soldiers have increased. When the war was over the number of wounded was practically 250,000. Now the estimate that is made is that those who need attention number 500,000, and in view of the fact that nearly 5,000,000 men served during the war, indirectly, through their families, 25,000,000 people in this country are deeply interested in this question.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Compensation:
Number drawing compensation	250,000
Applications pending	82,635
Vocational training:
In training	57,684
Approved for training but not placed in training	43,000
Current applications pending action	20,000

These figures do not include 7,000 slightly disabled men taking training but drawing no training pay, or 68,000 slightly disabled approved for training without training pay but who have not been placed in training.

Hospitalization:
In hospitals	22,019
Of which number the following are in institutions classed as unsatisfactory. (Surgeon General United States Public Health Service to Senator ASHURST, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 15, 1921):
Tubercular patients	5,251
General patients	4,621
Neuropsychiatric patients	475
	10,347

NOTE.—
(a) Flimsy and inflammable buildings.
(b) Buildings with insanitary plumbing, etc.
(c) State insane asylums, including institutions for criminally insane, drug addicts, vicious degenerates, etc.
(d) Institutions maintained by public charity.
(e) Private institutions operated for profit.

In unsatisfactory hospitals	9,482
NOTE.—
(a) United States Public Health Service hospitals of a satisfactory nature	6,982
(b) Army and Navy hospitals (Bad to have disabled men assigned to these hospitals on account of discipline.)	1,000

NOTE—Continued.

(c) National homes for disabled volunteers (These homes are not proper places for disabled soldiers, as it is necessary for them to make a will assigning their property to the United States. They are also subject to the Articles of War while living there.)		1,500
Disabled men in immediate need of hospitalization for which no facilities are available:
Neuropsychiatric patients (estimate of Dr. Thomas B. Salmon, medical director National Committee for Mental Hygiene)		5,000
Tubercular patients (estimate of Dr. T. Victor Keene, American Legion hospitalization committee)		6,500
		11,500
Average monthly net increase of men in hospitals		1,900

NOTE.—Number of patients discharged and admitted during September, October, and November, 1920 (December figures are not available when this is written):

September:
Admitted		5,682
Discharged		3,962
Gain		1,720
October:
Admitted		6,097
Discharged		4,060
Gain		1,037
November:
Admitted		11,007
Discharged		8,076
Gain		2,031

I also beg to quote from the figures I have had compiled to show how the soldiers who have been disabled must eventually be rehabilitated:

Total number of disabled Government must eventually rehabilitate (estimate of Dr. Haven Emerson, medical adviser, Bureau of War Risk Insurance)		500,000
Receiving benefits in some form:
(a) Receiving compensation (War Risk Insurance)	250,000
(b) Receiving training (Federal Board for Vocational Education)	57,684
(c) In hospitals	22,292
		329,976
Undoubtedly a great many of these are duplication cases, so we will decrease the number by, say		15,000
Which leaves a total of		314,976
Not receiving benefits or benefits known to be insufficient:
(e) Awaiting adjustment of compensation	82,635
(f) Approved cases awaiting admission to training	43,000
(g) Awaiting action application for training	20,000
(h) In unsatisfactory hospitals	11,347
(i) In immediate need of hospitalization but not in hospitals	11,500
		168,482
Total		483,458

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I also ask to have inserted in the RECORD an extract from a memorial addressed by the American Legion to the President, the President elect, and the Congress of the United States, asking for relief in this direction.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Extract from memorial of the American Legion to the President, the President elect, the Congress, and the people of the United States, directing attention to the situation which surrounds the rehabilitation of disabled ex-service men and suggesting a remedy:

"The United States has been more liberal than any other nation in its provisions for the disabled who gave their health and strength in their country's service in the late war, but through legislative and administrative deficiencies has failed in a large measure to make those provisions available.

"There has been lack of vision and foresight in our preparation which has been without excuse, as before us was the experience of other nations in the recent war and the experience of this Nation in previous wars. The situation which is at our doors to-day, with the suffering, the shameful neglect, and the injustice to the disabled that it entails, would not exist if reasonable foresight had been exercised or if the recommendations of those who did foresee had been heeded. A tardy start, with no clear conception of the magnitude of the problem before us, imposed an initial handicap.

"The handicap is continued by an astonishing state of divided responsibility and wasted effort among the Government agencies with which the problem rests. In the rehabilitation of a disabled man there are three needs—medical treatment, vocational training, and financial support. The Government has recognized the three needs, but overlooks the fact that they are the simultaneous needs of one man at three different times. It makes three problems out of what really is one three-part problem. Continuing this faulty conception, it has given the problem over to three agencies—the Public Health Service for treatment, the Federal Board for Vocational Education for training, the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for financial support. Each of these agencies is an institution complete in itself. Each is administratively independent of the other two. All by force of circumstances are exercising functions they were not intended to exercise. This presents an amazing spectacle of administrative chaos, duplication, wasted energy, and conflict which is the key to the present condition.

"The result is the suffering of the disabled veterans. Thousands are waiting and have waited for months for compensation for their injuries. Thousands have waited for months for an opportunity to reestablish themselves as self-sustaining members of society by vocational training. Thousands are in need of hospitalization and the Government has no hospital facilities available for them. Of the 20,000 now in hospital, 4,500 are quartered in institutions unsuited to the needs of the men quartered there. New hospital cases are developing at the rate of 1,500 a month in excess of the number discharged. Sixteen thousand beds are needed now. Hundreds of veterans are the objects of public and private charity. Afflicted and penniless veterans have been driven to refuge in almshouses and jails. Many have died and if immediate relief is not forthcoming more will die destitute, without proper medical care, without compensation with which to obtain it, abandoned by the country they served. All this is attributable directly to the manner in which the Government has administered the affairs of the disabled.

"Immediate relief and ultimate remedy of this condition is possible and imperative. To that end the American Legion feels it a duty respectfully to present for the consideration of the President, the President elect, the Congress, and the American people a review of the situation in such detail as to convey clear understanding and to suggest measures of relief and remedy. In this presentation the American Legion draws from its experience with the Government agencies now dealing with the problem, from careful investigation, study, and research, and from consultation with experts and authorities in and out of the Government service."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I also ask permission to insert in the RECORD a few extracts from certain official utterances, certain pledges made in the bulletins of the Vocational Board and the War Risk Bureau.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Extract from act creating the Bureau of War Risk Insurance:

In addition to the compensation above provided, the injured person shall be furnished by the United States such reasonable governmental medical, surgical, and hospital services and with such supplies, including artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances, as the director may determine to be useful and reasonably necessary.

Extract from Rehabilitation Monograph, Joint Series No. 3, "The Way Back to Civil Life," issued by the Federal Board for Vocational Education:

No other war has witnessed so vast a system of relief and general helpfulness as the Great War in which you have had so large a share. Every possible step to make your way back to civilian life and usefulness has been taken. There will be no charity in the years following the war, but a very complete program making provision for physical restoration in case sickness or injury is your lot, and for compensation; that is, money payment for such disability, in addition to the war-risk insurance. Besides these, there has been planned a building up of every injured man's earning power and usefulness under the supervision of the office of the Surgeon General while the man is still in the military service and of the Federal Board for Vocational Education after the man has been discharged. The pages of this little pamphlet are directed to this reconstruction work.

The soldier or sailor injured in the line of duty will be given a man's opportunity to recover and take his place in the world of men and duties. He will not have to be a beggar, an object of charity (thousands of disabled now subsisting on public or private charity), a spineless, occupationless dependent on friends, relatives, or governmental bounty. There will be a helping hand held out to every man to accept the only kind of help a real man ever wants—a chance to make good again in civil life on as nearly equal terms as his physical and mental ability will permit.

Special division of physical reconstruction in the Surgeon General's office was created in August, 1917, and a subdivision of education in October of the same year. Physical reconstruction has been defined as "complete mental and surgical treatment carried to the point of maximum functional restoration, both mental and physical." This means, to state it in other words, that your Government is seeing to it that in the event of a man's disablement in line of duty, every effort shall be made to put him back in as nearly perfect condition of health, of mind and body and usefulness as possible.

At the military hospital, the most advanced and up-to-date treatment will be afforded and every helpful method known to science will be used. Medicine and surgery will be assisted by competent nursing with one first vitally important object—to cure the patient. The most practical of artificial appliances will be at hand. Great progress has recently been made in this particular. Not mere healing of wounds is the modern aim of the surgeon, but the fetching back of lost usefulness to eye or leg or arm. This is called functional restoration. An amputated limb must not only heal but be made to serve the man in gaining a livelihood or in assisting him in the many personal acts of daily life. In many cases, a generous program of studies is provided in workshop, classroom, or on the farm, as soon as the patient is able to sit up or leave the ward. Great care will be taken that the individual abilities of each man receive every attention.

Extract from official bulletin issued by the Treasury Department, Bureau of War Risk Insurance, entitled "What the United States Government does for its fighting men and their families."

These three forms of Government aid—allotments and allowances, compensation for death or disability, and United States Government insurance—are grouped together under the war risk insurance act and administered, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

This is the greatest measure of protection ever offered to its fighting forces by any nation in the history of the world. It is not charity; it is in the essence of justice to the gallant men who have gone to the colors and to their loved ones at home. It strengthens America's fighting forces as they go forth to battle; it safeguards the families left behind; and by its broad and generous provisions it takes from war its chief terror—fear for the future.

Extract from pamphlet, known as Rehabilitation Leaflet No. 10, entitled "Stick," Federal Board for Vocational Training:

Now, listen, my youthful crêpe hanger. When you enlisted to fight for Uncle Sam you made an agreement with yourself that you would run chances with death to help out in this scrap. For months you've been going out into a hell of machine guns and shell fire, and you've accidentally dodged everything that came your way with no thought of your damned health. You've been flirting with death ever since you've been here. Now, just because your system has run down to a point where a little disease has gained headway you're ready to give up the fight. Let me tell you that just how far off the final flicker happens to be depends on you. Of all diseases, tuberculosis is least likely to kill you. Tuberculosis gives you a chance. In most other diseases it is the doctor who has to do the fighting. In this case the fight is your own. Lay off the pessimism! Shake the funeral look from your hairy visage and be a man! We will furnish you the means to get well. So, for the sake of your own self-respect, apply them.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, as a supplement to granting relief to the wounded soldiers, there is another measure which I understand the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is awaiting an opportunity to report, known as the Wason bill. That bill carries into effect a plan of decentralization which has been very successfully applied in the Vocational Bureau. It brings down practically to the wounded man, or the man who needs compensation, in the region where he lives, the opportunity of having this problem settled in that locality, without compelling him to come to Washington, or write to his Representative, or employ a lawyer at great expense, as many of the wounded and unfortunate men are now doing, to take up their cases for them. It also appropriates a million dollars for the carrying into effect of the act. I think it would be a fitting supplement to the hospitalization bill we have just passed if we now take up and pass the Wason bill, which is so greatly desired by the American Legion.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by W. H. Overhue, its assistant enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution:

S. 4511. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a right of way over certain Government lands to the State of Oregon for the Columbia River Highway;

S. 4903. An act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across Detroit River within or near the city limits of Detroit, Mich.; and

S. J. Res. 233. Joint resolution giving consent of the Congress of the United States to the States of North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Nebraska, or any two or more of said States, to agree upon the jurisdiction to be exercised by said States over boundary waters between any two or more of said States.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15894) to authorize an appropriation to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to provide medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies for persons who served in the World War and are patients of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Division of Rehabilitation, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 4310. An act to amend an act entitled "The New Mexico enabling act"; and

S. 4332. An act to exchange the present Federal building and site at Gastonia, N. C., for a new site and building.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 5049) giving preference in appointments under the civil-service laws to those persons having had military or naval service in any of the wars of the United States, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

TREASURY TAX DECISION NO. 3138.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have just obtained a copy of Treasury Decision No. 3138, being an opinion rendered by the Attorney General upon the question of permitting separate income-tax returns by husband and wife in those States that have what is called the community property system, to wit, Arizona, New Mexico, Louisiana, Nevada, Washington, and Idaho. This opinion is of vital importance to the citizens of these States which I have just mentioned. I ask unanimous consent to have the opinion printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

(T. D. 3138.)

1. INCOME TAXES—HUSBAND AND WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

In Washington, Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, Louisiana, and Nevada the husband and wife domiciled therein, in rendering separate income-tax returns, may each report as gross income one-half of the income which, under the laws of the respective States, becomes, simultaneously with its receipt, community property; this is not based upon any statute enacted subsequent to March 1, 1913, and applies under income-tax acts prior to the revenue act of 1918.

2. ESTATE TAX—HUSBAND AND WIFE—COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

In Washington, Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, Louisiana, and Nevada there should be included in gross estate, in computing the estate tax of a deceased spouse, one-half only of the community property of husband and wife domiciled therein; this is not based upon any statute enacted subsequent to March 1, 1913, and applies under estate-tax acts prior to the revenue act of 1918.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C.

To collectors of internal revenue and others concerned:

There is given below in full for your information and guidance an opinion rendered by the Attorney General under date of February 26, 1921, dealing with the right of husband and wife domiciled in certain States having so-called community property laws to divide certain of their income for the purpose of the income tax and as to the inclusion of community property in the gross estate of a deceased spouse. See, in this connection, Treasury decision No. 3071.

WM. M. WILLIAMS,
Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Approved March 3, 1921.

D. F. HOUSTON,
Secretary of the Treasury.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: My opinion has been requested upon the following questions:

1. In which of the States other than Texas in which the community property system exists may a husband and wife domiciled therein, in rendering separate income-tax returns, each report as gross income one-half of the income which under the laws of such State becomes, simultaneous with its receipt, community property?

2. In which of the States in which the community property system exists should there be included in gross estate, in computing the estate tax of the estate of a deceased spouse, one-half, and only one-half, of the community property of husband and wife domiciled therein?

3. If your answers to questions 1 and 2 as to any State are based upon a statute enacted subsequent to March 1, 1913, please give the rule as to such State existing from March 1, 1913, to the passage of such statute for my guidance in allowing claims for refund.

4. Do your answers to questions 1 and 2 apply under income and estate tax acts prior to the revenue act of 1918?

The community property system prevails in Arizona, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nevada, New Mexico, Texas, and Washington. The application of the income tax act to the income from community property belonging to husband and wife domiciled in Texas was disposed of in my opinion of September 10, 1920.

The significant portions of the Arizona statutes bearing upon the community property system in that State, all of which except article 1100 were enacted prior to 1913, are:

"ART. 3850. All property acquired by either husband or wife during the marriage, except that which is acquired by gift, devise, or descent, or earned by the wife and her minor children, while she has lived or may live, separate and apart from her husband, shall be deemed the common property of the husband and wife, and during the coverture personal property may be disposed of by the husband only; but husband and wife must join in all deeds and mortgages affecting real estate except unpatented mining claims, which may be conveyed by the husband or wife only, as provided by the laws of this State relating to conveyances: Provided, That either husband or wife may convey or mortgage separate property without the other joining in such conveyance or mortgage.

"ART. 1100. Upon the death of the husband one-half of the community property shall go to the surviving wife, and the other half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the husband, and in the absence of such disposition goes to his descendants, equally, if such descendants are of the same degree of kindred to the decedent, otherwise according to the right of representation; and in the absence of both such distribution and such descendants is subject to distribution in the same manner as the separate property of the husband. Upon the death of the wife one-half of the community property shall go to the surviving husband, and the other half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the wife, and in the absence of such disposition goes to the descendants, equally, if such descendants are of the same degree of kindred to the decedent, otherwise according to the right of representation, and in the absence of both such distribution and such descendants, is subject to distribution in the same manner as the separate property of the husband.

"ART. 2061. No conveyance, transfer, mortgage, or incumbrance of any real estate which is the common property of husband and wife, or any interest therein, shall be valid unless such conveyance, transfer, mortgage, or incumbrance shall be executed and acknowledged by both the husband and wife. But the provisions of this section shall not apply to unpatented mining claims, which may be conveyed, transferred, mortgaged or incumbered by the one in whose name the title or right of possession of any such mining claim may be, without the other joining in such conveyance, transfer, mortgage, or incumbrance.

"ART. 3848. All property, both real and personal, of the husband, owned or claimed by him before marriage and that acquired afterwards, by gift, devise, or descent, as also the increase, rents, issues, and profits of the same, shall be his separate property, and all property, both real and personal of the wife, owned or claimed by her before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, devise, or descent, as also the increase, rents, and profits of the same, as shall be her separate property."

Prior to 1913 article 1100 read:

Upon the dissolution of the marriage relation by death all the common property belonging to the community estate of the husband and wife shall go to the survivor if the deceased have no child or children; but if the deceased have a child or children, his survivor shall be entitled to one half of said property, and the other half shall pass to the child or children.

The Supreme Court of the State of Arizona has held these statutes establish in the wife an equal interest with the husband in community property in that State. In the case of La Tourette v. La Tourette (15 Ariz., 200 (1914)), the court said, after reviewing the statutes above set forth:

"The law makes no distinction between the husband and wife in respect to the right each has in the community property. It gives the husband no higher or better title than it gives the wife. It recognizes a marital community wherein both are equal. Its policy, plainly expressed, is to give the wife in this marital community an equal dignity, and make her an equal factor in matrimonial gains.

* * * * * * *

"That the interest of the wife in the community property during the coverture is not a mere possibility—not the expectancy of an heir—is quite apparent. The old saying is not true that community is a partnership which begins only at its end. Upon the dissolution of the community by death, the wife does not inherit her share of the common property, but with the death of the husband the management and control of the statutory agent or trustee ceases. The wife acquires not her share for that was already hers, but in addition to her share she acquires the right of management, control, and disposition of that share. Her status being thereby fixed as that of a femme sole. If there be no child or children of the deceased husband, all of the common property goes to the surviving wife. She has her share in the property, and in addition, by right of survivorship and not as an heir, she acquires the share that belonged to the husband, and she takes all of the property in her own right, and with respect to the management, control, and disposition of such property is reduced to the status of a femme sole and must thenceforward, with respect to it, act for herself."

The Idaho law provides, article 4656 of the Compiled Statutes of 1919, that all property of the wife owned by her before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, or that which she shall acquire with the proceeds of her separate property, shall remain her sole and separate property to the extent and with the same effect as the property of her husband similarly acquired.

Article 4659 defines the separate property of the husband to be all property owned by him before marriage, and that acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent. Community property is defined as "all other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, including the rents and profits of the separate property of the husband and wife * * * unless by the instrument by which any such property is acquired by the wife it is provided that the rents and profits thereof be applied to her sole and separate use, in which case the management and disposal of such rents and profits belong to the wife and they are not liable for the debts of the husband."

By article 4666 "the husband has the management and control of the community property except the earnings of the wife for the personal services and the rents and profits of her separate estate. But he can not sell, convey, or encumber the community real estate unless the wife join with him in executing and acknowledging the deed or other instrument of conveyance by which the real estate is sold, conveyed, or encumbered."

This section, which was amended in 1915 to read as above, previously and by amendment in 1913, provided:

"The husband has the management and control of the community property, but he shall not sell, convey, or encumber community real estate, unless the wife join with him in executing the deed or other instrument of conveyance by which the real estate is sold, conveyed, or encumbered, and such deed or other instrument of conveyance must be acknowledged by him and by his wife."

A new provision of the law of 1915, article 4667, reads:

"The wife has the management and control of the earnings for her personal services, and the rents and profits of her separate estate."

On the death of either husband or wife it is provided by article 7803 that—

"One-half of all the community property shall go to the survivor, subject to the community debts, and the other half shall be subject to the testamentary disposition of the deceased husband or wife in favor only of his, her, or their children, or a parent of either spouse, subject also to the community debts provided that not more than one-half of the decedent's half of the community property may be left by will to a parent or parents. In case no such testamentary disposition shall have been made by the deceased husband or wife of his or her half of the community property, it shall go to the survivor, subject to the community debts, the family allowance and the charges and expenses of administration: Provided, however, That no administration of the estate of the wife shall be necessary if she dies intestate."

Section 5713, as previously enacted in 1907, provided:

"Upon the death of either husband or wife one-half of the community property shall go to the survivor, subject to the community debts, and the other half shall be subject to the testamentary disposition of the deceased husband or wife, subject also to the community debts. In case no testamentary disposition shall have been made by the deceased husband or wife of his or her share of the community property it shall descend equally to the legitimate issue of his, her, or their bodies. If there be no issue of said deceased living, or none of their representatives living, then the said community property shall all pass to the survivor, to the exclusion of collateral heirs, subject to the community debts, the family allowance, and the charges and expenses of administration."

In Ewald v. Hufton (31 Idaho, 373 (173 Pac., 247)), decided in 1918, the Supreme Court of Idaho said that under the laws of Idaho no distinction is made between husband and wife as to the degree, quantity, nature, or extent of the interest each has in community property, and held that upon the dissolution of the community by the death of either spouse the survivor becomes tenant in common with the heirs of the deceased member, and the survivor can not convey title to the half belonging to the heirs which descended to them from the deceased spouse. It was therein decided that after the death of the wife a conveyance by the surviving husband conveys title only to his half.

In Kohny v. Dunbar, 21 Idaho, 258 (121 Pac., 544), decided in 1912, the Supreme Court of Idaho fully considered the respective interests of husband and wife. This was a case where it was attempted, after the death of the husband, to levy an inheritance tax under the Idaho inheritance tax law upon the wife's half of the community property. The court held that section 5713, Revised Statutes of Idaho, as amended in 1907, in force at the time of the death of Kohny, recognized the husband and wife as equal partners in the community estate and authorized each to dispose of his or her half by will, and that the survivor, on the death of one spouse, merely continued to hold as owner one-half of the community property subject to the payment of community debts, saying:

"This statute clearly and unmistakably provides that the surviving spouse takes his or her half of the community property, not by succession, descent, or inheritance but as survivor of the marital community or partnership. The same section provides further that in the event there be no issue of the marriage living at the time of the death of one of the spouses, and he or she leaves no will or testament, the half of the community property which belonged to the deceased shall go to the survivor as an heir, and therefore by descent and under and by virtue of the intestate laws of the State.

* * * * * * *

"Since the interests of both husband and wife are the same and equal in and to the community property, and each takes one-half interest therein by will, it is clear to us that if the wife must pay an inheritance tax on her half of the property upon the death of the husband, that the husband would likewise be obliged to pay an inheritance tax on his half of the property on the death of his wife. The law clearly places them both on an equality in this respect. This illustration, however, accentuates the unreasonableness of the contention, for no one claims that the husband is required to pay such tax on his interest in the community estate.

* * * * * * *

"We conclude that upon the death of husband or wife the survivor takes one-half of the property in his or her own right as survivor, and is not liable under section 1873 (inheritance tax act) to pay an inheritance tax on such interest in the community estate."

The significant portions of the laws of Louisiana bearing on the questions before us are found in the following articles of the revised civil code:

"ART. 915. In all cases when either husband or wife shall die, leaving no descendants nor ascendants, and without having disposed by last will and testament of his or her share in the community property, such undisposed of share shall be inherited by the survivor in full ownership.

"ART. 916. In all cases when the predeceased husband or wife shall have left issue of the marriage with the survivor and shall not have disposed by last will and testament of his or her share in the community property, the survivor shall hold as a usufruct during his or her natural life so much of the share of the deceased in such community property as may be inherited by such issue. This usufruct shall cease, however, whenever the survivor shall enter into a second marriage."

Article 915 was amended in 1920 to read as follows:

"When either husband or wife shall die, leaving neither a father nor mother nor descendants, and without having disposed by last will and testament of his or her share of the community property, such undisposed of share shall be inherited by the surviving spouse in full ownership. In the event the deceased leave descendants, his or her share in the community estate shall be inherited by such descendants in the manner provided by law. Should the deceased leave no descendants but a father and mother (or either), then the share of the deceased in the community estate shall be divided in two equal portions, one of which shall go to the father and mother, or the survivor of them, and the other portion shall go to the surviving spouse.

"ART. 2332. The partnership, or community of acquests or gains, need not be stipulated; it exists by operation of law in all cases where there is no stipulation to the contrary.

"But the parties may modify or limit it; they may even agree that it shall not exist.

"ART. 2334. The property of married persons is divided into separate property and common property.

"Separate property is that which either party brings into the marriage or acquires during the marriage by inheritance or by donation made to him or her particularly.

"Common property is that which is acquired by the husband and wife during marriage in any manner different from that above declared.

"ART. 2385. The paraphernal property, which is not administered by the wife separately and alone is considered to be under the management of the husband.

"ART. 2386. When the paraphernal property is administered by the husband, or by him and the wife indifferently, the fruits of this property, whether natural, civil, or the result of labor, belongs to the conjugal partnership, if there exists a community of gains. If there do not, each party enjoys as he chooses that which comes to his hands; but the fruits and revenues which are existing at the dissolution of the marriage belong to the owner of the things which produce them.

"ART. 2399. Every marriage contracted in this State superinduces of right partnership or community of acquests or gains if there be no stipulation to the contrary.

"ART. 2402. The partnership or community consists of the profits of all the effects of which the husband has the administration and enjoyment, either of right or in fact, of the produce of the reciprocal industry and labor of both husband and wife, and of the estates which they may acquire during the marriage, either by donations made jointly to them both, or by purchase, or in any other similar way, even although the purchase be only in the name of the two and not of both, because in that case the period of time when the purchase is made is alone attended to, and not the person who made the purchase.

"ART. 2404. The husband is the head and master of the partnership or community of gains; he administers its effects, disposes of the revenues which they produce, and may alienate them by an onerous title, without the consent and permission of his wife.

"He can make no conveyance inter vivos, by a gratuitous title, of the immovables of the community, nor of the whole, or of a quota of the movables, unless it be for the establishment of the children of the marriage.

"Nevertheless he may dispose of the movable effects by a gratuitous and particular title, to the benefit of all persons.

"But if it should be proved that the husband has sold the common property, or otherwise disposed of the same by fraud, to injure his wife, she may have her action against the heirs of her husband, in support of her claim in one-half of the property, on her satisfactorily proving the fraud.

"ART. 2406. The effects which compose the partnership or community of gains are divided into two equal portions between the husband and the wife, or between their heirs, at the dissolution of the marriage; and it is the same with respect to the profits arising from the effects which both husband and wife brought reciprocally in marriage, and which have been administered by the husband, or by husband and wife conjointly, although what has been thus brought in marriage, by either the husband or the wife, be more considerable than what has been brought by the other, or even although one of the two did not bring anything at all."

These statutes were all enacted prior to 1913 except article 915, which was amended in 1916 and again in 1920. The later amendments provide for the succession of the deceased spouse's half of the community property when such spouse dies without disposition of such interest by will.

Up to 1907, with a few exceptions, the courts of Louisiana appear to have generally adhered to the view that the wife's interest in the community property is that of an expectant heir, and that she has no vested interest therein until the dissolution of the community. But in the Succession of Marsal (118 La., 211 (1907)) it was held that the wife did not take either her one-half of the community property nor the usufruct of her husband's one-half as heir (art. 916) and that she was not therefore compelled to pay an inheritance tax on either under the inheritance tax law of Louisiana, saying:

"It is true that the right of usufruct which is vested in the surviving spouse is defeasible at the will of the deceased, but it is, nevertheless, a right conferred by the law, which enters into and forms a part of the marriage contract, and of which the survivor can be deprived by no one save the deceased spouse, and it seems to us hardly correct to say that the surviving spouse necessarily takes the usufruct by inheritance from the deceased, because the latter has not made a testamentary disposition to the contrary."

In the Succession of May (120 La., 691 (1908)) it was held, on the other hand, that where a deceased wife had by will bequeathed her one-half interest in the community property to her husband, the husband must pay an inheritance tax on such share after community debts had been deducted from the whole.

The principle that the rights of husband and wife in the partnership's gains grow out of the marriage contract and do not originate at its dissolution was expounded by the court in Dixon v. Dixon's Executors (4 La., 188 (1831)), where it was said that the wife has rights in the acquest before the husband dies and that the objection confounds the power of the husband to defeat the wife's rights with the existence of such rights.

In Beck v. Natalie Oil Co. (143 La., 154 (1918)), the court said:

"The property involved in this suit was acquired by the father of plaintiffs while the community of acquests and gains existed between him and the mother of the plaintiffs, and the mother of the plaintiffs, as partner in community, became owner of one-half of it. This half the plaintiffs inherited from their mother, subject to the payment of the debts of the community."

In New Mexico the following statutes enacted in 1907 or prior thereto define the respective rights of husband and wife in that State:

"SEC. 2757. All property of the wife owned by her before marriage and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof is her separate property. The wife may, without the consent of her husband, convey her separate property.

"SEC. 2758. All property owned by the husband before marriage, and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is his separate property.

"SEC. 2764. All other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, or both, is community property; but whenever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing the presumption is that title is thereby vested in her as her separate property. And if the conveyance be to such married woman and to her husband, or to her and any other person, the presumption is that the married woman takes the part conveyed to her as tenant in common, unless a different intention is expressed in the instrument, and the presumption in this section mentioned is conclusive in favor of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for a valuable consideration. And in cases where married women have conveyed or shall hereafter convey real property which they acquired prior to March 18, 1907, the husband, or their heirs or assigns, of such married women, may be barred from commencing or maintaining any action to show that said real property was community property, or to recover said real property, as follows: As to conveyances hereafter made from and after one year from the filing for record in the county clerk's office of such conveyances, respectively.

"SEC. 2766. The husband has the management and control of the community property, with the like absolute power of disposition, other than testamentary, as he has of his separate estate: Provided, however, That he can not make a gift of such community property or convey the same without a valuable consideration, unless the wife, in writing, consent thereto: And provided also, That no sale, conveyance, or incumbrance of the homestead, which is then and there being occupied and used as a home by the husband and wife, or which has been declared to be such by a written instrument signed and acknowledged by the husband and wife and recorded in the county clerk's office of the county, and furniture, furnishings, and fittings of the home, or of the clothing and wearing apparel of the wife or minor children, which is community property, shall be made without the written consent of the wife.

"SEC. 2767. Whenever the husband is non compos mentis or has been convicted of a felony and sentenced to imprisonment for a period of more than one year or has abandoned his wife and family and left her and his family, if they have children, without support, or is an habitual drunkard, or for any other reason is incapacitated to manage and administer the community property, the wife may present a petition, duly verified, to the district court of the county wherein any of the community property is located or situated, stating the name of her husband, a description of all community property, both real and personal, and the facts which render him incapacitated to manage and administer the community property and praying that she be substituted for her husband as the head of said community, with the same power of managing, administering, and disposing of the community property as is vested in the husband by this chapter.

"SEC. 2770. Upon the hearing of the petition so filed by the wife the court shall render judgment therein, either dismissing said petition or adjudging the wife thereafter to be the head of said community, with full power of managing, administering, and disposing of the community property, either real or personal, with such limitation therein as to the court may appear to be in furtherance of justice.

"SEC. 2774. Whenever husband and wife shall have permanently separated and no longer live or cohabit together as husband and wife, either may institute suit in the district court for a division of property, or for the disposition of the children, without waiting for or obtaining in said suit a dissolution of the bonds of matrimony. * * *

"SEC. 2781. The failure to divide the property on divorce shall not affect the property rights of either the husband or wife, either may subsequently institute and prosecute a suit for division and distribution thereof, or with reference to any other matter pertaining thereto which could have been litigated in the original suit for divorce.

"SEC. 1840. Upon the death of the wife, the entire community property, without administration, belongs to the surviving husband, except such portion thereof as may have been set apart to her by a judicial decree, for her support and maintenance, which portion is subject to her testamentary disposition, and in the absence of such disposition, goes to her descendants, or heirs, exclusive of her husband.

"SEC. 1841. Upon the death of the husband one-half of the community property goes to the surviving wife and the other half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the husband, and in the absence of such disposition goes one-fourth to the surviving wife and the remainder in equal shares to the children of the decedent and further as provided by law. In the case of the dissolution of the community by the death of the husband the entire community property is equally subject to his debts, the family allowance, and the charge and expenses of administration."

Section 2766 was amended in 1915 to read as follows:

"The husband has the management and control of the personal property of the community, and during coverture the husband shall have the sole power of disposition of the personal property of the community, other than testamentary, as he has of his separate estate; but the husband and wife must join in all deeds and mortgages affecting real estate: Provided, That either husband or wife may convey or mortgage separate property without the other joining in such conveyance or mortgage: And provided further, That any transfer or conveyance attempted to be made of the real property of the community by either husband or wife alone shall be void and of no effect."

In the recent case of Beals v. Ares (185 Pac., 780, 1919) the Supreme Court of New Mexico carefully reviewed the history of the community-property system in New Mexico, arriving at the following conclusions:

"(1) That under the law in this jurisdiction the wife's interest in the community property is equal with that of the husband; that while he is by statute made the agent of the community and given dominion and control over the community property during the continuance of the marriage relation, his interest in the property by reason of such fact is not superior to that of his wife.

"(2) That the wife does not forfeit her interest in the community property by the commission of adultery.

"(3) That there is no statute in this State conferring upon the district court the power to divide the community property between the parties at its discretion; that, while it has power to divide the property, this power does not extend further than to set apart to each of the spouses their undivided half interest in the property.

"(4) That the district courts have the power in all cases to set apart such portion of the community property or of the property of the respective spouses as in its discretion may be necessary for the proper support, care, and maintenance of the children born as a result of the marriage."

The conclusion of the court that the interest of husband and wife in community property are equal is based upon the provisions of sections 2774 and 2781. The former, the court says—

"clearly recognizes an existing, present interest in the wife during the existence of the matrimonial status: * * * Section 7481 recognizes that this interest continues even after divorce, where the property is not divided by the decree in the divorce case. Now, if she had no interest in the property during the existence of the community, but simply an expectancy, which would ripen into an interest only upon the death of the husband, and which expectancy continued only during the existence of the marital status, this expectant interest would be cut off by the divorce decree * * *.

"* * * The sections referred to clearly recognize a present interest in the wife, and the whole act shows that she was an equal partner with her husband in the matrimonial gains. He was constituted by section 16, chapter 37, Laws 1907, as the agent or manager of the community property; but this did not vest him the larger or superior interest in the property upon division."

In Nevada the relative rights of husband and wife in community property are defined in the following sections of the revised laws of that State:

"SEC. 2155. All property of the wife owned by her before marriage, and that acquired by her afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is her separate property; and all property of the husband, owned by him before marriage, and that acquired by him afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is his separate property.

"SEC. 2156. All other property acquired after marriage, by either husband or wife or both, except as provided by sections 14 and 15 of this act is community property.

"SEC. 2160. The husband shall have the entire management and control of the community property, with the like absolute power of disposition thereof, except as hereinafter provided, as of his own separate estate: Provided, That no deed of conveyance or mortgage of a homestead as now defined by law, regardless of whether a declaration thereof has been filed or not, shall be valid for any purpose whatever unless both the husband and wife execute and acknowledge the same as now provided by law for the conveyance of real estate: Provided further, That the wife shall have the entire management and control of the earnings and accumulations of herself and her minor children living with her, with the like absolute power of disposition thereof when said earnings and accumulations are used for the care and maintenance of the family.

"SEC. 2164. Upon the death of the wife the entire community property belongs, without administration, to the surviving husband, except that in case the husband shall have abandoned his wife and lived separate and apart from her without such cause as would have entitled him to a divorce, the half of the community property, subject to the payment of its equal share of the debts chargeable to the estate owned in community by the husband and wife, is at her testamentary disposition in the same manner as her separate property, and in the absence of such disposition goes to her descendants equally, if such descendants are in the same degree of kindred to the decedent; otherwise, according to the right of representation; and in the absence of both such disposition and such descendants, goes to her other heirs at law, exclusive of her husband.

"SEC. 2165. Upon the death of the husband one half of the community property goes to the surviving wife and the other half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the husband, and in the absence of such disposition goes to his surviving children equally, and in the absence of both such disposition and surviving children the entire community property belongs, without administration, to the surviving wife except as hereinafter provided, subject, however, to all debts contracted by the husband during his life that were not barred by the statute of limitations at the time of his death: Provided, however, That the homestead set apart by the husband and wife, or either of them, before his death, and such other property as may be exempt by law from execution or forced sale, shall be set apart for the use of the widow and minor heirs, and if no minor heirs, for the use of the widow. In case of the dissolution of the community by the death of the husband the entire community property is equally subject to his debts, the family allowance, and charges and expense of administration: Provided, however, That if, in the absence of said testamentary disposition the surviving wife and children, and in the absence of such children, the wife shall pay or cause to be paid all indebtedness legally due from said estate, or secure the payment of the same to the satisfaction of the creditors of said estate, then and in such case the said community property shall not be subject to administration."

Section 2166 provides that on dissolution of the marriage on divorce the community property must be equally divided between the parties, except that in case of divorce for adultery or extreme cruelty the guilty party is entitled to only so much thereof as the court may allow. All of the above sections, except 2160, which was amended in 1917, were enacted prior to 1913.

One of the most recent and comprehensive decisions of the Supreme Court of Nevada, interpreting the above statutes and defining the interests of husband and wife in community property, is In re Williams (40 Nev., 241), rendered in 1916. In that case it was sought to collect a tax under the Nevada inheritance tax act of 1913 on the one-half of the community property which passed to the wife on the death of the husband. But the court, after a careful review of the decisions and the constitution of the State, which provided in section 31 of article 4 that "laws shall be passed more clearly defining the rights of the wife in relation as well to her separate property as to that held in common with her husband," said:

"It may, we think, be asserted, supported by the great weight of authority, that the interest of the wife in the community property and her title thereto is no less than that held by the husband, and this interest and title in the wife is not to be regarded as a mere expectancy.

"Concluding, as we do, that the wife's interest in the community property goes to her, not by succession or inheritance, but rather by a right vested in her at all times during marriage, it follows that it is not subject to the law of inheritance tax."

The respective rights of the husband and wife in the community property of the State of Washington are defined by the following sections of Pierce's Washington Code of 1919, all of which were enacted prior to 1913:

"SEC. 1424. The property and pecuniary rights of every married woman at the time of her marriage or afterwards acquired by gift, devise, or inheritance, with the rents, issue, and profits thereof, shall not be subject to the debts or contracts of her husband, and she may manage, lease, sell, convey, encumber, or devise by will such property to the same extent and in the same manner that her husband can property belonging to him.

"SEC. 1428. A wife may receive the wages of her personal labor and maintain an action therefor in her own name and hold the same in her own right, and she may prosecute and defend all action at law for the preservation and protection of her rights and property as if unmarried.

"SEC. 1432. Property and pecuniary rights owned by the husband before marriage and that acquired by him afterwards by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, shall not be subject to the debts or contracts of his wife, and he may manage, lease, sell, convey, encumber, or devise by will such property without the wife joining in such management, alienation, or encumbrance, as fully and to the same effect as though he were unmarried.

"SEC. 1433. Property not acquired or owned, as prescribed in sections 2400 and 2408, acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, or both, is community property. The husband shall have the management and control of community personal property, with a like power of disposition as he has of his separate personal property, except he shall not devise by will more than one-half thereof.

"SEC. 1434. The husband has the management and control of the community real property, but he shall not sell, convey, or encumber the community real estate, unless the wife join with him in executing the deed or other instrument of conveyance by which the real estate is sold, conveyed, or encumbered, and such deed or other instrument of conveyance must be acknowledged by him and his wife: Provided, however, That all such community real estate shall be subject to the liens of mechanics and others for labor and materials furnished in erecting structures and improvements thereon as provided by law in other cases and to liens of judgments recovered for community debts and to sale on execution issued thereon.

"SEC. 1435. Upon the death of either husband or wife one-half of the community property shall go to the survivor, subject to the community debts, and the other half shall be subject to his testamentary disposition of the deceased husband or wife, subject also to the community debts.

"SEC. 1436. In case no testamentary disposition shall have been made by the deceased husband or wife of his or her half of the community property it shall descend equally to the legitimate issue of his, her, or their bodies. If there be no issue of said deceased living or none of their representatives living, then the said community property shall all pass to the survivor, to the exclusion of collateral heirs, subject to the community debts, the family allowance, and the charges and expenses of administration."

It appears to be the settled law of that State that the wife has during coverture, as well as upon the dissolution of the marriage, a vested and definite interest and title in community property, equal in all respects to the interest and title of her husband therein. Leading cases are:

Holyoke v. Jackson, 3 Wash. T., 235; Mable v. Whittaker, 39 Pac., 172; Marston v. Rue, 92 Wash., 129 (159 Pac., 111); Schramm v. Steele, 166 Pac., 634 (97 Wash., 309); Huyvaerts v. Roedtz, 178 Pac., 801.

The statutes of California defining the relative property rights of husband and wife are found in the following sections of the civil code:

"SEC. 162. All property of the wife owned by her before marriage and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, device, or decent, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is her separate property. The wife may, without the consent of her husband, convey her separate property.

"SEC. 163. All property owned by the husband before marriage and that acquired afterward by gift, bequest, devise, or descent, with the rents, issues, and profits thereof, is his separate property.

"SEC. 164. All other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, or both, including real property situated in this State and personal property wherever situated acquired while domiciled elsewhere, which would not have been the separate property of either if acquired while domiciled in this State, is community property; but wherever any property is conveyed to a married woman by an instrument in writing the presumption is that the title is thereby vested in her as her separate property. And in case the conveyance is to such married woman and to her husband, or to her and any other person the presumption is that the married woman takes the part conveyed to her as tenant in common, unless a different intention is expressed in the instrument, and the presumption in this section mentioned is conclusive in favor of a purchaser or encumbrancer in good faith and for a valuable consideration. And in cases where married women have conveyed, or shall hereafter convey, real property which they have acquired prior to May 19, 1889, the husband, or their heirs or assigns of such married women, shall be barred from commencing or maintaining any action to show that said real property was community property, or to recover said real property, as follows: As to conveyances heretofore made from and after one year from the date of the taking effect of this act, and as to conveyances hereafter made from and after one year from the filing for record in the recorder's office of such conveyances, respectively.

"SEC. 172. The husband has the management and control of the community personal property, with like absolute power of disposition other than testamentary as he has of his separate estate: Provided, however, That he can not make a gift of such community personal property, or dispose of the same without a valuable consideration, or sell, convey, or encumber the furniture, furnishings, or fittings of the home, or the clothing or wearing apparel of the wife or minor children that is community, without the written consent of the wife.

"SEC. 172a. The husband has the management and control of the community real property, but the wife must join with him in executing any instrument by which such community real property or any interest therein is leased for a longer period than one year, or is sold, conveyed, or encumbered: Provided, however, That the sole lease, contract, mortgage, or deed of the husband, holding the record title to community real property, to a lessee, purchaser, or encumbrancer, in good faith without knowledge of the marriage relation shall be presumed to be valid; but no action to avoid such instrument shall be commenced after the expiration of one year from the filing for record of such instrument in the recorder's office in the country in which the land is situate.

"SEC. 1401. Upon the death of the wife the entire community property, without administration, belongs to the surviving husband, except such portion thereof as may have been set apart to her by judicial decree, for her support and maintenance, which portion is subject to her testamentary disposition, and in the absence of such disposition goes to her descendants, or heirs, exclusive of her husband.

"SEC. 1402. Upon the death of the husband one-half of the community property goes to the surviving wife, and the other half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the husband, and in the absence of such disposition goes to his descendants equally, if such descendants are in the same degree of kindred to the decedent; otherwise, according to the right of representation; and in the absence of both such disposition and such descendants is subject to distribution in the same manner as the separate property of the husband. In case of the dissolution of the community by the death of the husband the entire community property is equally subject to his debts, the family allowance, and the charges and expenses of administration."

Sections 164 and 172 were amended to read as above in 1917, and 172a was then added. The changes in section 164 then made are underlined. Prior to 1917 section 172 applied to all the community property and was amended only by the insertion of the word "personal." Section 172a imposes a limitation upon the power of the husband to alienate community real property.

While the statutes of California are in some respects similar to the community property laws of the other community property States, the rule established by the highest courts of that State is that during coveture the wife has no vested interest in the community property, her interest therein being a mere expectancy.

In Spreckles v. Spreckles (116 Calif. 339 (1897)) the supreme court of that State held that prior to the amendment of 1891 to section 172 of the Civil Code, forbidding the husband to give away community property without consent of the wife in writing, the code vested in the husband all the elements of absolute ownership of the community property; that the wife's interest was a mere expectancy, and as to all the world except the wife, there was, prior to that amendment, no distinction between the community estate and the separate estate of the husband; and that the amendment could not be construed retroactively so as to deprive the husband of his vested right to dispose by gift of community property acquired prior to the amendment without the consent of the wife.

In 1905 California passed an inheritance tax law, and subsequently the question was raised whether a widow should be compelled to pay such tax on that one-half of the community property that she took on the death of her husband. In the Estate of Moffitt, 153 California, 359 (1908), the Supreme Court of California held that she did, since she had no vested interest in the community estate and took her one-half on the death of her husband as his heir.

This case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States (Moffit v. Kelly, 218 U. S., 400), where the judgment of the lower court was affirmed, the court laying down the rule that the nature and character of the right of the wife in community property for the purpose of taxation is a peculiarly local question, and the determination of the State court in regard thereto is not reviewable by the Supreme Court; and, further, that the law of California of 1905, taxing all property passing by will or intestacy, having been construed by the highest court of that State as applying to the wife's share of the community property, such tax is not in conflict with the contract, due process, or equal-protection clauses of the Constitution.

Subsequently the inheritance tax law of California was amended to provide "that for the purpose of this act" the one-half of the community property which goes to the surviving wife on the death of her husband under the provisions of section 1402 of the Civil Code "shall not be deemed to pass to her as heir to her husband, but shall, for the purpose of this act, be deemed to go, pass, or be transferred to her for valuable and adequate consideration."

It is obvious that this language does not change the rule of community property in the State nor vest in the wife any interest thereto prior to the dissolution of the community; rather it emphasizes the existing rule that the wife has no vested interest in community property.

As to the effect of section 172a of the Civil Code enacted in 1917, it is not to be presumed that the legislature intended by the enactment of same to make so revolutionary a change in the existing rule of property in California as to divest the husband of his ownership in the community property. As was said in Spreckles v. Spreckles, supra, "if a husband can not make a valid transfer of the property for the purpose of depriving his wife of it, that does not show a vested right in her"; and giving the fullest possible effect to the language, unless the wife had a vested interest by virtue of the law as it theretofore existed, which it must be conceded she did not, the operation of the amendment would necessarily be confined to community property acquired after May 23, 1917.

SUMMARY.

Summarizing, it appears that in all of the community-property States except California their own courts have held that the wife has, during the existence of the marriage relation, a vested interest in one-half of the community property. Her rights in the property of the community are perhaps most fully recognized in the State of Washington, where both spouses have testamentary disposition over one-half of the community property, and where in the absence of such disposition it descends to their issue or, in the absence of issue, to the survivor; while the husband is manager of the community estate in Washington he may not sell, convey, or encumber real estate unless the wife join with him in the conveyance; and as was held in Huyvaerts v. Roedtz, ante, and Scramm v. Steels, ante, the separate debt of the husband can not be satisfied out of community property where it is not incurred in connection with the community business nor for the benefit of the community.

In Idaho it is seen that the limitation upon the alienation of the community real property is the same as in Washington. But while the wife's earnings and the rents and profits of her separate estate are community property she is given the management and control of same. The Idaho rule governing the disposition of community property on the death of either spouse is, with minor variations, the same as that of Washington. In neither State is an inheritance tax payable on the one-half of the community that goes to the one spouse on the death of the other.

In Arizona the husband only may dispose of community personal property, but the wife must join him in deeds or mortgages affecting real estate, except unpatented mining claims. One-half of the community property is subject to the testamentary disposition of either spouse, and in absence of such disposition goes to his or her descendants; where there is neither testamentary disposition nor descendants, it is subject to distribution in the same manner as the separate property of the husband. On decree of divorce the court may divide the property as he sees fit, but in the absence of provision for the community property the parties from the date of the decree hold as tenants in common. The courts of Arizona hold that the wife is equal owner with her husband.

In Nevada the husband has the entire management and control of the community property, except that the wife has entire control of her earnings when living separate from her husband. Upon her death the husband takes the whole community estate, except that where he has abandoned her without good cause she may by will dispose of half, and in absence of such disposition it goes to her heirs, exclusive of her husband. On the death of the husband the wife takes half, and the husband may dispose of the other half by will, or it goes to his surviving children; if there is no will and no children survive, the whole goes to the wife without administration, subject to certain provisos. On dissolution of community by divorce for any other ground than adultery or extreme cruelty, the community property must be equally divided between the parties. The wife pays no inheritance tax under the inheritance tax law of Nevada on her interest in community property, the courts holding that she takes not as heir but by a right vested in her at all times during marriage. It is to be noted that the constitution of Nevada recognizes the wife's interest in community property.

In New Mexico, while the husband is manager of the community estate, he may not transfer real property without a valuable consideration without the written consent of his wife, and under certain circumstances the wife may be substituted as manager; prior to 1915 he could not transfer community personal property except for a valuable consideration without her written consent. On dissolution of the community by the death of the wife, the husband takes all except such portion as may have been set aside to the wife by judicial decree, which portion goes to her heirs unless she has disposed of same by will. On death of the husband one half goes to the wife and the other half is subject to testamentary disposition by the husband. If he makes no will one-fourth of his one-half goes to the wife and the remainder to the children. On separation either may petition for division of community property, and after divorce continue to hold as tenants in common where no disposition has been made in the divorce decree. New Mexico has no State inheritance tax act.

In Louisiana the community property comprehends all property acquired during the marriage by either husband or wife except that acquired with separate funds or by inheritance or particular donation, and excepting the earnings of the wife when she is living separate from her husband. The husband is manager of the community, but he may not convey community immovables by gratuitous title, and can not dispose of movables in fraud of the wife. Either spouse may dispose of one-half the community property by will, and the laws governing the descent of such property in the absence of testamentary disposition apply equally to both spouses, the survivor taking the deceased spouse's half by inheritance when there is no will and neither father, mother, nor descendants. As heretofore stated, the survivor pays no inheritance tax on his or her one-half of the community property, but does pay on that part inherited from the deceased spouse.

In California the wife has no power of testamentary disposition of community property, except of such as may have been set aside to her by judicial decree; she takes one-half as heir on the death of the husband; but on the death of the wife the entire community property belongs to the husband without administration. The California courts have held that under the law, as it stood prior to 1917, the wife had no vested interest in community property prior to the dissolution of the marriage; the amendment to the inheritance tax act, being limited to the purposes of that act, could not have had the effect of vesting an interest in her, and had the addition of section 172a had that effect, any amendment of the inheritance tax act would have been unnecessary to exempt her one-half from taxation thereunder. In the case of Blum v. Wardell, now pending before the circuit court of appeals of the ninth circuit, on appeal from the district court of the northern district of California, the application of the Federal estate tax act of 1916 is under consideration.

As appears from my opinion of September 10, 1920, in Texas the control of community property is divided between the husband and wife; in that State on the death of either spouse without issue the survivor takes the whole and where there is issue, takes one-half, the other half going to said issue or their descendants. Under the State inheritance tax law the wife pays no tax on her half of the community property.

In Warburton v. White (176 U. S., 484, 496) the principle was enunciated that where State decisions have interpreted State laws governing property or controlling relations that are essentially of a domestic and State nature the United States Supreme Court will follow the State decisions, if possible to do so, in the discharge of its duties. Also in De Vaughn v. Hutchinson (165 U. S., 566, 570) it was held that to the law of the State in which property is situated we must look for the rules which govern its descent, alienation, and transfer, and for the effect and construction of wills and other conveyances. In United States v. Crosby (7 Cranch., 115) it was held that the title to land can be acquired and lost only in the manner prescribed by the law of the place where same is situated.

In arriving at an answer to the questions propounded by you we are called upon to determine the rules of property in the community property States; we have therefore, pursuant to the rules of the above cases, adopted the rules laid down by the highest courts of the various States. There remains to be determined the application thereto of the income and estate tax provisions of Federal statutes. In my previous opinion it was stated that since in Texas the ownership in one-half of all community property vests in each spouse, whatever is income to the community is income to both. This conclusion applies, therefore, to all States in which community property is held to be vested equally in both spouses.

Section 201 of the revenue act of 1916 and section 401 of that of 1918 impose a tax "upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent" dying after the passage thereof, to be determined as is set forth in the sections following, which are:

"REVENUE ACT OF 1918.

"SEC. 402. That the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated—

"(a) To the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death which, after his death, is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration, and is subject to distribution as part of his estate.

* * * * * * *

"(d) To the extent of the interest therein held jointly or as tenants in the entirety by the decedent and any other person, or deposited in banks or other institutions in their joint names and payable to either or the survivor, except such part thereof as may be shown to have originally belonged to such other person and never to have belonged to the decedent."

Subdivisions (a) and (c) of section 202 of the revenue act of 1916 are identical with subdivisions (a) and (d) of section 402 of the revenue act of 1918 quoted above.

While the community estate of husband and wife has not in the strictest sense all the incidents of a joint estate or an estate in the entirety as they were known at common law, I am convinced that the community estate is for all practical purposes within the language of subdivision (d) of section 402, there being deductible therefrom, in arriving at the net estate of decedent, the one-half interest of the surviving spouse, which may be shown to have originally belonged to such person, and never to have belonged to the decedent.

And even though it should be held that the community estate is not a "joint estate" or an "estate in the entirety" within the meaning of the revenue acts, the one-half interest of the deceased spouse in community property would still be subject to tax under the language of subdivision (a) above.

My answers to your questions are therefore:

(1) That in Washington, Arizona, Idaho, New Mexico, Louisiana, and Nevada, the husband and wife domiciled therein, in rendering separate income tax returns, may each report as gross income one-half of the income which under the laws of the respective States becomes simultaneously with its receipt community property.

(2) In the States mentioned in answer to question one there should be included in gross estate, in computing the estate tax of a deceased spouse, one-half only of the community property of husband and wife domiciled therein.

(3) Neither of the above answers is based upon a statute enacted subsequent to March 1, 1913.

(4) My answers to these questions apply under income and estate tax acts prior to the revenue act of 1918.

Respectfully,

A. MITCHELL PALMER,
Attorney General.

Hon. DAVID F. HOUSTON,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In accordance with department's telegraphic instruction of January 7, 1921, I have the honor to forward herewith a memorandum in regard to American relief work in Latvia and Lithuania.

Esthonia has been reported upon by Consul Albrecht at Reval in his dispatch dated January 24, 1921.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

EVAN E. YOUNG,
Commissioner.

Inclosure: Memorandum.

MEMORANDUM REGARDING THE NEED FOR RELIEF WORK IN LATVIA AND LITHUANIA AND THE WORK OF THIS NATURE WHICH IS NOW BEING CARRIED ON BY AMERICAN RELIEF ORGANIZATIONS.

THE NEED.

A careful investigation as to the actual conditions prevailing throughout Latvia and Lithuania clearly establishes the fact that there is a real and actual need in these countries or Provinces in the matter of relief. The World War, with its aftermath, most seriously and unfavorably affected economic conditions, and the process of rebuilding is certain to be slow and tedious. Riga was formerly an important manufacturing center. Its industrial establishments numbered some 425, including the famous Provodnik Rubber Works, which employed some 25,000 hands. The Russian armies in their retreat evacuated from Latvia all the machinery from these factories and even such foodstuffs, cattle, horses, and so forth, as could be transported. To-day the great majority of these factories are idle, and one of the serious problems of the Latvian authorities is to find employment for idle mechanics and skilled laborers. In the wake of the Great War came the bolshevik invasion and the Bermondt incident, which still further denuded the country and rendered its economic restoration still more difficult. In the farming districts the agricultural industry has been carried on with great difficulty owing to the shortage of horses and cattle and the destruction of many of the homesteads, barns, and outbuildings. The harvest in Latvia last year, which it had been hoped would result in an amelioration of food conditions, proved a very serious disappointment, due largely to the very unfavorable weather which prevailed throughout the country at the time of harvest. A careful survey recently made by the representatives of the American relief administration places the number of children in Latvia to whom assistance should be extended by the European children's fund at over 40,000.

In Lithuania, primarily an agricultural country, there is less need of assistance in the way of relief from foreign countries, but here, again, there is no question that a real need for such assistance does exist, although not to the same extent as in Latvia.

LOCAL RELIEF.

The Latvian and Lithuanian authorities and municipalities are accomplishing a great deal in their efforts to meet this need, but they are, in spite of these efforts, quite unable from lack of funds and materials to cope with the situation without outside assistance. The estimate of the Latvian ministry of labor in the annual budget 1920–21 for relief work totals some 8,000,000 rubles—approximately $50,000. While this may be considered a comparatively small sum when converted into foreign exchange it represents a very material amount in the Latvian budget. The budgets of the various municipalities in Latvia show that some 20 per cent of their revenue is expended for relief purposes, and the same is true, according to official information furnished this office, of the rural communes. Official statistics indicate that the cost of living steadily increased throughout the past year, and in the month of October was some 300 per cent higher than in the month of December, 1919.

AMERICAN RELIEF ORGANIZATIONS OPERATING IN LATVIA AND LITHUANIA.

At the present time the American relief organizations or organizations of that character operating in Latvia and Lithuania are the American Red Cross, the European Children's Fund of the American Relief Administration, the Joint Distribution Committee, and the Y. M. C. A.

THE AMERICAN RED CROSS.

The headquarters of the American Red Cross Commission to western Russia and the Baltic States are located at Riga. This commission operates in Finland, Esthonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. Up to the present time its work has fallen largely under the two heads of medical aid and pure relief work. One of the outstanding features of the work of our Red Cross in this part of the world was its successful fight against a typhus epidemic which raged severely throughout the larger portion of Esthonia last winter. This work was undertaken with characteristic American energy and efficiency and can not be too highly praised. Assistance in the way of supplies has been given by our Red Cross to practically all hospitals throughout the Baltic Provinces. In many instances these hospitals have been entirely equipped and furnished with supplies furnished them by this organization through the generosity of the American people. Large quantities of clothing and food have also been distributed to the needy after a careful investigation had been made of the circumstances of each case. To submit a full report covering the operations past and present is impracticable and probably not necessary, but there can be no doubt that the organization is doing splendid work and that it is a material factor in alleviating suffering and need. While it can not, of course, without the expenditure of greater funds than are at its disposal meet the need entirely, it is nevertheless true that it is an important factor in the meeting of this need and that its work also tends at least to stabilize conditions. While I am not in a position, of course, to pass judgment on the question as to whether or not this organization is administered economically, I might add that so far as one can observe the proper and necessary efforts are made to keep down the overhead charges and to afford the actual relief with as little lost motion and as little unnecessary expense as possible. The officer in charge is Dr. Edward W. Ryan, who has been with the Red Cross for many years and who has had a great deal of experience in this kind of work.

AMERICAN RELIEF ADMINISTRATION, EUROPEAN CHILDREN'S FUND.

This organization operated in Esthonia, Latvia, and Lithuania last winter, but discontinued its work this last summer. Owing to the poor harvests and the suffering which would undoubtedly have ensued to thousands of children throughout these countries, it has recently decided to carry on the work during the remainder of the present winter. This decision means that some 60,000 children in Latvia and Lithuania who would otherwise undoubtedly suffer from undernourishment, will receive material additions to their daily supply of food. This organization operates with a very small American personnel and depends almost entirely on local committees for the necessary assistance in carrying on its work. I believe the administration is carried out in a businesslike and economical manner.

JOINT DISTRIBUTION COMMITTEE.

While the work of the joint distribution committee is largely confined to Jewish sufferers, I am informed by the director of this work for Latvia and Lithuania that it is not entirely a sectarian relief organization and that he has recently contributed to the Latvia Red Cross the sum of 250,000 Latvian rubles to be expended in general relief work. The director informs me that a very important need exists in these two countries among the Jewish people and that a great deal of distress and suffering has been alleviated by the work of this organization. The work in general is divided into two classes, (a) relief and (b) reconstruction. The director states that under the former (relief) they are granting financial assistance to their own local and philanthropical organizations, thus enabling them to buy and distribute food supplies among the poor, grant monthly allowances to widows, pay for the support of orphans, support public kitchens, and distribute clothing. The reconstruction work, according to a letter that I have received from the director, includes the establishment of a central bank in Latvia, with branches in different cities and towns for the purpose of enabling mechanics to obtain small loans on easy terms, thus enabling them to purchase the necessary tools and implements of trade. The banks will also, it is understood, make loans to small merchants, to build houses and homes which have been partially destroyed, to farmers for the purpose of buying seed and agricultural implements, and so forth. The reconstruction work also includes the granting of financial assistance to certain industrial schools where the orphans will be enabled to learn a trade. According to present plans the relief work is to cease on July 1, next, while the reconstruction program will be continued for at least a year longer.

The committee also assists in the forwarding of remittances from people in the United States to relatives and friends in Latvia and Lithuania, and also endeavors to ascertain the whereabouts and welfare of missing relatives. While without detailed information, I am of the opinion that the committee in its operations in Latvia is guided by a due sense of economy and business methods. I have no knowledge on this point as regards the work of the committee in Lithuania, and it is impracticable for me at this time to make a special visit to Kovno for the purpose of obtaining the information desired.

THE Y. M. C. A.

The Y. M. C. A. is operating in Latvia and Esthonia, but has not up to the present undertaken any work in Lithuania. In Latvia its work is largely confined to the soldiers and special attention is paid to physical education. In Latvia it has a very small personnel, but is apparently accomplishing much good. In general its work is along lines with which everyone in the United States is quite familiar. I am without any special knowledge of its operating expenses, but from my knowledge of its work, the small personnel, and so forth, I am of the opinion that its affairs are conducted with due regard to economy.

MERCHANT MARINE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the chairman of the United States Shipping Board, transmitting by direction of the board, for the information of the Senate, (1) copy of resolution adopted by the United States Shipping Board on March 3, 1921; (2) copy of verbatim transcript of hearing given representatives of the International Mercantile Marine Co. on January 27, 1921; (3) copy of agreement between the Commissioners for Executing the Office of Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the Board of Trade (for and on behalf of His Majesty's Government), the International Mercantile Marine Co., and certain British companies, dated August 1, 1903, together with supplementary agreements dated October 1, 1910, and September 2, 1919, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT OF JOINT COMMISSION ON POSTAL SALARIES.

Mr. STERLING. On May 24 last the Joint Commission on Postal Salaries made a preliminary report accompanied by a bill. That bill passed and became a law June 5 last. The commission was continued, and now on behalf of the commission I present the final report of the Joint Commission on Postal Salaries and ask that it may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE BENEFICIARIES.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have been instructed by the Committee on Finance to report back favorably the bill (H. R. 13558) for the purpose of improving the facilities and service of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and of further amending and modifying the war risk insurance act, as amended, known as the Wason bill, and referred to by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. There is no amendment to it, and I have been waiting for two days to secure an opportunity to report the bill and ask for its immediate consideration. I do not think there is anyone opposed to it at all, and, if the Senator from Washington does not object, I ask at this time for its consideration. If there is a word of debate on it, I will say to the Senator, I will withdraw it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It is known as the Wason bill. It is for the decentralization of the agencies to look after the wounded soldiers in 14 districts to be created in the United States. There is not an amendment to it; it has passed the House; and there is no objection to it that I know of.

Mr. POMERENE. Let the bill be read.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent to report the following bill from the Finance Committee. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection to receiving the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the only question now before the Senate.

Mr. POMERENE. I wanted to have it read, so that we may know what we are to vote on.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill which has just been read by title.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to have the bill read. I know nothing about it at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is hereby authorized to establish throughout the United States and its outlying possessions such regional offices, not exceeding 14 in number, and such suboffices as may be deemed necessary in the best interests of the work committed to said bureau.

That there is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $1,000,000 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section. That this section shall be in force and effect for a period not exceeding two years from and after the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General may prescribe, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to receive the war-risk insurance premiums and act for and turn over to the Secretary of the Treasury the money so received, and also he is authorized to receive and transmit to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance applications for reinstatement of lapsed or for converted insurance. In making such collections he is hereby authorized to use postal money orders, postal notes, war-risk insurance coupons, or any other method of collection which may be deemed most expedient and satisfactory.

SEC. 3. That a new section is hereby added to article 2 of the war risk insurance act as amended, to be known as section 212, and to read as follows:

"SEC. 212. The family allowance shall be awarded and paid to any person or persons within class A for the full period defined in section 204 hereof, or for such part of said period as it shall be shown that the necessary relationship existed between such person and an enlisted man in the active military or naval service, in cases where deductions from the pay of the enlisted man for compulsory allotment have not been made but the family allowance was applied for during the service of the enlisted man, notwithstanding the fact that such enlisted man has died in or been discharged from the service: Provided, That compulsory allotment has not been waived or that exemption therefrom has not been heretofore or shall not be hereafter granted. Any awards or adjustments heretofore made which are inconsistent with the provisions of this section may, upon application, be reopened and made to conform herewith."

SEC. 4. That section 313 of the war risk insurance act as amended is hereby amended by adding thereto, immediately following subsection (2) thereof, a new subsection, to be known as subsection (2a), and to read as follows:

"(2a) That the Bureau of War Risk Insurance is hereby authorized to pay the beneficiary or other person or persons in whose name an action may have been commenced or prosecuted fees and mileage, the same as is now paid and allowed to witnesses in the United States courts, in going to, remaining at, and returning from place of trial, and without any regard to whether the action, if any, is brought or prosecuted in a court of the United States or some other court.

"In all cases of assignment of causes of action under this section, whether the assignment be heretofore or hereafter made, where it shall appear to the director to be to the best interest of the beneficiary so to do, the director, acting for and in the name of the United States, may assign the cause of action back to the beneficiary or to his personnal representatives."

SEC. 5. That the Bureau of War Risk Insurance shall relieve from the payment of premiums on renewable term insurance the following persons, to wit: (a) Those who are receiving hospital care under said bureau, during the period they are receiving such care; (b) those who are receiving vocational training pursuant to the vocational rehabilitation act, during the period of such training; and (c) those who are temporarily totally disabled by reason of an injury or disease entitling them to compensation, during the period of such total disability.

That, in addition to the care, treatment, and appliances now authorized by law, said bureau shall also provide, without charge therefor, hospital, dental, medical, and surgical care and treatment and prosthetic appliances for all honorably discharged commissioned officers and enlisted men, disabled by reason of any wound or injury received or disease contracted while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty: Provided, That application for such care and treatment and appliances provided for in this paragraph shall be made within one year from the date of the man's discharge or from the date this act goes into effect, whichever is the later.

SEC. 6. That whenever a claim under United States Government life insurance (converted insurance) is to be paid because of the total permanent disability of the insured, such payment shall be made out of the military and naval insurance appropriation. And in cases where the insured has been relieved of the payment of premiums, such premiums shall be paid by the United States into the United States Government life-insurance fund out of said military and naval insurance appropriation.

To meet the costs of the provisions of this section there shall be transferred each year from the military and naval insurance appropriation into the United States Government life-insurance fund an amount equal to 8 per cent of the premiums paid during the previous fiscal year for United States Government life insurance (converted insurance). If such amount should prove to be insufficient to meet the costs of the provisions of this section an additional amount shall be transferred therefor.

SEC. 7. That section 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend and modify the war risk insurance act," approved December 24, 1919, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 19. That the amount of the monthly installments of allotment and family allowance, compensation, or insurance which has heretofore or which may hereafter become payable under the provisions of the war risk insurance act, but which has not been paid prior to the death of the person entitled to receive the same, shall be paid to the executor or administrator of such deceased person, but if no demand in writing has been made by an executor or administrator, then, in cases where the amount is $400 or less, the same shall be paid in the following order of precedence: First, to the widow or husband; second, if decedent left no widow or husband, or the widow or husband be dead at the time of settlement, then to the children and their issue per stirpes; third, if no widow or husband, children, or issue of children, then to the father and mother in equal parts; fourth, if either the father or mother be dead, then to the one surviving; fifth, if there be no widow or husband, child, issue of children, father or mother at the date of settlement, then to the brothers and sisters and the children of the deceased brothers and sisters, per stirpes: Provided, That any unpaid allotment shall be paid, upon demand, to the person who made such allotment: And provided further, That this section shall not be so construed as to prevent payment from the amount due the decedent's estate of his funeral expenses, provided a claim therefor is presented by the person or persons who actually paid the same, before settlement by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance."

SEC. 8. That the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be deemed necessary in order to promote good conduct on the part of persons who are receiving care or treatment in hospitals as patients of said bureau during their stay in such hospitals. Penalties for the breach of such rules and regulations may extend to a forfeiture by the offender of such portion of the compensation payable to him, not exceeding three-fourths of the monthly installment per month for three months, for a breach committed while receiving treatment in such hospital, as may be prescribed by such rules and regulations.

SEC. 9. That all acts or parts of acts or amendments in conflict with this act are hereby repealed or modified to conform herewith.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the bill is going to add to the efficiency of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, then I am for it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that we hope it will.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. POMERENE. I merely desire to ask two questions. My correspondence has indicated a great deal of dissatisfaction with the administration of that bureau. I do not pretend to say who is responsible for it or what is responsible for it, but I should like the Senator from Utah or some one else who has studied the proposition to tell the Senate wherein the bill is expected to increase the efficiency.

In the second place, I notice that there seem to be certain affirmative provisions with reference to the allotment of the amount which is to be paid, and I should like to be informed as to the respects in which the bill changes the existing law.

Mr. SMOOT. In the first place, I desire to state that to-day the Public Health Service has 14 regional offices throughout the United States and the Federal Board for Vocational Training has 14 regional boards throughout the United States. This bill establishes similar offices for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

As to efficiency, I will say to the Senator that we hope to obviate in the future what has been a crying evil in the past. For instance, I know a case where a soldier returned and was at home. The War Risk Bureau took it upon themselves, I do not know why, to write to his supposed widow, inclosing blanks for her to fill out claiming the insurance of $10,000 for the loss of her husband. The "widow" wrote back and said "My husband is not dead; he is here with me. He has returned from the Army and he is not even an enlisted man. He has been honorably discharged." When the Bureau of War Risk Insurance got that letter, they wrote her another one and said she must be mistaken, and further insisted. There were four letters exchanged, and the matter was never settled until photostatic copies of all the letters were sent to me and I took them down to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and convinced them that the man was alive.

If there had been a regional office, that question would have been settled at once, because the man would have gone there and had it fixed. But that is only one case. The soldier many times lives way out in the West or down in the South. The regional office of the Federal Board for Vocational Education can see the conditions existing there. The regional office of the Public Health Service can see that the man ought to be granted relief by the Government, but there is no one there to take the initiative, because that is for the War Risk Insurance to do, and there is no ex-soldier who can take the vocational education unless it comes through the War Risk Insurance Bureau. Therefore the soldiers of the country feel that they ought to have some one on hand to whom they can appeal to take charge of their cases and see that they are acted upon within a reasonable time.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has referred to a case which came under his own observation. I had a similar case during the war, in which a young man whom I know very well, recently married, his mother living, had an allotment made to his wife, which she had not received. The son and husband was a very dutiful son and husband, who wrote home every week to his mother and wife, and when the wife did not receive her allotment she wrote the bureau and asked why. The report came back to her that her husband was dead, but fortunately the wife and mother both had received letters from him after the date when he was supposed to have died.

I do not understand that sort of thing. Is this a bureau where these wedding trousseaus are being made?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I will say to the Senator it was not in this bureau, but it was in the Treasury Department. As some anonymous letters I have received say it is not true, I will say that if some one from the Treasury Department will write me and ask me in what bureau it was and the names of the employees, I shall be very glad to give them.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Of course, the Senator quite understands that the decentralization system has been applied to the vocational training board and has been quite successful. We have all heard the same complaint from wounded soldiers that the educational feature and the rehabilitation feature of the vocational board were not being handled properly. This system has been applied there, and now through the urgent request of the officers of the American Legion Congress is asked to apply the same system to the War Risk Insurance Bureau in order that more efficiency may be created there and that the benefits of the War Risk Insurance Bureau may be brought to the soldier rather than compelling the soldier to come to Washington to seek the benefits here.

Let me say to the Senator that nothing could be more disorganized at the present time or more unsatisfactory than the War Risk Insurance Bureau. This is a sincere effort, backed by the American Legion, to get more efficiency and better service.

Mr. SMOOT. The only question I would raise as to the statement made by the Senator is that two years ago the Bureau of War Risk Insurance was even worse than it is now. There has to be a clean up in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. The United States soldiers of the World War are going to see that it is cleaned up if we do not do it.

Mr. POMERENE. I have had no opportunity to study the proposed legislation. It has just been reported. All that I am interested in is increasing the efficiency, and if I have the assurance of the committee that in their judgment it is going to do that, I am convinced.

Mr. SMOOT. I will assure the Senator of that fact.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I hope the motion of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to postpone the consideration of the naval appropriation bill may be withdrawn. If it shall not be, then I hope it may be defeated. I do not share in the fears expressed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that there is not time to vote upon this bill finally in the Senate and for the House to have an opportunity to pass upon it. It seems to me from observation in the Senate and from my familiarity with the discussion here that a decisive—about a two-thirds—majority of the Senate is in favor of the passage of the bill. I favor its passage without any reduction in the amount of appropriations proposed by the amendments reported by the committee. I believe there is a decided majority of the Senate in favor of the passage of the bill with the amendments as reported. I think every Senator here has already made up his mind about what his action should be and what his vote shall be, and if the bill can come to a vote I see no reason why it should not be passed by a large majority. I understand the committee are even willing to make some substantial concessions on some of the proposed amendments, and I am confident if that is done there will be a great majority in favor of the passage of the bill. I therefore hope the Senate may be given an opportunity to vote upon its final passage.

I regard the measure as the most important yet to be determined by this session of Congress. I am not an alarmist; neither am I a prophet. I do not claim that I am able to look into the future "far as the human eye can see," but I am acquainted with the present, and all of us can recall the recent past. I think it is also true that "coming events cast their shadows before," and in view of the conditions existing and in view of the past we all can appreciate what may probably happen in the future.

I believe it is imperatively necessary that this bill shall become a law at this session of Congress.

Mr. President, when I came into the Senate the World War was raging in Europe; the war clouds lowered about this country of ours. We had just concluded a presidential campaign in which the Democratic Party won with its candidate with the slogan, "He kept us out of war." Shortly thereafter our neutral position became intolerable, and the Nation was plunged into war. We mobilized the man power, the wealth, the resources of the Nation. We got ready for the great struggle. We put into our Army 4,800,000 of our young men. We sent 2,000,000 of them across the sea, and there upon the battle fields of France that mighty Army, under command of our own great Gen. Pershing, set the Stars and Stripes highest among the standards of the nations and demonstrated in the face of the battling hosts of the world the incomparable superiority of the American soldier and the invincible prowess of the American Nation.

Senators, you will remember that during that stressful period it was thought by our enemies over yonder that we would not be able to carry our soldiers across the sea in sufficient numbers to make our power felt before the Allies had been conquered, but they reckoned without their host. We established great shipyards and began building ships; we bought ships, we borrowed ships, we leased ships, and some were allocated to us by our allies, and so we were able to transport our Army overseas. With this fleet so organized we were able to carry overseas 336,000 men a month, and the last month of the war we carried 800,000 tons of munitions and supplies across to the other side for maintenance of our armies. These feats never have been equaled in all the history of the world.

The fighting has ceased; our Army has been brought home and demobilized. It had been reduced, at the beginning of this session, to 240,000 men. I thought the Army should not be reduced below that number until the conditions of the world became better, more settled. There came a question about the size of Army that should be maintained. The question as to whether the number should 150,000 or 175,000 men. Believing all the time it should be retained at its former strength, 240,000, and not having an opportunity to vote for it as it stood, I voted for the larger number, 175,000.

We have finally agreed upon the maintenance of an Army of that size. It may be sufficient to take care of the condition as it is; but the question now is as to proper appropriations for the Navy. The appropriation carried in the pending bill, in my opinion, is not too large. We have taken action so far as appropriations for the Army are concerned.

Our Army acquitted itself with glory upon the fields of France. The fighting has ceased; we have demobilized our Army to a great extent; but we have not yet concluded a peace with our enemies. We are still at war with Germany, so far as the legal aspect of the case is concerned. The condition of the world is still difficult, disturbed, unsettled, and I believe nothing would conduce more to the establishment of quiet, of a lasting peace, nothing would have a more wholesome and salutary effect upon the conditions now existing, than the passage by the Senate of this bill providing for the carrying on of the construction program of our Navy, providing for a navy that will be equal to any contingency that may arise in the future and able to protect America's interest on the seas in all parts of the world.

I do not know that we are in any especially great danger, notwithstanding we are still at war. The trouble is now across the sea from us. I do not know what may come to pass, but notwithstanding I am no prophet, it appears to me there is a danger and a menace to the United States in the conditions which now obtain. I look for two wars within the next 50 years, with two of the great allied powers, unless they shall both develop in one within 20 years, wherein the United States will be put to the exercise of all the power at its command. When that time shall come, if it must come, we ought to be prepared; and there is no way that we can be prepared adequately except by the continuation of our naval program and by the keeping up of the construction of a navy that will be able to protect and defend our rights upon all the seas.

There has been much said about our participation in the World War. Who won the war? The nations of the world will never agree, nor do we insist, that American forces won the World War, but all nations must admit, as all our people know, that the war was lost to the Allies until America entered into it; that our entry changed defeat into victory.

Peace has not been established. It may be said, "Oh, well, we recently passed a resolution here inviting the principal nations of the world to a conference where they may agree upon terms for the establishment and preservation of peace and for disarmament of the nations." Yes; we have passed that kind of a resolution, we have agreed to that character of an invitation, and I hope some good may come of it, but that invitation will have more force, more potency, if we continue our building program and make our Navy adequate to our needs and for our own protection until the proposed conference shall have been held. Until it shall have been finally agreed upon what shall be done for the preservation of the peace of the world hereafter, until that time shall come—it now seems far distant—it behooves the United States of America to look first after the interests of our own great country and to be prepared for any eventuality. It can not be done by a discontinuance of our naval-construction program. I believe that the naval appropriation bill is the most important legislation yet unfinished, and I hope that the Senator in charge of the bill will insist upon a final vote upon the bill during this session of Congress and that it may be enacted into law.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am anxious that the naval appropriation bill shall be voted upon and disposed of. I do not sympathize—I am speaking generally when I say that—with the increases provided by the Senate amendments. The House bill makes appropriations of over $396,000,000, to which the Senate committee has added another $100,000,000. The members of the Senate committee are pressing their amendments; they seek to point out the immediate necessity for this legislation; but I want to submit to the Senator in charge of the bill—and I should like to have his attention, if I can, for a moment—that he has complained because there have been a good many speeches which seemed to him to be of a dilatory character. If I sense correctly the situation in the Senate, if the committee would be content to accept the House bill, so far as the amounts are concerned, there would be but little difficulty in getting the bill to a final vote. The difficulty is that the Senate committee insist upon adding $100,000,000 to the amount already provided for in the House bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, is not the proper way to decide the question which the Senator from Ohio is presenting to proceed to take up the various items of appropriation contained in the bill, open them up for amendment, and to have a vote of the Senate on them?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly, that is true. And it could have been done before this, so far as I am concerned. I shall only occupy the floor for a few moments.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not complaining about the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I understand that, but there has been a good deal of complaint on both sides about the other side occupying too much time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was speaking upon the merits of the proposition the Senator was making, and not complaining about his presenting it. He says that there could be a vote if the House bill could be adopted. The way to reach that question is to vote down the Senate committee amendments, if in the opinion of the Senate they should be defeated.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well; there is some truth in that position, and I hope that the Senator will press his request for an unanimous-consent agreement a little later on.

Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senate committee in its fear that war is about to be renewed. I am not alarmed because a few naval or military officers go into the confines of a committee room and there point out the dangers which they anticipate. Some of them may be real; some of them may be the result of diseased imaginations. I think we are afflicted with a new disease—"Japanitis." I do not think that Japan or England want war any more than we do. I think I understand the American people, and I am sure they could not be persuaded to engage in a war of aggression, and yet we are better equipped for war than either one of the other nations except, perhaps, for Great Britain's Navy. But no one seriously believes there is going to be war with Great Britain. I am convinced that the American people will fall short of their duty unless they immediately take steps looking to some agreement for disarmament.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] the other day urged his amendment. In a modified form it was presented by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] and agreed to. I was glad of it; I was one of those who voted for it; but I have another amendment that I am going to propose a little later on. It has already been printed and is on the table, and it is not intended in the least to control the discretion of the incoming Executive, but it is intended to be supplemental to the Borah-Edge amendment. It provides, in substance, that the President, in his discretion, may suspend our construction program as provided for in the pending bill, in whole or in part, for six months, in order to enable him to open up negotiations with Japan and Great Britain and such other nations as he may deem proper, and, if an agreement is reached, that then he may have the power to regulate or control our naval program so as to meet the agreement which may be made.

Of course, I understand very fully that this plan will not meet the approval of those who are going to insist upon having the greatest Navy in the world. I am not opposed to a Navy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Idaho, who, as the Senator from Ohio says, is the author of the limitation of armaments conference amendment, stated on the floor of the Senate that if that conference did not result in an actual limitation of armaments, if any nation was going to control the seas, he believed that nation should be the United States.

Mr. POMERENE. There is no difference in that respect between the Senator from Idaho and myself, if I understand him.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood that the Senator was just stating a different proposition.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator did not wait until I completed my statement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will permit me just one other word, the Senate Committee on Naval Affiairs in a separate report, after all the investigation that the committee or any other commitee would be capable of making, and the examination of the highest military and naval authorities in the world, reported only in favor of a Navy equal to that of any other one nation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I understand that fully; and the Senator has seldom heard Army officers or Navy officers declaring in favor of a reduction of armaments. When it comes to anticipating future world troubles, I will trust my judgment just as well as I can trust theirs. I think that I can look upon that subject from the standpoint of the civilian and am as certain of being right as the military or naval man, looking at it from his standpoint. Assuming that we are going to have a war, I am quite willing to surrender my entire judgment to the naval and military officials; but there has not been a period within the last 20 years, to my certain knowledge, in which there has not been constant pressing of the increase of military establishments, and when there is occasion for it I am ready to go along with the leaders to the limit. For long years we have taken the position that we were the leaders in insisting upon the arbitration of international disputes, and I am not ready to surrender our leadership now.

The treaty of Versailles has fallen by the wayside for the time being at least; but every leading statesman in this country, so far as I now know, for long years has had in mind the limitation of armaments, military and naval. We have pressed it. We have deplored the fact that we are compelled to levy uncounted millions of taxes upon our people in order to maintain these armaments. Have we been sincere when we have been making these professions? Does any one see any immediate danger of war now?

My good friend the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] has said that within the next 20 years we will have to fight Great Britain or Japan. I do not know what his position is going to be among the prophets of the country, but I think I can see as far into the future as he can. If we are in favor of disarmament, if Great Britain is in favor of disarmament, if Japan is in favor of disarmament, then surely nothing can be lost by suspending our program of naval construction for the period of six months, if in the judgment of the new President he thinks that is the proper course to pursue. One thing is certain, that in six months' trial we can determine whether Japan and Great Britain are in earnest or not, and we can determine whether the United States is in earnest or not. That is the point with me.

Of course, if the enemy were at our door, if some nation was going to declare war against us in the next few months, I would say not only have an appropriation of $500,000,000 for naval purposes, but multiply it by two or three or four, if necessary; but when we meet in chambers like this, and Senators come forward and tell me of the imminent danger, I am afraid that they are in the frame of mind that James Whitcomb Riley was when he said:

The goblins 'll get you if you don't watch out.

Mr. President, the House bill provides for an appropriation of $396,000,000. I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] the other day said that his best information—and it accords with my own—was that Japan, for her entire naval program, had appropriated 246,000,000 yen; in other words, about $123,000,000, in round numbers. Of this amount, I saw a statement some time ago to the effect that something like sixty or seventy million dollars was to be used for new naval construction. The House bill provides an appropriation of three times the amount that the Japanese Government provides for this year. Japan's navy is not much more than half as strong as ours, and the Senate committee is not satisfied by multiplying the Japanese appropriations by three as the House bill does. They want to multiply them by four.

Are we justified in this? Can we not suspend construction just a little while? No real effort has been made to bring about disarmament with either of these naval powers. Do we distrust ourselves and our own good intentions when we speak of disarmament; shall we preach disarmament and practice greater armament?

Sometimes we say we do not trust the words of the statesmen of other nations. When we ourselves say one thing and do another, can we blame the statesmen of other nations if they do not take our word at 100 per cent? That is the situation.

I am not disturbed about all of this cry of war in the immediate future.

Let me go a step further, if I may.

In the treaty of Versailles we declared against universal compulsory military training in the German Empire, and the thing which we condemned in the German Empire was the thing that was advocated for the United States by some of these very men who were objecting to universal compulsory military training in Germany. When we said we wanted peace and we wanted some council or league of nations or association of nations to bring about arbitration, we insisted upon increasing our standing Army to 500,000, and it was with difficulty that we reduced it to two hundred and eighty-odd thousand, as I now recall, and still later to 175,000.

For these reasons, in addition to what I have said with regard to the upbuilding of the Navy, it seems to me that we ought not only to be willing to adopt the amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Idaho, but we ought to go further, and apply that principle to the new construction which is provided for under the pending bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I only wanted to ask the Senator if he was certain that the treaty of Versailles prohibited compulsory military training. Was it not compulsory service that the treaty prohibited?

Mr. POMERENE. I think I was accurate, but it may be that the Senator is correct. I shall be very glad to look at the treaty.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not make an assertion about it. I am asking for information. Frankly, I do not remember, myself.

Mr. POMERENE. If I can not find it just now, I will get it in a moment and insert it in the RECORD.

Mr. President, I indulge the hope that we can get a final vote upon these amendments so that the bill may pass, and at the proper time I shall offer the amendment to which I referred a little while ago. I understand that under the rule of procedure the Senate amendments must be acted upon first, and as soon as they are out of the way I shall present the other amendment.

I have now the language to which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] referred, and I will read it.

Article 173 of the treaty of peace with Germany declares—

Universal compulsory military service shall be abolished in Germany. The German Army may only be constituted and recruited by means of voluntary enlistments.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the Sixty-sixth Congress will come to an end to-morrow. Its record will then be closed and its deliberations and proceedings will pass into history. This Congress has been one of the most important in the history of our Government in the great and vital questions which it has considered. The Senate has had many important measures, of which it has sole jurisdiction, before it. The German treaty has occupied the time of the Senate to a greater extent than any other measure that it has considered. The covenant of the League of Nations, constituting Part I of the treaty and the proposition presented—that the United States should become a member of that league—was the particular part that engaged the attention of the Senate. In my opinion this proposition concerned the sovereignty and independence of our Government and the peace, tranquillity, and happiness of the American people more than any measure that the Senate was ever called upon to act. The weeks and months of consideration and the exhaustive debates in the Senate upon the various questions arising, evidences the seriousness and importance of the measure more than I can express in words. When I first read the treaty I was deeply impressed with the consequences that would befall our country if the Senate in the exercise of its constitutional powers should approve the treaty and commit the United States to the tremendous obligations contained in the covenant of the League of Nations, and my conclusion was that it should not be done. Therefore, from the time the treaty was considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which I was and am a member, to the day it was finally rejected by the Senate, March 19, 1920, I opposed its approval with all the earnestness and ability I possessed. I fully recognized that while the Constitution gave the Executive the sole power to negotiate treaties that in the same clause it conferred upon the Senate the unlimited power, in the exercise of its calm and deliberate judgment of what was best for our Government and our people to approve or reject such treaties so negotiated. I exercised the power that was vested in me as a United States Senator in accordance with my judgment, my conscience, and my duty to my country. I had no other motive and was moved by no other impulse or influence than to do my duty as I saw it.

When the treaty was first brought from France by President Wilson and presented to the Senate for its advice and consent, or, in other words, its approval, without which it could not be ratified, public opinion seemed to favor it. The people were tired of war and they were struck with the alluring proposition to abolish war and perpetuate peace throughout the world. Many formed their opinions without reading the treaty or considering its provisions. This was the condition in the State of Tennessee, which I have the honor in part to represent in this body. When I announced my opposition to it by my votes in committee and in this Chamber a part of the public press of my State and quite a large number of individuals, especially those who love the limelight and seize upon opportune occasions to assault public officers in order to bask in it, criticized me severely. A few demanded that I resign. There were many others who differed with me, not fully understanding the measure, but who did not impugn my motives or challenge my integrity or my loyalty to the Democratic Party, of which I have always been a member, or my integrity as a Senator. They recognized I had a great and solemn duty to perform under an official oath and they accorded to me the right to exercise that duty according to my judgment and conscience as freely as they exercised their indisputable right to form their own conclusions. While there was a gradual change in public sentiment, as the questions were better understood, favorable to my position, those who desired to continue in the public gaze, enjoying the notoriety they had acquired by attacking me, were zealous and active in their efforts to have me condemned, not hesitating to misrepresentation of the provisions of the covenant and my record in regard to the same in accomplishing their purpose.

The Democratic Party of my State called a convention to meet in Nashville upon June 8 to select delegates to the Democratic national convention, to meet in San Francisco, and adopt a platform in relation to State matters. The governor of the State was a candidate in the Democratic primary, to be held in August, to nominate his successor, and he desired an indorsement of his administration by the convention, presumably to give him an advantage over his competitors in the primary. The county conventions selecting the delegates were slimly attended, as the people could not be interested in the selection of delegates to the national convention. In some instances not more than a dozen were present, and generally a majority of them were the friends of the governor, and the delegates were so selected that when the convention met at Nashville the most of them were his friends. The governor had announced himself for the League of Nations and the maintenance of the leadership of President Woodrow Wilson. Those who were leading the assault upon me were present at the convention and controlled it. A resolution was adopted and made part of the platform which condemned my record concerning the League of Nations, and instructed me to reverse my course and favor the German treaty as presented by the President. A few days after the convention I gave out a statement to the people of Tennessee, justifying, as I conceived, my opposition to the League of Nations, challenging the power of the convention to instruct me to support it, and announcing my determination to continue my opposition to it so long as I should remain in the Senate. This statement was published by practically all the daily press of Tennessee, but to this day the facts therein contained and the soundness of my reasons for my course have not been successfully challenged.

Mr. President, before the close of this Congress I desire to complete the record of my course as a Senator from Tennessee in opposing this treaty by having my statement to the people of my State made part of its records, and I now ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The request of the Senator was granted, and the statement is as follows:

"The Democratic convention, which met in Nashville on June 8 for the purpose of appointing delegates to the Democratic national convention at San Francisco to nominate candidates for President and Vice President, adopted a platform concerning National and State affairs which contained special reference to my course as a United States Senator in opposing the United States becoming a member of the League of Nations provided for in the German treaty and thereby abandoning its traditional policy proclaimed by Washington, and followed by every President of the United States since his day, against the United States forming entangling alliances and meddling with the political affairs of the empires and kingdoms of Europe and Asia.

"The platform, as reported by all the members of the committee on resolutions, contained a declaration favoring the 'League of Nations without reservations or amendments that will impair the beneficial effects.'

"THE MINORITY REPORT.

"Three members of the committee made a minority report, which was adopted after a motion to table it was voted down and made a part of the platform, as follows:

"'We expressly disagree with and dissent from the action and record of our senior Senator, JOHN K. SHIELDS, on every step he has taken with reference to the treaty of peace and League of Nations, and express our humiliation at the association he has formed with Senator LODGE and associates with reference to the League of Nations, not for the purpose of unkind criticism or harsh judgment at the action of our senior Senator in these respects but for the purpose of reserving to ourselves the fundamental rights of every American, here and now, to instruct him as to our will and wish regarding the covenant of nations and treaty of peace. This instrument is still pending before the Senate, and Senator SHIELDS, still being a Member of that body, will be called upon to take further action with reference thereto, and therefore we instruct him, as it is our highest privilege to do, to reverse his action on this proposition and in the future to faithfully sustain the adoption of the League of Nations and the treaty of peace, as written and presented, without amendments or reservations.'

"Candor to the people of Tennessee and justice to those patriotic Democrats who are opposed to the United States becoming a member of the League of Nations, and myself, seem to require that I make a statement concerning my opposition to the league, the causes which produced the condemnatory resolution, and my future attitude toward the covenant.

"CONFIDENCE IN PEOPLE.

"I believe in the great principles of representative government. I recognize my absolute responsibility to the people of Tennessee. I have the greatest confidence in their combined wisdom and their loyalty to their Government. When possible, under the obligations of my oath of office, I will always conform to their views and execute their will. I firmly believe in the great and fundamental principles of the Democratic Party, of which I have been a member all my life, and it will always be a pleasure for me to be governed by its expressed will consistent with the vital interests and Constitution of our Government, to which I owe my first duty and allegiance.

"I believe that when a candidate for office makes promises or commits himself upon issues presented in an election, primary or general, in which he is chosen, he should honestly and faithfully comply with them or retire from office. But when questions arise after his election he must form his own conclusions, exercise his independent judgment, and have the courage to stand by and defend them. When great issues are presented in the United States Senate, Senators must act upon their deliberate judgment. The man who has not the ability and the courage to do so is unfit for that great office and to represent the people of a great State. He can not consult all his people, and he should not be governed by the opinions and wishes of a minority of what is best for the majority.

"While the condemnatory resolution, as I am informed—for I was not present—was passed in haste, bitterness, and confusion, I will speak without passion and with that mature deliberation which the great questions involved deserve and demand.

"The condemnation of a convention of my party, regardless of whether it was representative or fairly conducted, I frankly admit, is painful to me, although I know that this was the chief object of those promoting it, and my admission will be the sum of their gratification. What I say is not intended to be offensive to the convention as a whole or to any fair and impartial member of the Democratic Party. I love my State and the great party which controls it more than words can express. I have just cause for my affection. It has honored me more highly than any living Tennessean. I have trusted the people and they have trusted me. I have never appealed to them in vain. I have, for a period of 20 years of public service, kept faith with them and served them to the best of my ability. I will never intentionally violate or abuse their confidence.

"NOT PARTISAN DOCUMENT.

"When the German treaty, containing the covenant of the League of Nations, was first presented to the United States Senate the President proclaimed it to be an American measure for the advancement of civilization, and denounced anyone who would consider it from a partisan or political standpoint. He so represented it to a Republican Senate when presented for approval and in his many addresses throughout the country.

"The League to Enforce Peace, an organization formed by Hon. William H. Taft and other prominent men, most of them Republicans, advocated it and spent nearly a million dollars popularizing it with the public press and the people.

"The press and the people of Tennessee of both parties received it as an American policy and many favored its approval. Judge Edward T. Sanford, United States district judge, Hon. T. A. Wright, and other Republicans were more prominent than Democrats in speaking for it and urging that it be ratified.

"NOT A PRIMARY-ELECTION ISSUE.

"When I was nominated in August, 1918, and elected in November of the same year the League of Nations was not an issue and was not discussed. The provisions of its covenant, as afterwards drafted by Gen. Jan Christien Smuts, a British subject, in December, 1913, were unknown, and I could not and did not pledge myself to support them. They were first known to the American people when the President presented the final draft of the treaty to the United States Senate in June, 1919. They involved great questions of constitutional law and called for the exercise of judicial construction and judgment. Their approval meant a change in the policy of this country in its foreign relations, promulgated and religiously adhered to by our greatest statesmen from the beginning of our Government. I was free to examine them and exercise my independent judgment concerning their validity and the policy of approving them, and it was my duty to do so. I discharged this duty under my official oath in the interest of my country as I saw it and without regard to the consequences of my action upon my personal or political fortunes.

"MISREPRESENTED BY PRESS.

"When I announced my opposition to the covenant, the public press grossly misrepresented and denounced me, and the storm of malice and fury of my political enemies beat upon my devoted head. Thousands of our best people, many without reading the covenant or investigating its provisions, followed the President and approved the condemnation of me. The press and my enemies made no effort to answer the arguments I presented in the Senate in support of my position. Their sole argument was that I should have followed the views of the President, without regard to what I, in my honest judgment, thought was right and my duty to my country. The facts and the fearful obligations proposed to be assumed by the American people under the covenant were suppressed and withheld from the public.

"When the debate in the Senate called attention to the unconstitutionality of some of the provisions of the covenant, the great dangers to the American people that lurked in others, and the startling abandonment of the foreign policy of our country, it became apparent that the treaty, without reservations to the covenant, would not be approved by the necessary two-thirds of the Senators, and then for the first time the effort to make it a political issue was launched.

"The Democratic National Committee, in violation of its usages and authority, passed a resolution favoring the league, and soon thereafter the Democratic committee of Tennessee passed a similar resolution.

"Gov. Roberts, in his announcement for the nomination in the Democratic primary, contrary to the practice of governors to confine their activities to State affairs, announced himself in strong terms for the maintenance of the leadership of President Wilson and all of his policies, including the League of Nations, and when our county conventions were held, I am informed, an organized effort was made to select delegates friendly to the governor and favorable to the league.

"LEAGUE BEFORE CONVENTION.

"When the State convention met, Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT, the temporary chairman, delivered an eloquent and dignified address eulogizing President Wilson and the League of Nations.

"Then a telegram from the President to the convention was read as follows:

"'Permit me, through you, to extend greetings to the loyal Democracy of Tennessee, which has been tested in war and in peace, never in vain, and to express the sincere confidence that, in the struggle which is to come, it may never falter nor fail.

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.'

"Hon. Jas. B. Frazier, a former Senator, who cherishes the vain hope that he may again fill that place shared in by himself alone, delivered a prepared speech, again eulogizing the President and his league and condemning me for opposing the covenant.

"When the minority report was presented and a motion promptly made to lay it upon the table, the permanent chairman, contrary to well-established parliamentary law that such a motion is not debatable, recognized another delegate from Chattanooga who delivered an abusive tirade against me which he had previously delivered in the county convention over which the permanent chairman had also presided, and the debate was then closed without an opportunity for any delegate who was opposed to the resolution to be heard.

"VOTE ON MINORITY REPORT.

"About 1,200 of the 1,500 votes of the convention, many of them obtained by the counties being under the unit rule, were cast against the motion to table, and the resolution was made part of the platform, amid turmoil and bitterness, with a total absence of the deliberation a great governmental question, vitally affecting the interest of the American people, demanded. I made no effort to control the county conventions or the action of the State convention, and the bitter opposition to the resolution came from those delegates who were opposed to the League of Nations, or to the condemnatory resolution against me, prompted by their patriotism, sense of fair play, and justice.

"I might well say that the resolution engineered and passed under these conditions does not express the deliberate will of the 300,000 Democrats of Tennessee, but I will not evade a direct response to it for this reason.

"The treaty containing the covenant is not before the Senate, as erroneously stated in the resolution, but was returned to the President March 19 last, and now lies among the archives of the Department of State.

"It is inconceivable that the President will be guilty of the supreme folly of returning it to the present Senate, which will not be changed in membership until after his term of office expires. It has been rejected three times, the last being upon the request of the President to grant him power to take a mandate for Armenia under the League of Nations, and thus submit the United States to it, when only 12 Democratic Senators went on record in favor of it.

"BEFORE NATIONAL CONVENTION.

"Those who are informed upon the subject know that it will not be approved without material reservation by the San Francisco convention. Those great Democrats who hold the future destinies of their party in their hands, while having great sympathy with the President, will not destroy the party to smooth over his great mistake. The Democratic Party has too proud a history, has done too much for the American people, and has the potential ability to do too much for them in the future to be destroyed for this purpose. I can not believe that it will be done.

"It may also be safely asserted that no other President, whether a Democrat or Republican, will present the treaty to the Senate, as it is conceded that the next election can not change the personnel of that body sufficiently to obtain its ratification.

"I could remain silent under these conditions, because I will never, in all probability, be again called to vote upon the covenant, but I will not do so.

"The Constitution divides the treaty-making power between the President and the Senate. The President has authority to tentatively negotiate treaties. The power to approve or amend or reject them is given to the Senate, and for favorable action the approval of two-thirds of the Senators present is required. The President and Senators, respectively, exercise their particular powers independent of each other, and neither can constitutionally encroach upon those of the other.

"The powers of the Senate are judicial and legislative. The Senators must first determine whether the treaty presented conforms to the Constitution of the United States, and then upon the facts furnished, whether it is in the interest of the United States that it be approved. If both are found in favor of the treaty the Senate will exercise its legislative power and approve it, and then it becomes the supreme law of the land. If either the law or the facts be found against it, it should be rejected. More than 60 treaties have been amended or rejected by the Senate; the last, one with Great Britain, was presented by President Taft, which the Democratic Senators and some Republicans opposed and defeated because involving us in an entangling alliance with that country.

"When constitutional questions are to be determined, and judicial powers are exercised, the law and the facts must control, and not public opinion. Senators can no more be instructed in these matters than can a judge of a court in the decision of a cause there pending. The Democracy of Tennessee might as well have attempted to instruct me when I was judge how to decide a lawsuit. There is no precedent for this case. These considerations would justify me in making no further answer to the resolution, but I will meet it frankly and squarely.

"CAREFULLY CONSIDERED.

"When the treaty was presented to the Senate I gave it long, deliberate, and conscientious study, fully impressed with its great importance to my country. I brought to bear upon it all the ability I possessed and all the learning and experience I had acquired in the practice of my profession for 20 years service upon the highest court of my State for 10 years and in the United States Senate for 6 years. I felt my full responsibility. I believed that the people of a great and proud State wanted their Senator to form conclusions of his own and have the courage to express and defend them, like the great Senators whom I have the honor to follow. I did not believe they wanted me to be a supine and colorless camp follower.

"I came to the conclusion that the provisions of the covenant violated the Constitution of the United States, which I had sworn to support and defend, and contravened well-settled traditional policies and great interests of our country. I found that the covenant created a supergovernment, vested with sovereign powers composed of the representatives of nine nations, eight of them in Europe and Asia, the majority being monarchies, with its capital in a foreign country, to which it was proposed to delegate the constitutional powers of the President and the Congress to raise armies and provide a navy and control their movements, to declare war and make peace, and otherwise control our foreign relations.

"POWERS OF SUPERGOVERNMENT.

"I found that this supergovernment was authorized to determine what were domestic affairs and thus interfere with our internal policies and social conditions at its will; and that it was also authorized to define the Monroe doctrine, which enabled it to destroy the policy of this country, forbidding European nations from acquiring a base of operations upon the American Continent from which to make war on us.

"I found that the British Empire would dominate and control the supergovernment, and that for this purpose that Empire and its colonies were given 6 votes in the assembly of the league to 1 allowed the United States. I found that, under the color of a league of nations, the United States would be committed to the most stupendous entangling alliance ever dreamed of with Great Britain and some 30 other nations, binding it to guarantee their existing political independence and territorial integrity for all time, and pledging the wealth and the young manhood of our country to make this guaranty good. There are other equally abhorrent provisions which I have not the space here to mention.

"With great astonishment I found that there were no provisions for the benefit of the United States, and no consideration for all these tremendous concessions and obligations.

"With these convictions, I could not but oppose the United States becoming a member of the league. There has been no change in the situation. If I were to reverse my vote I would not only stultify myself, but be unworthy of the confidence of the people and of the great office I hold. I can not allow conventions of my own party, State or National, to compel me to violate my oath of office or support a measure which I believe conflicts with the Constitution of the United States, or to do a thing which I believe to be but little short of treason. They can not absolve me from the obligations of my oath of office or release me from my duty and allegiance to my country.

"There is nothing in the Constitution that authorizes a Senator to violate that great charter of the liberties of the American people at the direction of his party. I can not find in the doctrines of the Democratic Party as taught by Jefferson, Jackson, and Cleveland anything that favors the surrender of the independence of our country or the blood-bought liberties of Americans.

"I can not yield to the position of some that I should resign and let another take my place who would do what I consider a surrender of the sovereignty and independence of the American people. That would indeed be treason.

"CAN'T COMPLY WITH INSTRUCTIONS.

"While I regret that I can not comply with the instruction of the convention, I have the consolation of knowing that my vote in opposition to the covenant has not worked material injury to a single Tennesseean. The League of Nations would place great burdens upon our people, but its failure deprives them of no rights. I may have offended some intellectuals devoted to idealism and altruism for the benefit of foreign nations at the expense of the American people, but I have been true to my duty, as I conceive it, to the great common people of my State.

"There are many other great economic and vital matters concerning our own affairs in which we are materially interested, upon which I am in full accord with the people of my State, in the furtherance of which I will endeavor to do them good and faithful service.

"I am criticized because Senator LODGE and I had in part the same views concerning the covenant. When the treaty was before the Senate on November 19, 1919, Senator LODGE and I both voted for the so-called Lodge resolution of ratification with reservations. When it came again, March 19, 1920, Senator LODGE voted for the covenant with reservations, but the treaty having been in the meantime ratified by Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan, so as to make it effective against Germany in all things as desired by our former allies, I voted absolutely against the covenant, with or without reservations.

"Would my critics condemn Chief Justice White, of the Supreme Court of the United States, for entertaining the same views and voting with the Republican members of the court upon constitutional questions instead of his Democratic colleagues who were of a different opinion?

"I wonder whether they criticize President Wilson for the appointment of Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State, and second in the succession to the Presidency, and some half a dozen other leading Republicans to high positions over Democratic applicants within the last four months?

"NOT TO BE DRIVEN FROM PARTY.

"I can not be driven from my party by the hostile criticism of my enemies. I will continue to support its nominees for office and do what I can to advance its interests. I will serve, if God gives me strength and life, my present term as Senator, trusting to the sober and wise judgment of the Democracy of Tennessee for their approval and my justification when all the obligations of the un-American covenant, which I opposed and will continue to oppose so long as I remain in the Senate, are fully understood.

"When my term expires, if the party does not desire my further services, I will gracefully retire, with a heart full of gratitude for the great honors it has conferred upon me. I will return my commission to the people untainted by cowardice or corruption and unstained by disloyalty and want of patriotism.

"I have not, in this statement, referred to the disappointed applicants for office, the sycophants and the camp followers who have been assailing me, having disposed of them in a previous statement, all of which stands as if here reiterated.

"I have spoken of no one in malice or passion and confine myself to what I believe proper to do justice to myself and the thousands of splendid and loyal Democrats throughout the State who now fully agree with me in my opposition to the covenant of the League of Nations, believing that it involves the surrender of the sovereignty and independence of our country and the liberties of our people, and commits our country to an entangling alliance fraught with dangers and disasters to the American people."

Mr. President, in my statement I asserted that the proposition for the United States to become a member of the League of Nations was not a Democratic policy and had never been approved by the great Democratic Party. I predicted that it would not be approved by the Democratic convention to nominate a Democratic candidate for the Presidency of the United States, soon to meet at San Francisco, but in this I was at fault, for it was done. I also predicted that should the Democratic Party go upon record favoring the United States becoming a member of the league, that disaster would overwhelm it and our candidate would be defeated in the November election, and in this prediction I was fully sustained by the results of that election. Gov. Cox, the nominee of that convention, made a great fight, one deserving of better success than was his fortune. He advocated the approval of the League of Nations and that the United States become a member, as presented by the President in loyal support of the platform upon which he was nominated. The paramount issue presented in that platform and advocated by Gov. Cox was the approval of the League of Nations and thus, in the great and solemn referendum called for, the issue was fought out. Gov. Cox went down in defeat. The American people rejected the league by the election of his opponent by a majority of the electoral vote unknown in modern days and by the greatest popular majority, 7,000,000, ever cast for a candidate for President of the United States. The American people, by this overwhelming majority, condemned the proposition that the United States should become a member of the League of Nations, and the issue thus fairly submitted is, in my opinion, conclusively and finally determined. The people of Tennessee also emphatically and decisively expressed their disapproval of it in that election. President Wilson carried Tennessee in the November election, 1916, by a majority of over 37,000, and in 1918 as the Democratic nominee for United States Senator I was elected over the Republican nominee by a majority of over 47,000. In the recent election Gov. Cox lost the State by over 11,000. The State of Tennessee is normally Democratic by about 40,000 votes.

While there are about 800,000 voters in the State, only about 425,000 cast their ballots in the November election. While many Democrats, in their opposition to the paramount issue of the Democratic Party and its candidate, voted for Senator Harding, yet thousands and tens of thousands of them remained at home, refusing to vote at all because they were unwilling to vote for the approval of the league, and would not vote the Republican ticket. It was not a Republican victory, but a defeat of an issue presented by the Democratic Party. This was evidenced by the Democratic Party electing both branches of the general assembly, with very little short of their usual majority. Tennessee is a Democratic State, and in the next biennial election, when the party will be freed from the controlling issue which was presented in the last election, will reassert itself and elect a Democratic governor and a Democratic Senator by its old-time majority. The people, by the time of the November election, had fully informed themselves of the great obligations of the covenant of the League of Nations, and, when they did so, they would not stand for it, and thus, by permitting the Republican candidate to carry the State, they approved my record in opposition to it. Their action can be construed in no other manner.

Mr. President, I adhere to the record I made in the Senate when the German treaty was under consideration and to my position as set forth in my statement. If I had had any doubt about it, such doubt was removed by the expressed will of the people of my State and the Nation as shown in the election. The party that undertakes to go contrary to this expression of the will of the people will merit and meet sure defeat.

An entangling alliance of our country with the European nations under any other name, whether it be an association of nations or a society of nations, is the thing that the American people have condemned. It is the entangling alliance which they are opposed to, call it by any name you may please. It is impossible to reconstruct the covenant of the League of Nations by reservations or other means to conform to American policies. Its infirmities are incurable; its fundamental principles are all the European principles of force and militarism, which are directly antagonistic to the American policy of self-determination and government by consent of the governed, conciliation, and justice. The two systems of government can not be mixed or amalgamated. The United States, in my opinion, will never consent to a foreign alliance of the kind proposed in the league. The true policy of our country, as followed from the beginning of our Government, can not be better expressed than in the language of Jefferson:

> Friendship and commerce with all nations and entangling alliance with none.

This should be the governing policy of all future administrations, which have the perpetuity of our institutions and the tranquillity of our people in their hands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS obtained the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the question before the Senate is the motion I made to lay aside the pending bill. I merely desire to state my attitude in regard to it. I should like the Senate to assume the responsibility for what we do on the question of proceeding or suspending consideration of the measure. I am perfecetly willing to be guided, so far as conducting the bill to the best of my ability is concerned, by the instructions of the Senate. If the Senate feels that the motion should not be agreed to and that we should continue with the consideration of the bill, I accept that situation and will adapt myself to it in every way I can. If the Senate feels that it does not wish to proceed in good faith with the consideration and decision of the matter, it can agree to the motion. I submit the motion to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the Senator from Washington is not in order. The Chair is inclined to believe that the only way in which the unfinished business can be disposed of is for the Senate to agree to proceed to the consideration of some other business, which, of course, can be done by unanimous consent. The Chair therefore holds that the motion of the Senator from Washington is not in order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I was about to make a motion, but I do not wish to take the Senator from the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. I rose solely for the purpose of urging the Senate not to act upon any suggestion coming even from the committee itself to lay aside the further consideration of the measure. With that statement, if the Senator from Idaho further desires to interrupt me, I shall not object.

Mr. BORAH. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator at this time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to suggest, if there is a proposal now to determine, as the result of the colloquy just had, the future course of the Senate, whether we shall keep the naval bill before the Senate or whether we shall proceed to the consideration of some other bill, it is a matter of so much interest to absentee Senators that, in my opinion, a quorum ought to be here.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not yield to the Senator for that purpose, and I hope he will not make the motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have the right to make the point of order of a lack of quorum, and I would not need to ask the Senator to yield to me to make that suggestion, but I do not now propose to make it. However, I say that if no other Senator does, I shall do it, because I desire to warn my colleagues that a matter in which they are interested is going to be disposed of.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it was suggested a few moments ago by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] that the appropriation made by Japan for naval purposes, compared to that made by this country, was very small. I do not know exactly the extent of the appropriation made by Japan. I do understand, however, that Japan employs very largely her military and naval forces in her shipyards and in associated activities, and in that way, taking into consideration also the cheapness of labor in that country, is able with one dollar to do probably as much as we would be able to do in ship construction with several times as many dollars. However that may be, it is safe to say that Japan has at least appropriated enough money to carry on her adopted naval program.

I am very much afraid that the House of Representatives, in a spasm of economy, or rather in an effort or a fitful desire to create an impression of economy, has appropriated less than is necessary to carry out the program adopted by this Government in 1916. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the facts to be able to express a confident opinion that the House appropriation is inadequate for this purpose, but from debates and the limited investigation I have been able to make of the subject I am strongly of the opinion that the amount appropriated by the House is inadequate for the purpose in view. On the other hand, I am not able to say and do not pretend to say that all the increases made on the part of the Senate committee are necessary or wise, but I do think that the part of the Senate appropriation intended to provide for the further prosecution of the program of construction and for an adequate personnel for such ships as we have already constructed and those that are now in process of construction and expected to be speedily put into commission is not too large.

As I said, I believe that the increases made in the Senate by the Senate committee for these two fundamental and essential purposes are necessary if we are to go forward with our program and if we are to provide adequate and sufficient personnel to man the ships as they become ready to be placed in commission. For that reason I greatly fear, if the legislation fails, if the increases provided in the bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs should fail, that the program will be at least crippled. I think that would be exceedingly unfortunate.

Mr. President, if all the other supply bills had failed of enactment during this session it would have been unfortunate, but it would not have been a very serious matter in view of the fact that another session of Congress is expected to be convened within the limits of a month. But that proposition does not hold good as applied to the naval appropriation bill. It is true that we could very soon during the next session provide adequate funds for the purpose of carrying on the program and enlarging the personnel of the Navy, but that is not the point at which the trouble comes. That would not be a serious matter. That would only affect us by delaying the execution of our adopted program. The serious matter in connection with the postponement grows out of the almost certain effect of the failure of action at this time upon the minds of the nations of the earth with respect to the motive and the reason for such inaction on our part.

This is especially important when considered in connection with the fact that, while every other supply bill proposed has been passed, this particular bill in the eyes of the nations of the world will have been singled out from the remainder of the supply bills for the purpose of slaughter. It would be but natural, I might say almost inevitable, that other nations would misconstrue that action on the part of the American Congress and misconstrue it in a way exceedingly prejudicial to the United States in its international relations. It is clear, I think, that nothing should be done to check the prosecution of the naval program of 1916 unless and until there is some international agreement looking to a curtailment of armament.

Under these conditions I wish to say to the Senator in charge of the bill that I am satisfied that an overwhelming majority of the Senate of the United States on both sides of the Chamber are in favor of the passage of the bill as proposed to be amended by the Senate committee.

I wish to say to him that in my judgment it is important if this legislation shall fail that we shall make it clear to this country and clear to the people of the world who are interested as onlookers in this proceeding that is going on in the Senate of the United States to-day—that we shall make it plain to them that the failure to pass this legislation is not the result of opposition on the part of the American Congress, House or Senate, but that it is the result of the action of two or three Members of the Senate, who are setting up their judgment against the judgment of this body.

Mr. President, if the Senator from Washington will press this matter to the last minute and emphasize the fact to which I have just directed attention, whether this bill is passed or not we shall have precluded the suspicion that otherwise would find lodgment in the minds of the peoples of other countries that this American program has been halted as the deliberate act and determination of the representatives of the people of the American Nation. We can do that if we can do nothing more, and we ought to do that. We should go on with this matter and develop the fact, and make it plain to our own people and to the world that the failure to pass the bill is not because the people and their representatives in both branches of Congress are not behind it, but because of the obstinate attitude and position of a few Members of this body.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have not participated in the debate because I had expected to discuss the various amendments to the bill which had been reported by the Senate committee when the questions came up specifically. I have an idea that a great many Senators antagonize this bill because they have a misconception of the differences between the House and the Senate bills.

The condition in the House of Representatives is very peculiar. The entire appropriations for the Navy are provided for by the Appropriations Committee, and that committee can recommend no appropriation unless the law authorizes it. Any new authorization for construction, any new legislation relating to the Navy, must be reported by the Naval Affairs Committee. Consequently, a point of order lies against every appropriation contained in the bill as reported to the other House unless it be already authorized. So the committee of the Senate was presented with this condition: They had to take care of the legislation desired by the Naval Affairs Committee and to provide authorizations, which were not contained in the bill as reported by the Appropriations Committee of the other House and passed by that body.

Now, let us see what is the difference between the House and Senate bills. The Senate bill does not carry any more money for the Navy than was carried last year. The appropriation is practically the same for the Navy this year that it was last year. Consequently, any reduction of the appropriation means a diminution of naval power; it means putting our ships out of commission. I want the fact emphasized that this bill is practically the same as the one which was passed last year when the Navy went from a war to a peace basis.

Some people have had an idea, which seems to have been accentuated by the opponents of the bill, that there was a great difference in the construction program between the House and the Senate. The only difference between the House and the Senate on the construction program is in connection with two airplane carriers.

The Appropriations Committee of the House would have reported a larger appropriation for aircraft if they had had the authorization to do so, which must come from the Naval Affairs Committee. The increased appropriation reported by the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate is in pursuance of an endeavor to harmonize the views of the Appropriations Committee of the House and the Naval Affairs Committee.

What does the Senate bill provide in reference to aircraft? We have not a single aircraft carrier. If we should become involved in a war with any great nation in the world to-day what would happen? We have a small ship that has been converted for that purpose, but it could not carry the necessary aircraft, with their bombs and other destructive machines. The Senate committee has provided for two aircraft carriers, which will carry what? Eighty aircraft each. What does that mean? That if our fleet went to the Pacific or if it went to the Atlantic, it would go there protected by 160 aircraft, with all of their protective and destructive power. If this appropriation is not included it means that our ships, if war should ever come to us, will go unprotected by any aircraft whatever. An aircraft carrier will carry 80 airplanes. Those airplanes can land on a ship or can start from a ship. It means absolutely that we shall have no aircraft unless this provision is adopted.

The provision for airplane carriers could not be included in the House bill because there was no authorization which justified the Appropriations Committee of the House in adopting it.

That constitutes the difference in the construction program between the House and the Senate, except in one respect, namely, that the Senate bill cancels the construction of 12 destroyers. Why? Because under the program of 1916 there was provided the number of destroyers needed for a well-balanced fleet, but since that time we have really constructed as many destroyers as the fleet needs, and, consequently, there is no necessity for the additional 12 destroyers. So the bill as reported to the Senate cancels the authorization for the construction of those destroyers, thus saving $24,000,000. The aircraft carriers to which I have referred will cost $52,000,000; but $24,000,000 will be saved by abandoning the construction of destroyers under this bill, so that there will only be an additional amount in reality of $28,000,000 involved in the construction program as contemplated by the Senate bill in comparison with the bill as it passed the House.

The Naval Affairs Committee of the House would have recommended the construction of the airplane carriers and given authorization if they had had time and opportunity to do so. I have seen no member of the Naval Affairs Committee of the House and no member of the Senate and no member of any naval board who does not say that the fleet is inadequately protected and that successful warfare can not be waged without aircraft carriers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. That has not been the point of controversy, so far as I understand it.

Mr. SWANSON. Then, what is the point of controversy? I am glad the Senator is here; I should like to have him state what the point is.

Mr. BORAH. Those who have been suggesting a change in the program outlined by this bill have not consciously been advocating an inferior or an inadequate or insufficient Navy, but they have simply been advocating a change of program. We have thought that it might be wise not to abandon, as the term has been used, but to suspend the building of six capital ships of the Indiana type, whose efficiency in modern naval warfare is in controversy, until that question shall be settled—not that they should be abandoned, but that the work upon them should be suspended.

There has been no opposition to going on with the building of battle cruisers, to the airplane program, the submarine program, or anything of that kind. It is simply a question, which has been under discussion ever since the war, as to what constitutes a modern fighting navy. There is an honest difference of opinion in regard to that. I know the views of the able Senator from Virginia; but we have been placed in the attitude, not intentionally of course, of advocating an inadequate Navy. We think that the able Senator from Virginia and others are advocating an inadequate Navy, for the reason that they are proposing to build ships costing $45,000,000 apiece, which some of the greatest naval experts in the world have said are obsolete.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, I am glad we have gotten down to the exact difference. The Senator says there is no dispute about the battle cruisers. I am glad to know that that item is eliminated.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator from Utah agree to what the Senator from Idaho said about the battle cruisers?

Mr. KING. No. Will the Senator permit me to state my position upon that point?

Mr. SWANSON. I have heard the Senator state his position.

Now, as to battle cruisers, the Senator from Idaho admits that we must have battle cruisers. The expert from Utah thinks we ought not to have battle cruisers.

Mr. KING. I did not say that.

Mr. SWANSON. The entire Navy thinks we ought to have battle cruisers. That is the main controversy that is at issue.

As to battleships, a great many of them are practically so far constructed that they could not be scrapped without great loss. Some of them are not in such an advanced stage of construction, but I will come to that phase of the matter later.

Now, let us see whether or not we ought to have battle cruisers. I believe every Senator in this body wants an adequate Navy to protect America, because naval supremacy is our first means of defense. The history of every war has shown that the nation which is supreme on the surface of the sea usually wins. When Carthage was supreme in the Mediterranean the legions of Hannibal thundered at the walls of Rome, but when supremacy passed from Carthage to Rome Scipio conquered Carthage and plowed through that magnificent city. In the wars of Napoleon the supremacy of Great Britain on the sea won. Waterloo was won at Trafalgar. All the genius, all the power, and all the amazing activity of Napoleon could not escape the doom inflicted by Nelson's fleet at Trafalgar.

All the great victories of Lee and Jackson waned before the naval supremacy of the Federal Government, and the shadows of Southern doom rolled slowly but surely from the pitiless sea.

The nation that controls the surface of the sea, and especially America, is protected from all attack. It is all foolishness to talk about controlling the surface of the sea by aircraft or submarines. Your commerce and trade is transported on the surface of the sea. Your troops go on the surface of the sea. The country that controls the surface of the sea controls naval supremacy, with all that it involves. Aircraft and submarine craft, undersea craft, are simply means of controlling the surface of the sea. Each is useful, and each is necessary. What controls the surface of the sea? The aircraft is simply to enable the battle cruisers and the battleships to win and control the surface of the sea. Your submarines are simply auxiliaries to aid you in controlling the surface of the sea.

Take the program mapped out in 1916. Your ships can not maneuver as one ship. Your ships can not maneuver as two ships. Your ships have got to be like battalions; they have got to be like regiments; they have got to be like brigades; you have got to have squadrons; you have got to have a well-balanced Navy. One ship can be easily surrounded. The program of 1916 was prepared to give so many squadrons, so many fleets, well balanced, with so many submarines in each, with so many destroyers, fixed and decided by a general board, and decided by all the naval authorities at that time. Now, you disorganize the fleet like you would your Army. You have just passed an Army bill. You increase it and decrease it according to whether you need regiments, brigades, and divisions; and you can not have a well-balanced fleet unless it is fixed in the same way as the Army, and more so, because ships are more liable to attack. This plan has provided for a fleet of so many squadrons, so many battle cruisers, so many destroyers; and most of the battleships are completed, or in a stage of completion in which the cancellation of contracts and resuming after a delay later will impose an enormous cost.

Take the battle cruisers, that the greatest controversy is about, six of them. We have not a battle cruiser now. Why? Because it is a modern ship, recently developed.

France and England got their battle cruisers lately. A battle cruiser is no more effective than a battleship under certain circumstances. You take about half as much armor, and the weight you take from armor you put in guns and you put in machinery. If you put it all in machinery, you make the speed of the ship greater. If you put it all in guns, you have larger guns, of a longer range and a greater weight of metal. Now, our battleships go about 21 knots. Our battle cruisers will go 32 knots. Japan has four. Great Britain, I think, has five or six. If you were in war with either one of these nations tomorrow, your battleships could never catch a battle cruiser. Ten battleships can not catch a battle cruiser. They would go all through the sea. Their guns have a longer range. They would keep out of distance of your battleships and you could not strike them. They would absolutely destroy your commerce and sweep it from the sea; and I am glad the Senator from Idaho thinks that the battle cruisers should be continued. I think you had better abandon 10 of your battleships and get these 6 battle cruisers, with the vast commerce of America, rather than to abandon it. This simply completes the fleet that you had with your battleships; and if you cancel the contracts, cancel the engagements that were made for all the materials, and resume them in six months, it will cost you from 25 to 50 per cent more to resume them.

This bill does what? Now, I want the Senate to understand it. This bill, prepared by the House, makes an appropriation of only $90,000,000. That is to construct the battleships as slowly as you possibly can, so as not to cancel them and not to have any suit for damages in connection with your contracts. It is not hurrying them up. It is the least that you can do without having the contracts practically canceled, with claims for damages. This program was expected to be completed in three years. If the Navy Department had been so anxious to construct them, except for the war they would have been constructed now. This appropriation is to be expended for years to come, so as to build them slowly, as slowly as it can be done under the contracts without canceling them and having claims for damages.

That is the building program. The House heard the evidence. The House heard all sides, and the House voted overwhelmingly that it was wise to continue the building program. So there is no difference between the House and the Senate on the building program, except that we propose to build two aircraft carriers that the Appropriations Committee of the House could not provide for, as they were not authorized, and we canceled 12 destroyers that are not needed now, which saves $24,000,000.

What is the next big difference? I hope the Senator from Idaho will listen to this.

Mr. BORAH. I am listening to everything the Senator says, and I am very glad to listen.

Mr. SWANSON. Now I come to the dispute in regard to the number of men. I would like to explain that to you. The House does not reduce the authorization for men—not one bit. There is an authorization now for 143,000 men in the Navy. They appropriate only for 100,000 men, but they do not change the authorization under the bill at all. Now, why do you need more than 100,000 men? I think I can make it plain to the Senate, and plain to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to go back to the question of capital ships for a moment.

Mr. SWANSON. All right; but since I have started on this I will go back to that later.

Let us see why we need more than 100,000 men in the Navy. If you had 100,000 men in your Navy and did not have a great turnover every year, and they were enlisted for 12 years, as they are in Great Britain, that is all you would need in your Navy. I believe 100,000 men would equip our Navy under those conditions, and I am frank to say so; but what are the conditions that confront you to-day?

During the late war, when I was chairman of the committee, we changed the enlistments from four years to two, three, and four years. Why did we do that? Because when the war was over we decided to reduce the Navy as quickly as possible, which we did to take care of the entire naval property, and reduce the number of men that were in all parts of the world to the lowest possible peace basis. We did not want to have two or three hundred thousand men with 4-year enlistments that we could not get rid of under the term of their enlistment, so we allowed enlistments for two, three, and four years during the war, and you have a great many short-term enlistments that expire next year. Now, what will be the result if you have 100,000 men appropriated for on the 1st of July? Say you have 100,000 men. Next year the enlistments of 43,000 men expire, and they must be reenlisted or else we would have only 57,000 men. Seven per cent of the men go out of the Navy every year on account of sickness and other causes, and if you should take 7 per cent from that you would have 52,000 men going out of your Navy next year, and if you reduce it to 100,000—you have 124,000 now—you practically would have a basis of less than 50,000 men that you have got to get reenlistments for.

If the trained men were reenlisting, and they would reenlist up to 100,000 men, your Navy could run on that. I am frank to say so, and I believe it would be sufficient; but experience has shown during the last two years that the reenlistment of old men on the average is 30 per cent. Recently, at one time, it ran up to 50 or 60 per cent; but the last two months, since you have been discussing the Navy, there are very few reenlistments in the Navy.

Now, take this view of it: You enlist new men—and I think we can get them under these conditions—and you train them three or four months to be ordinary seamen, or if they want to be electricians or mechanics they have to go to school about nine months. Consequently, until these men are equipped, your Navy would be less than 100,000 men. As the Navy Department says, it will be less than 75,000 men. About 72,000 men is what they figure the Navy would be if you were to reduce it to 100,000 men, as appropriated for under the House bill. I have yet to see the man who thought the Navy could be equipped and run with less than 100,000 men.

What did the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate do? We appropriated for 120,000 men. We thought that was necessary on account of the fact that by reason of these 2-year enlistments about 52,000 men will go out and must be reenlisted next year. I asked the Navy Department to make an estimate of about what the size of the Navy would be with 120,000 men with a basis of 30 per cent reenlistment, and they said if you had a Navy now under these conditions of 2-year enlistments, which we have changed to four years, your Navy would have about 92,000 men on an average during the year with an authorization of 120,000 men. Now, that is the situation. If you had 4-year enlistments instead of 2-year enlistments, and only 25 per cent went out, there would not be the urgent necessity for this legislation.

I have asked the Navy Department to enumerate for the committee the battleships they want to have in commission, the destroyers, the submarines, the ships that you have in the Black Sea, the ships that you have in Turkey, the ships that you have in China, and the ships that you have all over the world to-day with its disturbed and perturbed conditions. With the present perturbed and disturbed conditions it is necessary to have destroyers and American ships scattered all over the world, which you might reduce in 12 months, but which now is absolutely necessary; and they tell me that if you man your fleet properly there would be a great reduction in all these perturbed and disturbed conditions in foreign waters.

The question of the personnel is the main gravamen of difference between the House and the Senate. I have no doubt that the House passed this bill expecting us to increase it, and get a compromise. I have yet to see a naval man who believes—and we are bound to go by the Navy in their experience of reenlistments—that if that provision stands you could run the Navy under the House provision of 100,000 men.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator says he is satisfied that the House passed this bill with 100,000 men expecting the Senate to increase it, and to compromise. I want to ask the Senator whether his committee reported the increased amount with the same purpose in view, making a very much larger increase than they thought necessary, in the hope of making a compromise?

Mr. SWANSON. I have always been frank. I have never been anything but frank. If I were to go to the conference, I am frank to say that I would consent to 110,000 men, and I would let the bill fail without it. I believe in frankness.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I want to say, on behalf of one member of the committee—I am not the chairman, and neither is the Senator from Virginia—that I did not vote in the committee for a provision for maintaining the Navy at its present strength with any idea except that that is the strength at which it should be maintained.

Mr. SWANSON. I am frank to say that I believe the Navy ought to have 120,000 men. The Senator will understand that in examining the men who represented the Navy I tried to get them to say that 110,000 or 100,000 would be sufficient; and I looked at the ships, and I do not believe you will have an average of over 92,000 men on a basis of 120,000 men, with 52,000 men for reenlistment in the next two years. But rather than let the bill fail, I believe in being frank, and I would consent to 110,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SWANSON. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. If the statement that the Senator has just made is true—that upon a basis of 120,000 men he does not think we would have an average of more than 92,000 during the next year—then why appropriate for more than 100,000? The amendment proposes to appropriate for 120,000.

Mr. SWANSON. That merely shows the misinformation upon which gentlemen reach conclusions. Eight or ten thousand of those men will be in training schools, and possibly more. You have got to provide for two things. There would be 92,000 men for the ships. The rest of them would be in training, some of them nine months to be mechanics and electricians, but none of them less than four months for ordinary seamen.

Mr. LENROOT. How many would be training?

Mr. SWANSON. It would depend upon the degree; eight or ten thousand, or possibly more.

Mr. LENROOT. That would leave 100,000.

Mr. SWANSON. You could not tell. It would depend upon the reenlistment of old men.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I think the Senator underestimates the number of men on that basis that would be training. The information before the committee was that there would be at least 20,000 of these young recruits. The only means of maintaining the Navy would be by training them in camps—not upon ships.

Mr. SWANSON. I will state for the Senator what it is. There are usually about 30 per cent of reenlistments.

Fifty-two thousand men will go out of the Navy next year on account of the 2-year enlistments; about 30 per cent will reenlist, making about fifteen or twenty thousand who will reenlist. The rest of them will be new enlistments. For an ordinary seaman it requires from three to four months' training. Take machinists, for example: They go to school from eight to nine months, according to their aptitude. The estimate of 120,000 would mean that you would have 92,000 men available for the Navy for active service and the rest of them would be taking training, on account of the peculiar condition of the 2-year enlistments, under which so many enlistments expire next year.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not true that the testimony before the Senate committee shows clearly that after the 1st of July, and for a considerable period, there will be a very much less number than 120,000 men in the Navy, including those who take training, and that under this appropriation for 120,000 men, at the end of the next fiscal year, you will not have 120,000 but you will have over 130,000 men in the Navy?

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is mistaken, because you simply appropriate for 120,000, and you can not pay for any more. They will confine themselves to it and divide them among the 12 months. They might come and ask for a deficiency appropriation, but they never take the risk on that—on the number of men. The appropriation is made for 100,000 men on the 1st of July. That is divided into 12 months—so many men for each month. You can not put a ship in commission to-day and take it out to-morrow, but you must have your ships equipped, or the loss is immense. So much money goes each year for men. You appropriate on an average during that year, and on account of these reenlistments, with 52,000 for the men, less the number of the old men, you would have but 92,000 men available for the fleet.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not get my point. Does not the testimony show that there will be a period after the first day of next July when, if we appropriate for 120,000 men, there will be a less number than 120,000 men in the Navy, including those who take training?

Mr. SWANSON. Less than 120,000?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. If they do not need them they will not take them.

Mr. LENROOT. They fill up, and then afterwards, the testimony shows, beginning about the 1st of October, or a little later, they will fall off again, until at the end of the year you will have something over 130,000.

Mr. SWANSON. Unless you get the enlistments, the money is available for subsequent enlistments. If the enlistments should be very small now, and the money appropriated for 12 months is not spent each month, that money is available for subsequent months. It depends on the enlistments. But when the enlistments come, after the 1st of July, they are usually divided into 12 months, and, of course, if you do not get the enlistments, the money is available for subsequent months. But they hope to get the enlistments, because if they do not, some ships will have to go out of commission. But you can at any time, when this thing expires, have a new estimate, for any more than that, because it is divided into 12 months, and you would depend on the enlistments.

I think that is the situation, and I have not seen a naval man yet who did not say so. The Chief of Navigation, the man who has charge of the aircraft, the man who has charge of all these ships, tells us that even if you do that, you will have but 92,000 men available for sea duty. Does the gentleman think it is a time to have your ships all over the world in that situation? I think we have eight or ten thousand men now in a disturbed condition in Siberia, in China, in Turkey, in the Black Sea, and elsewhere, where they look after American interests, who would have to come home, and if this is done, and that situation arises, Congress must correct it at a great loss.

When you carry your calculations back for four years, and you do not have the turnover you will have next year, I do not believe 100,000 men is ample for sea duty, and this is fixed so as to give that, but they think it possibly will give less on account of the situation.

I would like to have the Senator from Wisconsin consider another thing. Next year you will have two battleships put in commission, possibly a third one, which will take 4,000 more men. You have 10 scout cruisers, of which we have very few, which will be made available.

Mr. LENROOT. With reference to the new battleships, is it not true that under the amendments of the committee it is proposed by the Navy Department to supply the men for these new battleships by putting old ships out of commission and taking the men from them?

Mr. SWANSON. To some extent they do that, but when you put a battleship in reserve you must have about half a crew. The battleships you put out now are too efficient to be absolutely put out of commission. You could not provide substitutes for these 10 scout cruisers, which will take about 800 men each. We have none of those, and can not furnish substitutes for them.

This provision relating to the personnel of the Navy, in all frankness and candor, ought to be maintained, and I think we would make a serious mistake if we should reduce the Navy personnel to less than 100,000. I have not seen a Navy officer who thought otherwise, and statements by naval officers are all we can go by. They give us the data and the information. With these two battleships coming in, and possibly a third, and 10 scout cruisers, with 12,000 additional men, it seems to me the Committee on Naval Affairs have acted economically with this turnover. I say this for the simple reason that I think the Senate has a misconception of the difference between the House and the Senate on this bill.

These other items about Alameda, about the increasing of this appropriation and that, are subjects of discussion. They are not absolutely necessary. I think the most important thing is the personnel. I think with the present number of ships, if we reduced the personnel, until six months from now the Navy was half-manned, we would have to withdraw from foreign ports, which would be a most serious situation, which should not confront our Navy at this time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, going back to the subject of capital ships, and the suggestions which have been made by some of us who are not experts—and I regard the Senator from Virginia as one of the best advised men on the Naval Affairs Committee—this statement has been made by Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske within the last three weeks:

> The so-called capital ship has seen its best days. The naval supremacy a year or two henceforward will belong to that nation which possesses the most powerful fleet of aircraft.
> It seems to me the future Navy will be vastly different from the fleets of to-day. It will probably consist of large vessels without smokestacks or masts, or possibly with internal-combustion engines. Every one of those ships will carry as its major weapons three kinds of airplanes: First, aircraft for scouting duty, both over water and over enemy coasts; second, bombing planes for dropping explosives on ships and fortifications; third, torpedo planes carrying projectiles to be launched against the hulls of surface ships.

Then, referring to Admiral Scott, of the British Navy, he said:

> Scott wants to lose no time from profiting from the lessons of the World War. He saw, as the whole world saw, that fleets of mighty armored ships could not get closer than 10 miles to enemy coasts. He knows that the gun range of a battleship is limited. He knows that in speed aircraft has heavy ships hopelessly outstripped. In radius of action there is no comparison between them.

Mr. President, if the Rear Admiral's view is correct, the position which we take is that we are expending money upon a large number of the class of ships which he says, using my own language to express his sentiment, are obsolete. There is where the contention has rested so far as I am individually concerned.

Mr. SWANSON. In the olden times, when you did not have submarines and did not have aircraft, the battleship was absolutely supreme. It had nothing to contend against it. The nations that had the largest battleships and battle fleets invariably won. The real test now is, who controls the surface of the sea. The object of aircraft is to destroy battleships, because the battleship ultimately controls the surface of the sea. The object of the submarine is, in a military sense, leaving out commerce, to destroy the battleship, which ultimately controls the surface of the sea. It is on the surface of the sea that commerce is shipped, not in the air, not under sea. It is on the surface of the sea that you have to transport troops. So all of these are simply elements to control the surface of the sea. The battleship was absolutely supreme when you had no aircraft to destroy it and had no submarines to destroy it.

When the submarine was first invented to destroy it, then you had to meet that problem, because if the submarine destroyed the battleship, the nation that finally had the last battleship would control the surface of the sea.

So those two elements have to be taken into consideration when you are talking about battleships. There are three elements now that control sea warfare, three planes. You have to fight under the sea, on the surface of the sea, and in the air, and any nation whose defense is defective either under the sea, on the surface of the sea, or in the air has an inadequate fleet.

You could have an immense fleet of aircraft that could destroy your battleships, and the nation that had the last battleships would be supreme on the surface of the sea. You could have an immense fleet of submarines that could destroy your battleships, and the nation that finally controlled the battleships and got rid of the aircraft and submarines could control the surface of the sea, control the transportation of troops, control how commerce should come and go, and all this conflict. You have Admiral Fiske and you have Admiral Fullam testifying on the subject that we had not emphasized sufficiently the aircraft and submarines. Admiral Fullam wanted to do what? Not to stop the construction of battleships, but to discontinue it and appropriate $220,000,000 for aircraft.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate any longer, because I have no desire to delay this bill. But I want to appeal to the Members of the Senate, if you will send for naval officers, and in a good, businesslike, practical way, ask their opinion; or send for any man who is not in the Navy and has no personal interest, and study this question of personnel, the expiration of the enlistments. Anyone who studies the subject must reach the conclusion that this is not an excessive increase of personnel. You reduce it from what it was last year. As to continuing this program or discontinuing it for six months and then resuming it, if you are going to scrap it, you might as well scrap it for good.

I want to impress upon the Senator from Idaho that I concur in this program, aided in its preparation, and suggested it. It is simply an appropriation to continue the program, except as to battle cruisers, and a large part of this $90,000,000 goes to the battle cruisers. They are absolutely necessary, if you have a fleet at all. The Senator recognizes the importance of the battle cruisers, does he not, and that we ought to build them faster than anything else? If we were at war, your commerce would have to be supported. Only one naval officer appeared and advocated the discontinuance, and we asked him what he would do in case of war, and he said he would just stop the commerce going out.

Most of this $90,000,000 for new appropriation will go into the six battle cruisers. The rest of it, as I understand it, is to continue the construction of the capital ships as slowly as it can be done, without having a violation of contracts, and speeding it up. It is merely to a large extent a discontinuance. The entire effort will be made to construct these battle cruisers as quickly as possible. If you discontinue them absolutely, you will have claims for damages; you have supplies bought, and so forth. I suggested to the Navy Department that in the construction of a fleet the wise course to pursue is to construct the battle cruisers as quickly and as energetically as possible, with all the speed possible, and the battleships ought to be delayed as much as you can, with an honest compliance with your contracts. Does that look like a reasonable proposition?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it would be pretty reasonable, if it were not for just this defect, that we will go ahead on the capital ships of the Indiana type. Of course, they may call it slowing down, but when we come to the naval appropriation next year we will be very far in advance of what we are now.

Mr. SWANSON. Let me answer that now.

Mr. BORAH. No; I want to put it all together, because the Senator at that time will be simply unanswerable in his logic and his argument that, having gone forward for two years, we certainly can not scrap these ships and discontinue the contracts. Some of these ships are less than 10 per cent completed.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, where ships are less advanced than authorized by the amount of money you give them, it compels them to push the battleships at the utmost speed, and if they do that they have very little money for the capital ships. My idea is this, which I suggested, and saw the naval constructor, and also consulted with members of the committee: I think these battleships should not be constructed any faster than an honest compliance with the contract demands, and we can not do it without having claims for damages.

I believe a battle cruiser can be constructed in 12 months. In order to compel the construction of the battle cruisers they want to limit the amount of money, and I wish to assure the Senator from my knowledge of naval affairs—and I have always tried to be frank—that if the $90,000,000 item goes through it is very little more than ought to be expended on the six battle cruisers. In other words, I believe, and the Secretary of the Navy agrees with me, that the Navy Department will not construct battleships any faster than is necessary to comply with the contracts and avoid any damages.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, we are going to pay damages, but the damages which have been estimated for over the year have been $25,000,000, and if we should find out that the battleships are obsolete we will have saved $275,000,000 after paying the $25,000,000.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to ask the Senator, in all frankness, as a good business man, whether it is not a wiser policy to go ahead and appropriate $90,000,000 for battle cruisers that are to be completed? I think the policy is to construct the capital ships as slowly as possible, which they ought to do. Of course, the new Secretary of the Navy will determine how fast they shall proceed with the construction of the capital ships, but the amount of money limited in this way compels that process. If it does not, I think it should be done.

Mr. BORAH. Then, let us put it in the bill.

Mr. SWANSON. That is not simply to provide for a loss of $25,000,000. I think the wise course is to construct them as slowly as possible under the contracts, so we will have no claims for damages. That is my idea. That is what I believe the bill will do. That is what I believe the next Secretary of the Navy will do. I think that is the wise course to pursue, if the Senator will permit me to give my individual view. I agree with the Senator that the battleships should not be hurried up and that the amount of money provided will result in getting the battle cruisers.

I merely desired to make this statement, not to delay the bill, but because I have an idea that the Senate has a misconception of the differences between the House bill and the Senate committee bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have listened, as everybody does, with a great deal of attention to the Senator from Virginia, who, with his usual vehemence and earnestness, has spoken for some time. After it has all been said, it amounts to this: That in his opinion the Navy of the United States, with its attachments and appendages, personnel, armament, and so forth, in peace times ought to be equal to what it was in war times and a little bit more. That is all.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 16076. An act authorizing bestowal upon the unknown, unidentified British soldier buried in Westminster Abbey and the unknown, unidentified French soldier buried in the Arc de Triomphe of the congressional medal of honor; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico obtained the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator give me an opportunity to prefer a unanimous consent request?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator for that purpose, if it will not take me off the floor.

Mr. BORAH. There is a bill which has been passed by the House and which has been before the Senate for a month and has been debated extensively. I do not presume anyone wishes to debate it any further. It is a very important measure. I ask unanimous consent that not later than 10 o'clock to-night the Senate may vote upon House bill 5726, known as the minimum wage bill, together with all amendments thereto, without further debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. DIAL. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

BONUS FOR EX-SOLDIERS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the naval appropriation bill has been before the Senate for several days, and so far as I am personally concerned I regret very much that the Senate has not been able to come to some agreement on it and pass the bill at this session of Congress. I have taken some interest in trying to get up for consideration another bill, House bill 14157, which has been passed by the House and which has been reported to the Senate. I have felt that the Senate ought to pass that bill at this session of Congress, and I believe that if the situation was thoroughly understood by the Senate some effort would be made to pass the bill.

I am quite sure that there is a misapprehension both as to the provisions of the bill and the ability of the Government to carry out some special provisions, not only as proposed in the bill, but to go very much further than the bill as reported from the Senate committee would have the Congress go.

Mr. President, I observe that even the members of the Finance Committee have not taken the trouble to become accurately informed as to the financial situation of our Government. It would seem from the report which has been presented to the Senate by the Finance Committee that that committee was deterred in great measure from urging the passage of an adjusted compensation bill at this time which would make any present or immediate provision for the relief of the ex-service men. That sentiment doubtless prevails throughout the country. When it was suggested that some such bill as this, embracing provisions for adjusting the compensation of our ex-service men, the news went abroad that the burden upon the Treasury would be more than it could bear, and that we should conserve our resources at this time for other purposes.

I desire to make the statement to the Senate that not only the Finance Committee but the country at large are unduly concerned about the status of the Treasury of the United States. The financial operations of our Government during the war and subsequent to the war have been unequaled at any time in all history by any Government on earth. I desire in the first place to call attention to a mistake which my distinguished colleague upon the Finance Committee, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], has made in the report to the Senate. I know that it is an inadvertence, and yet it leads to an entirely inaccurate conception or statement of the situation as it exists. On page 2 of the report I find this statement:

Estimated gross deficiency (in the Treasury) June 30, 1921, $2,005,037,119.
Estimated gross deficiency June 30, 1922, $1,448,589,211.
Total (for two years), $3,453,618,330.

That statement is absolutely misleading. There should be no addition of the two amounts. The inference drawn from the report is that we have a constantly increasing deficiency in the revenues of the Government, whereas the exact situation is the fact, according to those figures properly understood, that there was an estimated deficiency on the 30th of June, 1921, of $2,005,037,119, but owing to the Treasury operations the estimated deficiency on June 30, 1922, will be reduced so that at that time the estimated deficiency will be only $1,448,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say to the Senator that the return on the business of 1920 thus far received by the Treasury Department shows that if the returns up to March 15 continue to decrease as have those which have already been received up to the 15th of February, there will be a deficit of over $500,000,000 above the estimated amount that was carried by the Treasury Department.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think if the Senator from Utah will just withhold his observation a few minutes, I can present to the Senate some facts which are very enlightening and which, I think, may tend very greatly to the reduction of any apprehension which even the distinguished Senator from Utah may have upon the situation.

To my mind the transactions of the Treasury Department during the war and since that time amount almost to an Aladdin's dream; they are beyond any conception or any hope of any citizen of the country. I wish to call attention to the fact, in the first place, as to the public debt, the funded debt of the United States Government. At one time the funded debt amounted to $21,432,950,800. I apprehend that there are few people in all this country who realize that there has been any substantial reduction of the funded debt of the country, but I am able to state that that funded debt—the Liberty Loan bonds, the Victory notes—has been reduced up to the present time by $2,994,994,000.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think we would have a hard time floating bonds now at any reasonable rate of interest?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is entirely aside from my line of argument, but I will take that up and discuss it a little later.

I wish to call attention to the fact, and to impress it not only upon the Senate but upon the country, that there has been an actual reduction of the bonded indebtedness of the country since the time of the Victory loan of more than $2,000,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New Mexico was somewhat in error when he stated there had been a reduction of over $2,000,000,000 in the permanent bonded indebtedness of the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am not in error about it. I have the figures here, which I obtained from the Treasury Department. In the first place, I gave the figures as to the total of those bonds which had been issued, and I gave the exact figures as to those now outstanding, amounting to $19,431,955,805. That was on date of February 28, 1921. I repeat, those figures have been obtained from the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think it ought to be said that the short-time certificates now outstanding——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator from Utah will permit me, I am going to take up the question of certificates next, and I think I can give the Senator some information about that, for I know that it presents a different phase from what I had expected it would.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows that the Secretary of the Treasury was before the Finance Committee in connection with this very bill, and he himself opposed it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand that, Mr. President, but whether we oppose the bill or not, I think the people of the United States should understand this most remarkable financial performance of our Government in the time of the great World War and since.

Now, as to the question of floating indebtedness: For June 30, 1920, the estimated gross deficit in the Treasury, including the outstanding short-term certificates of indebtedness, was $3,905,888,543. Let us examine what has happened in the case of that indebtedness. For June 30, 1921, the estimated gross deficiency will be only $2,005,037,119.67, a reduction of nearly $2,000,000,000. For June 30, 1922, the estimated deficiency will only be $1,448,581,211.67. I may say that that includes a working balance in the Treasury of $250,000,000, making an estimated gross deficiency in the Treasury on that date, June 30, 1922, of only $1,198,581,211.67. But if we leave in the Treasury the $250,000,000, then if we take the figures of February 28 as to the funded indebtedness and the estimated condition as it will be on June 30 of next year, we find that there will have been a total reduction of the indebtedness of the country of just about four and a half billion dollars. That means, Mr. President, that we have financed the great World War, and that, while the moneys paid out on account of that war amounted to more than $38,000,000,000, to-day there is a funded permanent bonded indebtedness of this country of less than $20,000,000,000. I read from the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, as follows:

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES DURING THE WAR PERIOD.

On the basis of the daily Treasury statements, the total expenditures of the Government, exclusive of the principal of the public debt and postal disbursements from postal revenues for the period from April 6, 1917, to June 30, 1920, were $38,830,812,895.93. The receipts during this period from taxes and sources other than borrowed money were $16,078,844,097.10, or slightly in excess of 41 per cent of the expenditures, although they do not include the September 15 and December 15, 1920, installments of taxes levied on 1919 incomes and profits. The expenditures include capital outlays as well as items which have been permanently absorbed. The receipts also include certain sums which by law are covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, but which, for statistical purposes, more properly should be offset against expenditures. No deduction has been made for loans to foreign Governments or for investments, such as ships, stock of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, stock of the Housing Corporation, and loans to railroads. Foreign loans made up to June 30, 1920, aggregated $9,523,000,000. Excluding this sum the total disbursements of the Government from the beginning of the war to June 30, 1920, were $29,307,000,000, or about 55 per cent of which, on the basis of these adjusted figures, was met out of tax receipts and revenues other than borrowed money.

We paid out during the war and during the subsequent fiscal year over $13,000,000,000 raised by taxation. We have been paying the running expenses of the Government subsequent to the war which were increased largely by reason of conditions growing out of the war, but, notwithstanding that we stand before the world to-day with a permanent bonded indebtedness of less than $19,500,000,000, and that indebtedness includes also the nearly $10,000,000,000 which we loaned to the Allies during the war. So, if we consider the indebtedness of our allies to this country of face value, and reduce our bonds accordingly, there is to-day a net bonded indebtedness of only about $10,000,000,000.

Mr. President, the reductions of which I have spoken as having been made have been made notwithstanding the fact that we have during the same period of time been paying large amounts on account of war conditions. I merely wish to call attention to some of the items which were included in the expenditures of the fiscal year 1920. Out of the net ordinary disbursements of the Treasury of $6,403,000,000 about 90 per cent consisted of expenditures really connected with war, either in payment of past war expenses or in preparation for the future. I wish to read some of these items; and, by the way, until very recently we have still been purchasing obligations of foreign Governments. In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, we purchased obligations of foreign Governments amounting to $421,000,000,

We spent in that fiscal year for the War Department $1,611,000,000; we spent during that year for the Navy Department $736,000,000; we spent for the Shipping Board $531,000,000; we paid out by reason of the Federal control of the transportation system and payments to railroads under the transportation act of 1920, $1,037,000,000; then we paid interest on the public debt amounting to $1,020,000,000; and in addition pensions, war-risk insurance, purchase of farm loan bonds, and so forth.

Those items, Mr. President, were all taken care of—$1,600,000,000 for the Army; $736,000,000 for the Navy; $421,000,000 expended in the purchase of foreign loans; over $1,000,000,000 paid out for transportation by reason of Government control during the war and the recent railroad act of 1920. We did all of that but we not only paid those bills, but after having paid them the revenues of the Government were sufficient to reduce the national indebtedness of about $1,000,000,000.

Mr. President, in regard to the more recent estimates, I merely wish to call attention to some of the steps which have been taken toward the reduction of the public debt.

That condition has been brought about in this way, and I will ask the indulgence of the Senate to call attention to some details in regard to these expenditures.

Take the fiscal year 1921, the year which will end in next June. There they estimated that the balance in the Treasury at the beginning of the year was $359,947,020.33. The estimated ordinary receipts from taxation and other revenues were $5,739,565,000. We were expected to receive from the public debt account over $60,000,000, making total receipts of $5,799,758,375. Now, how did we intend to expend that amount? Here are the ordinary expenses, so-called technically in the bookkeeping of the Government, which includes the Army and the Navy and all expenses except the public debt. It is expected to expend for those purposes $4,851,298,931. Then it is expected that there will be obligations to pay on account of the public debt, including the outstanding certificates of indebtedness, of $3,063,443,584. So that there will show at the end of the year a reduction of this outstanding indebtedness of $1,250,000,000, leaving the estimated deficiency of that year only $1,755,000,000 plus; and then allowing $250,000,000 for a working balance in the Treasury, it leaves the total estimated deficiency $2,005,000,000, as I stated a while ago.

For the year 1922, what does the Government expect to do with regard to its revenue matters during the next year—the year for which we are making appropriations now, the year for which we expect to raise the revenue? The Government estimated that we should receive from taxation and ordinary receipts the sum of $4,859,530,000, and for the public debt, interest on some items, and so forth, $60,200,000, making a total anticipated receipts of $4,919,730,000. Now, then, what do they expect to do with this? They expect to apply upon the public debt out of that, by purchasing these funded bonds, $465,854,865, and otherwise reduce the floating indebtedness, so that it will amount to what I stated a while ago, only $1,198,581,211.67; and allow then a working balance in the Treasury of $250,000,000, which leaves a total anticipated floating indebtedness of this country at the end of the next fiscal year of less than a billion and a half dollars.

In view of this most remarkable showing, I ask if there is anyone who ought to feel that this great Government of ours is crippled in its resources, or facing bankruptcy, and unable to do justice to those who served this country in the hour of its greatest need?

In the estimate for 1922, as I have stated, they expect to reduce the funded indebtedness by $465,854,000 plus, and in addition to that they expect to have a surplus to be applied to the floating indebtedness of the country and for its further reduction of $556,455,905; or, in other words, in the face of the necessities of this country at this time, the calculations of the Treasury Department are to pay these extraordinary expenses at this time, and in addition thereto reduce the indebtedness of this country by about a billion dollars a year. Now, I ask the people of this country if they want that kind of financing if those who have served their country are in need of some assistance from their country?

This estimate of the Treasury was also made anticipating that very large sums would be required for the use of the Army and the Navy and for other branches of the Government. The estimate was made that there would be expended for the War Department next year—how much do you suppose?—$925,000,000. It was estimated that there would be expended for the Navy Department next year $655,896,000. I might call attention to many other important items in the estimates, and we know that there will be no such sums appropriated for those purposes by this Congress. I have prepared here a list of the reductions from the estimates of the various departments made by the Senate during this session upon the bills which have been reported to the Senate. I have been unable to ascertain the exact amounts of money which have been carried into the appropriation bills which have become law, but as reported to the Senate by the various appropriations committees the amounts to which I have called your attention will be reduced from those estimates as follows:

The Army, over $336,000,000; the sundry civil bill, $393,000,000 plus; fortifications, $27,000,000; the Navy, $152,000,000; the Agricultural Department, $13,000,000; rivers and harbors, $41,000,000; the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, $26,000,000; the Diplomatic and Consular bill, $1,500,000; the Indian bill, more than $1,500,000; the District of Columbia appropriation bill, over $3,000,000; making total deductions from the estimates of the various departments on the bills which I have mentioned of $998,000,000 plus; and notwithstanding the Treasury prepared a financial plan which would raise moneys to pay those enormous expenditures, it also prepared a plan which would decrease the public debt of this country next year more than $1,000,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator stated a short time ago that there had been a reduction in the funded indebtedness of something over $2,000,000,000.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I stated that as of February 28.

Mr. LENROOT. Something over $2,000,000,000?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes, sir.

Mr. LENROOT. And a reduction in the floating indebtedness of how much?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Of about two and a half billion dollars.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, on page 23, and I read:

> On the basis of the daily Treasury statements, the gross debt of the United States on August 31, 1919, when it reached the peak, was, in round figures, $26,596,000,000, of which about $4,000,000,000 represented loan and tax certificates maturing within the year. On September 30, 1920, the gross debt was $24,087,000,000, a reduction of over $2,500,000,000, while the floating debt was $2,347,000,000, or approximately $1,600,000,000 less than on August 31, 1919.

So the Senator very evidently is mistaken in including twice reductions in funded indebtedness and certificates of indebtedness, short-time certificates, and he is only about $2,000,000,000 out of the way.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No, Mr. President; the Senator himself is in error in construing the report which he has just read. The Senator will observe that the report from which he is reading does not make a definite division of those two kinds of indebtedness.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; they have on page 315 an exact division.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I also want to call attention, though I will not do it now in detail, to the report made by Mr. Leffingwell. I will say frankly to the Senator that Mr. Leffingwell was the man in the Treasury Department who, I think, knew more about the detailed workings of the Treasury Department during the war than any other living man. I have his report before me now, and I think it will substantiate every statement that was made here by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to make this statement: I have before me the figures which were given to me on the 28th of February regarding the permanent funded indebtedness, and I can give the Senator the name of the Treasury official, with his branch telephone number, who furnished me the information.

Mr. SMOOT. Nobody denies that as to the permanent indebtedness of the Government; but the Senator has not taken into consideration the short-time certificates of indebtedness.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I will read to the Senator the statements of the Treasury regarding that.

Mr. SMOOT. I have them here, and I will read them, too.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator is finally convinced as to the permanent funded indebtedness we have made quite a little progress in this debate.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, yes; as to the funded indebtedness, it is true; but as to the actual indebtedness of the Government we have not.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Now, Mr. President, we will take up the other phase of the question, and we will examine the testimony upon the other phase of the proposition. So it is admitted that the funded indebtedness of the country has been reduced by over $2,000,000,000. Now let us take up the other side of the matter.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator say that the Secretary of the Treasury was mistaken when he said the gross indebtedness of the country was reduced two and a half billion dollars?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not make that statement. I simply make the suggestion, which I believe to be true, that the figures are not brought together in the same way in the matter to which the Senator from Wisconsin now refers and the way in which I have been presenting them.

Mr. LENROOT. I think the Senator will find that he is counting them twice. That is the trouble.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; Mr. President; not at all.

Now I want to take up the evidence as to the reduction of the certificates and see what we find.

I find on page 199 of the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the year 1919 this statement:

Estimated gross deficiency June 30, 1920, $3,905,888,543.

That was the gross deficiency in the Treasury estimated for June 30, 1920. That includes the floating indebtedness, it includes all of these matters the Government is obligated to pay except the funded indebtedness of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the estimated amount.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understand that, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. But if the Senator begins to figure from an estimated amount, when the returns come in later, he certainly can not come to a final conclusion as to what was actually paid.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, we have no way of getting a start on this matter except by the estimate of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMOOT. The way to get a start upon it is to take the actual obligations on the part of the Government, the actual money we have received, and the balance of the debts of the Government. That is the only way. If you start with an estimated amount, and that estimated amount, the Senator knows himself, proves not to be correct in the end of the year, when all of the taxes were paid, the showing then can not be correct.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. We will come to what was actually the state of the Treasury at the end of the year. But there was the estimated amount in the Treasury in 1919, which was reported to the Senate at the beginning of December. It was prepared in October, 1919, which was right in the fiscal year 1920, and at that time in the year the Treasury estimated the gross deficiency as over $3,900,000,000.

Now we turn to the next estimate for the next year, which will be found at the bottom of page 200 of this report, and there the Secretary put the estimated deficiency at $2,009,336,000, and let me show you how close he came to the truth by that estimate.

The estimated deficiency was $2,009,336,528, and the actually ascertained gross deficit at the end of that year was $2,005,037,119.67. They came within $4,000,000 in their guess in over a $2,000,000,000 estimate.

Mr. President, there may be slight errors in these estimates. I grant there may be. But I assert that that should not affect the situation. It is admitted by everybody that there has been a tremendous reduction in not only the floating indebtedness of this Government, but there has been an actual reduction in the permanent funded indebtedness of over $2,000,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, that is denied by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have not seen the denial.

Mr. LENROOT. I read it to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have the statement right here before me.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senators had better read from the same publication.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the Senator reading from page 23 of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am not.

Mr. LENROOT. There he says the total reduction was two and a half billion, which included $1,600,000,000 of Treasury certificates, which leaves $900,000,000 reduction of funded indebtedness, as against the two and a half billion the Senator speaks of.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will go a little further. I hold in my hand the preliminary statement of the public debt on February 28, 1921. This is the official publication, and the Senator, by an examination of it, will observe that of the old indebtedness, not relating to this present war, the funded amount was $883,728,270; of the first Liberty loan, second Liberty, third Liberty, and fourth Liberty loans there were outstanding $15,282,198,100, and of the Victory Liberty loan, the last Liberty loan, those certificates outstanding amounted to $4,149,757,705, making a total permanent bonded indebtedness, including all we owed before we got into this World War, plus the Victory loan and the Liberty loans, of only $19,431,955,805.

The Senator undertook a while ago to say that the total funded indebtedness was over $26,000,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. No; I said the gross indebtedness was $26,000,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator relies on those figures of the bonded indebtedness, why does he not tell the Senate of the United States the peak load of the bonded indebtedness of the United States? Then he will find that the statement made there is incorrect. The trouble is, Mr. President, the Senator is trying to put in the permanent bonded indebtedness of the Government, and figure the funded indebtedness of the Government, basing it upon an estimate made by the Treasury as to what the receipts would be. I do not want the Senator to think I am just simply finding fault to be finding fault, but when we are getting at the real indebtedness of the Government, I do not known of a better way to find it than to take the actual statement of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I quite agree that we want to get at the facts, and I do not know of any better way than to take the report of the Secretary of the Treasury himself. I took his estimates and quoted them, because it is a confusing and almost an interminable job to take up the various estimates that were made on the various items and put them together. It would unduly encumber the RECORD in this case. So I have done that which we all do when we are legislating for our country. We take the estimates of the Treasury Department as to the needs of the country and act upon those estimates. We pass legislation each session relying upon them, and nothing more, and it does seem to me that in a case of this kind we ought to consider these estimates in regard to legislation of this sort.

But I may say that it is immaterial to me, for the purpose of the point which I desire to present at this time, whether we have reduced the indebtedness more than four billion and a half or four billion or three billion and a half. It is admitted by everybody that there has been an enormous reduction in both the permanent funded indebtedness of the country as well as in the floating debt of the country.

In that view of the case, does this country want to be deterred from doing justice to a large number of the young men of this country who were taken away from the farms and the firesides and the shops to fight our battles in Europe? If we owe them anything, in view of this most remarkable statement of the situation of the country, should we not pay it?

I want to show that it is not proposed to make any excessive payments to those men. I hope the minds of Senators, as well as the minds of the people at large, will be disabused upon that proposition. There will be no immediate drain of any very large amount of money from the Treasury of the United States by reason of this bill. My humble judgment is that in the first year of its operation there will not be needed more than $200,000,000. What do you think of that statement, that there will not be needed the first year to carry out the purposes of this bill more than $200,000,000?

In view of the state of the Treasury, when we are reducing our debt by about a billion dollars a year, if we can not provide the means otherwise, do you not think we could give to those men out of the money intended for debt reduction at least $200,000,000 the first year? I want to explain why I make the statement that there will be, under the provisions of this bill, if put into force immediately, a drain of only a very small amount of money.

Mr. President, that necessitates making some observations as to the provisions of the bill. I shall be very brief, but I think it is important that the country understand just what is proposed by the bill as it came over from the House.

There is a cash provision in this bill that there shall be paid to the ex-service men a dollar a day for home service for the time they served in the Army in excess of 60 days. There has already been paid to each ex-service man $60 upon his discharge from the Army. So no provision is made for payment for the first 60 days they were in the Army. It provides a dollar a day for home service in the United States for each day in excess of 60 days; a dollar and a quarter for each day of service abroad. It is estimated by my distinguished colleague upon the Finance Committee, who reported this bill, that if every soldier took his pay in cash under this first provision, and took it at once, it would amount to only about a billion and a half dollars. But it is provided that that sum of money shall be paid in quarterly installments, not exceeding $50 each. So the payments, if all in cash, would extend over into the third year at least. Those receiving above $400 would get the last of their money during the third year, in $50 installments, and if any of them received the maximum amount, $625, they get the last payment in the fourth year.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator, who, I know, is very much interested in the welfare of the soldiers, if he does not really think there ought to be no distinction between those who served at home and those who served abroad? Each one performed his entire duty, and all of them wanted to get abroad if it was possible. Some of those who got abroad did not get within many miles of the firing line, and those on this side, ready and eager to go, perhaps passed through as many hardships and were in the service about as long as those who went abroad.

I further call the attention of the Senator to the fact that such distinction was made by the House and not on the recommendation of any of those representing the soldiers themselves. Their idea was that if they had adjusted compensation all must be treated alike. But for some reason—and I can not imagine what, unless it was merely a desire to make the amount a little less—the House passed the bill allowing only a dollar to those who did not succeed in getting abroad and gave the extra quarter of a dollar a day to those who were able to cross the ocean. I simply desire to get the view of the Senator himself as to what he believes ought to be the rule which should govern Congress in fixing the amount.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not care to be diverted from my line of thought to discuss that question at this time and for this reason. The question now raised by the Senator from North Dakota was never raised in the committee, and the committee itself has reported the bill to the Senate with the House action upon that provision; but, so far as my personal views are concerned, I think that the question is one well worthy of thorough consideration and investigation.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to correct the statement he just made that it was not considered. In taking the testimony the question was presented to one of the witnesses who represented the American Legion as to why any distinction should have been made, and he stated practically as I have stated, that it was not their thought when the bill was presented to make any distinction, but they were ready to accept whatever Congress in its wisdom saw fit to put into the legislation.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think it is quite right that the Senator should put into the RECORD at this time the statement which he has just made, so that those views may go out to the country and the situation may be understood. If that were done, it would only increase by 25 per cent the compensation to the people who remained at home.

Mr. McCUMBER. Scarcely that; because it must be remembered that the 60 days are first taken off from those who had home service, which are not taken off the other service. So it would be even less.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes; the Senator is quite right about that.

The next feature of the bill is a most interesting one. It comes under title 3 and bears the title of adjusted service certificates. I wish to state just briefly what the adjusted service certificates are and show the advantage which any ex-service man would have in taking one of the certificates rather than taking cash payment. The cash payment to which he would be entitled is ascertained. To that is added 40 per cent, and then to that is added compound interest at 4½ per cent for 20 years, in order to ascertain the amount of the certificate. In other words, to use roughly an illustration, an ex-service man who would be entitled to $500 as ex-service pay would be entitled under the certificate plan to a certificate of approximately $2,000.

What is this certificate? It is a contract very similar to an endowment life insurance policy on which the person owning the policy may obtain a loan. It means that at the end of 20 years if the ex-service man is still alive he will get $2,000. If he dies the next day after he gets his certificate his dependents will get $2,000. After two years he may make a loan and may obtain from the Government Treasury 90 per cent of his ex-service adjusted pay plus 4½ per cent interest, which will be a little more than the total amount of his adjusted service pay.

Do not Senators believe that the great majority of the ex-service men will avail themselves of that plan? If they do, there will be no drain upon the Treasury under that plan for at least two years, except for those who may die in the meantime. I desire to have the Senate consider whether that is not one of the arguments which makes for the adoption of the bill as an emergency measure at this session of Congress. If we are going to provide the adjusted service pay for these people, if we are going to give to them this endowment insurance policy, ought it not to be given to them now, so that the dependents of those who may pass to the great beyond within the next two years will get some of the benefits of it? That would not make any great drain upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, has the Senator explained the principle upon which the adjusted pay, known as the cash bonus, is increased by 40 per cent under the provision for a certificate?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I believe I have already explained that.

I turn to the next provision of the bill, called the vocational training aid. That plan provides for the payment by way of vocational aid of $1.75 a day while the ex-service man is taking his vocational training. I do not know how many ex-service men would take vocational training. I apprehend there would be a considerable number of them, but there would not be a sufficient number to make any extraordinary drain upon the Treasury of the United States. So, is not the only factor to be considered whether we want to do that thing now, or do we want to defer vocational training aid?

The average age of the ex-service men at the conclusion of the war was 25 years. The average age this year is approaching 28. If we are going to give them any vocational training aid, when do we want to give it? Do we want to wait until they are old and gray, until they have had to mark out their own walks in life without any assistance from their Government? Is that what is wanted? If there is an ex-service man to-day who is willing that his adjusted pay shall be used in his vocational training, it is my humble hope that he may have it before it is too late. Here is a young man looking into the future, desiring a vocation, expecting his Government to aid him in obtaining the training for that vocation. Are we going to wait? Should it not be done now? It will not make any extraordinary drain upon the Treasury of the United States.

Another provision of the bill is that we loan an ex-service man the amount of his adjusted pay with 40 per cent added for the purchase of a home or a farm. Provision is made to see that it shall go into the home or the farm. That might make a considerable drain upon the Treasury of the United States at this time, but if we desire to withhold that provision it would be easy to do it. It is proposed in the bill as presented to the Senate by the committee not only to withhold that provision until January, 1923, but to withhold every other provision of the bill until that time. So far as I am concerned I would let that provision go into the bill now and go into operation now. I do not believe there would be any excessive drain upon the Treasury of the United States by reason of that plan.

Next is the land-settlement feature of the bill. That feature provides for the reclamation of land and to make an arrangement whereby the ex-service men may obtain farms. It provides not only for the irrigation of the arid lands of the West, but the drainage of the swamp lands of the country, and the preparation of the cut-over lands of the country. It is provided in the bill that there should be at least one plan of reclamation in every State in the Union. That simply means that a board is to be organized to spend some money in the bringing together of the data and the information regarding those projects, and finally decide upon the feasibility of the project.

If we are going to do that, when should we start? It will be at least two years, in my humble judgment, if the bill becomes a law during this Congress, before any soldier can obtain a farm under that provision of the bill. We are told that there are thousands of soldiers who want to get homes under that provision of the bill. If we are going to do it, if we desire to pass that kind of legislation, when should we begin? Shall we wait 2 years or 18 months before we even organize the board to begin its work?

Under the provision of the bill it is contemplated to use for that purpose in 10 years the sum of $250,000,000. Why should we not appropriate $25,000,000 now to begin the work at once? If we are going to carry on the program for 10 years why should we not start now when these men are needing just this thing? Look out over the land to-day. We are told there are 3,500,000 men out of employment. I have no doubt there are many thousands of the ex-service men out of employment. If we are going to aid them is not this the time? Are we going to let them drift? It is provided in the bill that if projects are taken up the ex-service men shall be given preference in the building of the work, in the reclaiming of the lands. Do not Senators wish to provide them with an opportunity to get employment now?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is there an appropriation carried in the bill to begin that work which the Senator has just been describing?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Unfortunately the bill does not carry an appropriation for any purpose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then, apparently the Senator is not extolling the merits of the bill in that regard.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I certainly am not, but I have prepared amendments to the bill which I introduced the other day and which have been printed. I think there should be an immediate appropriation at least for the vocational training and an immediate appropriation for the land-settlement plan.

I called the attention of the Senate to these matters the other day and criticized as severely as I could the fact that we have the bill coming to us from the House and coming to us from the Finance Committee of the Senate without the appropriation of a single dollar to carry into effect a single one of its provisions.

Mr. President, there is another amendment which I have prepared and which I discussed the other day, providing another plan whereby the ex-service men may obtain title to the remaining public lands of the United States. The amendment provides that the amount of their adjusted service pay shall be increased by 40 per cent and that then the ex-service man may apply for the purchase of stock-raising homestead lands or lands of lesser value of an area not exceeding 1,280 acres, at a price of $1.25 an acre. Under the provisions of the amendment the excess of the purchase price above the amount of the ex-service pay shall be settled by amortization payments in installments reaching as far into the future, if need be, as 40 years, and one-half of those proceeds shall go to the State where the lands are situated and the other half into the reclamation fund of the Government. Mr. President, without reading I should like to have printed as a part of my remarks the amendment to which I have just referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. JONES of New Mexico to the bill (H. R. 14157) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War; to provide revenue therefor, and for other purposes, viz: On page 34, line 20, insert the following:

TITLE VII.—LAND PURCHASES.

SEC. 701. Any veteran who shall not have obtained any of the benefits of the provisions of the previous titles in this act, and who shall not have any application pending for such benefits, shall have the right to purchase the public lands of the United States as hereinafter provided upon application therefor to the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 702. The public lands hereby made available for purchase under the terms and provisions of this title shall include all the unappropriated and unreserved public lands of the United States which have been, or may hereafter be, classified as lands suitable for entry under and in accordance with the provisions of the act, as amended, entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916, and commonly known as the "stock-raising homestead law," and all other nonmineral unappropriated and unreserved public lands of the United States, having a value not greater than the land classified in accordance with the provisions of the above-mentioned stock-raising homestead act.

(a) The veteran may purchase of such lands a tract not exceeding 1,280 acres. The selection shall consist of 40 acres or some multiple thereof in a reasonably compact form, and the purchase price shall be $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 703. The Secretary of the Interior, upon certification from the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as provided in section 5, is directed to credit to the veteran designated therein, in one payment or in installments, an amount equal to his adjusted service pay increased by 40 per cent. Such credit shall be applied on the purchase price and shall be considered as an initial payment of at least 5 per cent of the total value of such selection.

(a) A veteran may at his option, in lieu of payment in full at the time of entry, pay all balances due upon the purchase price of such land upon an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual installments sufficient to cover (1) interest on the unpaid principal at the rate of 5 per cent, and (2) such amount of the principal as will extinguish the debt within an agreed period not exceeding 40 years. At the option of the veteran the first installment due after the initial payment shall not commence until two years thereafter. The Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, whenever he is of the opinion that any emergency has caused default in the payment of any installment of the veteran, postpone the payment of such installment until such date as he deems expedient. Such postponed payments shall continue to bear interest on the unpaid principal at the rate of 5 per cent per annum from the date of the contract of purchase.

SEC. 704. (a) The veteran may, at his option, pay a sum in excess of any installment when due and receive credit therefor, and pay the full amount of the purchase price before maturity. Upon full payment a patent, with the same restrictions as patents authorized under said stock-raising homestead law, shall immediately be issued.

(b) No residence on or cultivation of such lands shall be required.

SEC. 705. If the veteran dies after making application in accordance with the provisions of section 4, and before having entered into a contract of purchase, the amount of his adjusted pay shall be paid to his estate in such installments and at such times as will place the beneficiaries thereof upon the same basis as the veteran would have been if he had originally chosen to receive adjusted service pay as provided in Title II.

(b) If the veteran dies previous to the completion of his contract of purchase, the successor by law to his interest in the land, if a widow or heir at law, may assume the contract of purchase. If the successor is other than a widow or heir at law, the balance due under the contract of purchase shall be due immediately and shall be paid within such time after the death of the veteran as the Secretary of the Interior shall by regulation prescribe.

SEC. 706. No lands, under this title, shall in any event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt contracted prior to the issue of the patent therefor. No transfer, assignment, mortgage, or lease of the interest of any purchaser shall, unless approved by the Secretary of the Interior, be valid previous to the issue of the patent for the land.

SEC. 707. Prior to the issue of a patent for any such land it shall be subject to taxation by any State, or political subdivision thereof, but only upon the appraised value of the owner's interest in the land and improvements thereon. If the owner fails to pay any such tax or assessment, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pay any such tax or assessment and to include the amount of the payment, together with interest and penalties at the rate provided by law for delinquent taxes in the State in which the land is located, in the installments payable under the contract of purchase.

SEC. 708. Upon the default of any payment due under, or upon the violation of, the provisions of the sections hereinbefore mentioned under Title VII, the interest of the purchaser shall revert to the United States free of all encumbrances, but subject to the right of the defaulting debtor, or any mortgagee, lien holder, judgment creditor, or subsequent purchaser to redeem the land within one year after the Secretary of the Interior gives notice of such default, by payment of all moneys due with interest at 8 per cent per annum from the date of default, and costs. The Secretary of the Interior, at his option, may cause the land to be sold at any time after such failure to redeem. From the proceeds of the sale the Secretary of the Interior shall retain all moneys due, with interest as provided, and costs. The balance of the proceeds, if any, shall be the property of the defaulting debtor or his assignee. In the case of sale after failure to redeem under this section, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to bid in such land at not more than the amount in default, including interest and costs.

SEC. 709. The selection and purchase of land under the provisions of this title shall not affect any right or privilege which such veteran has under the homestead and other public land laws of the United States.

SEC. 710. Any and all cash proceeds derived from the operation of this title shall be paid one-half to the State in which the purchased lands are located for the purpose of the support of the public schools or building roads, as the legislature may determine, and the other one-half shall be paid into the reclamation fund of the United States.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I realize that I have consumed more time by far than I had any thought of doing when I rose to present the statistics regarding the condition of the Treasury of the United States, but I want to call attention to one other situation which to my mind demands the serious consideration of the Congress and of the country.

I have heard from the other side of the Chamber many criticisms of the present administration because of the lack of preparedness for war. I have also heard from the other side of the Chamber many criticisms of the administration because of unpreparedness for peace. We have had a Republican Congress now in session for two years, and I should like for some Senator on the other side of the Chamber to point to a single measure which has passed this Congress, which is about to expire, looking toward preparedness for peace. We have been in session for almost two years, but who can point to a single measure which makes for preparedness for peace? I do not believe any can be found.

There is, however, a situation which confronts this country that does demand that something shall be done by way of preparedness for peace. During the last year our exports to foreign countries amounted to about eight and a quarter billion dollars; our imports amounted to only about five and a quarter billion dollars, leaving a balance of trade in favor of the United States of about $3,000,000,000. How was that financed? It was not paid for in gold because the gold did not exist. There is in the world to-day, used as money, less than $9,000,000,000 of gold. The United States has more than one-third of it, leaving in the treasuries of all other countries combined less than $6,000,000,000 of gold. Remember the exports from this country last year amounted to over $8,000,000,000. If those countries to whom the exports were sent should undertake to pay for them in gold, it would take all the gold in the world outside of the United States and then they would owe us 33⅓ per cent for one year's exports.

The balance of trade has been financed by the advance of credit by the banks and the business men of this country. How long is that going to continue? How long can that keep up?

Moreover, the great majority of the markets to which we have been sending our products are bankrupt or are nearly so. How long can they continue to purchase exports in such enormous volume? I submit not for long. I do not want to blast the hopes of any of the business interests of the country, but I know they realize the time is at hand when something must be done to take care of the situation. We hear of the blast furnaces cooling down, the men going out of employment. What are we going to do? How is the prosperity of the country to be brought about? How is it to be made secure? How is it to be made to extend into the future? Are we going to do nothing? We have had a Congress here for two years which has not turned a wheel in that direction.

My judgment is that there will be, and by the very nature of the situation there must be, a diminishing of our export trade. If that shall occur, where are we going to find employment for the millions of men who are now out of employment? My judgment is that we have got to turn to internal development, to internal improvement, to use our activities and our energies at home and make this country a better and brighter place in which to live; make it more comfortable for the mothers upon the farms and for those in the humble homes throughout the country. Why should we not do it? Why should we expend all of our energy and all of our efforts in sending steel abroad? Why should we not build good roads at home; why should we not build good schools at home? Why should we not educate the youth of this land? Why should we not stamp out illiteracy in this land? Why should we not reclaim the arid lands of the West and drain the swamp lands of all sections of the country? Why should not all those things be done?

Mr. President, it has grown almost into a conviction with me that the Senate is whiling away its time wholly unapprehensive of the great emergency which confronts our country and which confronts the ex-service men of our country.

I am not going to move to take up the so-called bonus bill. By the point of order which I made on yesterday I have made it possible to move to replace the naval appropriation bill and take up the bonus bill for consideration. The parliamentary situation now will warrant a motion made by any Senator to take up that bill for consideration. To my mind it is quite evident the naval bill will not pass at this session of Congress, and it is a useless waste of time further to consider it.

Personally, I am in favor of a strong Navy, and I do not mean to voice any opposition to the naval appropriation bill; I do not want anybody to feel that what I am doing here regarding the bonus bill is because of any opposition on my part to the consideration or the passage of the naval appropriation bill; but I think that the burden rests upon the leaders of the majority side of the Chamber to bring the bonus bill before this body. I realize that if I were to make such a motion that it would be defeated unless it had the support of the majority leaders on the other side of the Chamber. So, I feel that I shall have performed my duty when I have explained to the Senate, and I hope to the country, just what the situation is, and then let the responsibility rest upon the side of the Chamber which must bear it.

MILITARY CONFIRMATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to make an additional request with respect to the confirmation of Army promotions, transfers, and original appointments. The list which I am going to send to the desk and ask consideration for has been already reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and after consultation with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], I desire to say to the Senate there can be no opposition from any source against these nominations. I therefore ask unanimous consent, as in open executive session, that the Senate proceed to accept the report and act upon the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Is there any objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have no objection, but I have some curiosity. I should like to know if these nominations are original appointments, or if they are regular appointments?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are appointments of all kinds. There are a few nominations of chaplain, which are original appointments; there are some appointments by transfer from one branch of the service to another, which does not involve promotion at all; and there are 47 lieutenants being promoted to captains, but they do not happen to fall in the category of those against which the Senator from Tennessee has complained. He has seen the list, and it is entirely agreeable to him.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not think it has been made clear that the nominations, the confirmation of which was objected to by the Senator from Tennessee, are not to be confirmed under the arrangement which is now suggested by the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; they are not.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is merely proposed to confirm certain classes of nominations that do not come within the list mentioned by the Senator from Tennessee. I wish that all of the nominations could be confirmed, not only those on the list presented by the Senator from New York but also the other military nominations which are still pending before the Senate and upon which the Senate has taken no action. I shall certainly not object to the request of the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, as I understand, these promotions are not affected by the selective-list basis of promotion at all? They are not affected by that law?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are not affected in the way to which the Senator from Tennessee objects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from New York whether the conference report which I understand has been adopted upon the Army bill and which fixes the number of the personnel of the Army at 150,000 would in any way affect these promotions?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all. The Senator has the number a little low. The Army bill as finally adopted provides for 163,000, but that is just the enlisted men. It also provides for 14,068 officers. These officers whose names are sent in here for confirmation are already in the Army. These are promotions and transfers.

Mr. KING. I did not know but that these promotions, at least some of them, were based upon the presumption that the Army for the next year would be at least 175,000, and from that number up to two hundred and some-odd thousand, and that with the reduction which the bill as it finally passed made in the personnel of the Army it would necessarily affect the promotions.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; it does not.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Does the Senator desire to have the names read?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask to have the nominations confirmed en bloc, and the President notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations will be confirmed en bloc, and the President so notified.

The nominations referred to will be found at the end of today's proceedings.

NOMINATION OF NORMAN H. DAVIS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent, as in open executive session, to have confirmed the nomination from the Foreign Relations Committee which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is asked for the immediate consideration of a nomination which will be stated by the Secretary.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Norman H. Davis, of New York City, to be Undersecretary of State.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the nomination?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have no objection whatever. I am very glad to see Mr. Davis confirmed, and I think there are very good reasons for his confirmation; but as a good many others are withheld, I should be glad to have the Senator from Massachusetts make a short statement for the RECORD showing the necessity of the confirmation and why this is differentiated from other nominations.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, Mr. Davis is going out of office. In my judgment he has been a very competent officer, and I am very glad that he shall have this confirmation; but there is another question connected with it. He is carrying on negotiations connected with the International Communications Commission as to telegraph lines, and I think it is probable that he will be asked to continue that work after he withdraws from his present office.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That was my understanding as to why the Senator was willing to have this nomination confirmed, and I think it is very proper that it should be confirmed; but there are a great many confirmations that our side have been beseeched to make, and as the Senator is discriminating I think it is well for the RECORD to show that there is a governmental reason and not a personal reason for discriminating against other people.

Mr. LODGE. If I may say in open session what I should say in executive session, there was a suggestion of confirming him for the position of commissioner on that commission, and he expressed a preference to be confirmed as Undersecretary of State, because the other matter might be arranged better.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, Mr. Davis is a very able man, a citizen of my State, and I have no doubt that he has rendered very valuable services to his country, both in France, where he assisted in the negotiation of the treaty as one of the financial advisers, and since he returned here as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and then as Undersecretary of State; and I should be delighted to see him confirmed, and delighted to see any honor conferred upon a Tennesseean.

I have just come into the Chamber, and I understand that there is a motion to confirm Norman H. Davis as Undersecretary of State as in open executive session.

Mr. LODGE. That was the request. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. SHIELDS. It is a request for unanimous consent to confirm the nomination of Mr. Davis as in open executive session?

Mr. LODGE. Yes. He can be confirmed in no other way; neither can anybody else.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I am glad to pay this tribute to the ability of this distinguished Tennesseean.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the confirmation of Mr. Davis? The Chair hears none, and he is confirmed. The President will be notified.

NOMINATION OF FINIS J. GARRETT.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I desire to say that there is another very distinguished Tennesseean, a man with a national reputation, a man known to every citizen of Tennessee, a man whom the people have favored, the confirmation of whose nomination now pending before the Senate—because it has never been referred to the proper committee, the Committee on the Judiciary—is desired, I should say, by nine-tenths of the people of Tennessee.

We have but one Republican daily paper published in Tennessee and it is the only one published south of Mason and Dixon's line. It is a great paper, the Knoxville Journal and Tribune, a prosperous paper, ably edited, broad and liberal. Its editor was a captain in the Federal Army, now growing old, but one of the purest, best, and broadest men that ever lived—Capt. William Rule. I am glad to be able to say here on this occasion that that paper, when this Tennesseean of whom I am going to speak was nominated for a high office in Tennessee, came out in a strong editorial and said that there was some opposition to him, or was supposed to be, on account of politics, and deprecated any such action. It said he was an able man and an able lawyer, an honor to the State, and the paper hoped the Republicans of the United States Senate would offer no objection to him and would confirm the nomination promptly.

That Tennesseean is and has been for 14 years a leading Member of the House of Representatives. He comes here every time practically without opposition. He is a lawyer born. He has as fine a conception of legal principles and discussion as any man I know of anywhere. He has not practiced for that time his profession. He did not practice it a great while in Tennessee, because he was early selected to represent in the House one of the greatest districts in that State, and has been here since. Since he has been here he has studied law, he has devoted himself to the business of the House, and is now one of the greatest lawyers, as shown by the debates, in the House. He has every qualification in character, learning, and ability to discharge the duties of the high office to which he has been nominated. I speak of the Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT, who was nominated by President Wilson as far back as November, 1920, for an office that had been made vacant by the death of Hon. John E. McCall, a distinguished judge, a Republican appointed by President Roosevelt judge of the western judicial district of Tennessee.

There can be no objection to the confirmation of the nomination of FINIS J. GARRETT as judge of that district. There is no reason for it in any way upon his merits and his qualifications. Now, while this request is made, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, the leader of the Republican side, also to request that in this open executive session Mr. GARRETT'S nomination be confirmed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it was my privilege to serve in the House of Representatives for a period of 10 years with the Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT. He is one of the ablest and most forceful Members of that body. He possesses a brilliant legal mind. He is a great student and a forceful speaker. There is necessity for the confirmation of his appointment, due to the condition of the legal business in the district, the judgeship having been vacant for many months. The business of the district is not only important, but it is very great. There are pending upon the dockets of that district a large number of cases. Every reason exists why this nomination should be confirmed.

In addition to the fact that Mr. GARRETT is a great lawyer, and possessed of a judicial temperament, there is another reason that I want to bring to the attention of the Senate, and particularly to the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts, why this nomination should be acted upon at this time.

Comity between the two Houses of Congress should prompt the Senate to give consideration to this nomination. As all Senators know, there is an unwritten rule in the Senate that when the name of a Member of this body is presented for appointment to office, the Senate acts promptly upon it. Within the period of my service in Congress, extending over 18 years, I never have known an instance in which the Senate failed to confirm a Member of this body when nominated for appointment to another position. The House of Representatives feels that some consideration should be given to nominations of Members of that body; that the Senate, in a spirit of fairness and generosity, ought not to ignore the nominations of its Members to other positions.

Mr. GARRETT is one of the most popular Members who has ever served in the House of Representatives within my experience. His confirmation would be gratifying to all of his associates, without regard to their politics. Perhaps 20 Republican Members of Congress have spoken to me about this case within the last 30 days. There is a feeling in the House that the Senate ought to apply to Members of that body the same rule that it applies to Members of the Senate. In addition to that, there is a deep-seated conviction that on account of the abilities of this nominee, demonstrated throughout 14 years of effective service in the House of Representatives, the Senate ought to treat his nomination with consideration.

I therefore join ardently in the request that the Senator from Tennessee has made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. From all I hear, all that the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Arkansas have said in regard to Mr. GARRETT is quite true. It is not at all a parallel case to the nomination on which I asked action, for Mr. Davis will go out of his office voluntarily in a very short time, and there is no intention of keeping him. The nomination of Mr. GARRETT is for a position he will hold for life, or during good behavior, a judicial appointment. We are to have a change of administration within a few hours, and I do think that the appointments of Federal judges, where they will hold for life, ought to be reserved for the President who is coming in, and we should not forestall him. Therefore, though it is not an agreeable duty, I shall have to object to Mr. GARRETT'S confirmation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, of course the Senator has the right to exercise his prerogative, as every other Senator has, and prevent a nomination from going through by unanimous consent. I only want to say that I regret very much that the Senator has found it necessary to make an objection to the confirmation of Representative GARRETT. I recognize the fact that it is natural that the party coming into power should want the offices. It is perfectly natural that they should hold up political appointments. That, to some extent, has been done before. But practically no civil appointments have been allowed to go through at this time. This, I think, is a case where an exception might well be made. A faithful Representative, who is known to us all, has been nominated for a judgeship.

There is a reason why an appointment should not go to action without consideration by a committee where the applicant is unknown, where it is necessary to search out his character and his qualifications. But in this instance that is unnecessary. Every man in the Senate, practically, knows Mr. GARRETT, has known him for years, knows his ability, his high character, his learning, and the many personal qualifications that would make him an excellent judge. I regret very much, personally, that the Senator from Massachusetts is unwilling to give consent to the request of the Senator from Tennessee, and hope he yet may conclude to change his mind with reference to the matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I just want to say this about the nomination of Mr. GARRETT as judge of the Federal court for the western district of Tennessee: That district has been in existence for many years. It happens to be an overwhelmingly Democratic district, and that court never in its history has been presided over by a Democratic judge. This is the first Democrat, so I am informed, who has ever been nominated for that position in that district.

It just happens that the gentleman nominated is a man known not only to the Members of both Houses of Congress but he is known throughout the country. He is an able, vigorous, fearless legislator; he is a lawyer of ability; and he would make a splendid judge. He is admirably fitted for the place—by education, by training, by ability, by judicial temperament—and I do not believe that anything could be brought against him which would in any way disqualify him for this high place. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his objection to Mr. GARRETT'S confirmation. I believe he is one of the only two men whose names have been sent in for any office who are Members of the House.

Again, while there is no fixed rule about it, it seems to me that as a matter of courtesy to the House the appointment of Mr. GARRETT as Federal judge should be confirmed, both on account of merit and additionally on account of the fact that he is a House Member. I understand the situation which exists, and I hope my distinguished friend from Massachusetts will withdraw his objection and let Mr. GARRETT'S nomination be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LODGE. I am very sorry to be disagreeable and to appear unyielding, but this being a request for the confirmation of a judge for life, or during good behavior, while we are on the eve of the inauguration of a new President, I can not in justice to others accede to the request, and I must repeat my objection.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am so much in earnest in behalf of Mr. GARRETT, and I know that I so nearly voice the sentiments of almost the united bar of western Tennessee, that I want to appeal to Senators on the other side of the Chamber, and especially the Senator from Massachusetts, to be as broad as President Roosevelt was, to be as broad as President Taft was. President Roosevelt appointed Democrats to high judicial offices.

A district court is the lowest of the United States courts, yet those two Presidents appointed circuit judges, and President Taft appointed Mr. Justice White to the highest judicial office in the world.

I would dislike to believe that the President elect, Mr. Harding, is not as broad and liberal and as just a man as his two distinguished predecessors, and I appeal to Senators on the other side to follow the precedents of those Presidents and to do what I believe President Harding is broad enough to do. This nomination is before us, and I hope the Senators on the other side will withdraw their objection and let Mr. Garrett be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made.

NOMINATION OF FRED K. NIELSEN.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I report from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Fred K. Nielsen as the Solicitor of the State Department, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration as in open executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the nomination of Fred K. Nielsen, of Nebraska, as Solicitor of the Department of State, be confirmed.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Nielsen was appointed in June by the President and has never been confirmed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know about this matter. I may not have any objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, Mr. Nielsen was asked by Norman H. Davis, as a special favor, to give up his law practice in Nebraska and come here as Assistant Solicitor in the State Department. He did so at the earnest request of Mr. Norman Davis—closed his law office and came here—and has been working since June, and the nomination has been sent in. All that is asked that he be confirmed, for that reason only. He did not ask for the appointment, but he served in the State Department for nearly a dozen years, and then went into the practice of the law. A man who had served a long time in the State Department resigned, and they knew nobody in the United States who had the knowledge this man had of the work of the department, and they begged him to come here, and it is only to fulfill really a Government obligation to this man.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I have no objection to nominations which are valid, nominations of good men, but I do not know anything about this one, and I want to say to the Senator from Minnesota that we will have several hours yet before the Congress adjourns, and this nomination can be confirmed up to the last minute. I ask the Senator to withdraw his request for the present. I will make a little investigation.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say to the Senator from Alabama that Mr. Nielsen is a very able man, has been here for a long time, and it seems to me an outrage not to pay him his salary while he is on duty here.

NOMINATION OF MELVIN H. COULSTON.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I report from the Committee on Patents the nomination of Mr. Melvin H. Coulston, of New York, to be Commissioner of Patents, and I ask unanimous consent, as in open executive session, that the nomination may be confirmed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I realize the importance of this proposition. It is necessary to have this man immediately to sign the papers, and I understand the governmental proposition. This is a Government necessity, and I have no objection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The present commissioner will withdraw from office very shortly. He is a Democrat, his tenure of office terminates on the 4th of March, and it would leave us with no head to the Patent Office with the power to sign patents.

Mr. SHIELDS. Does the term expire automatically?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It does.

Mr. SHIELDS. Does he go out of office automatically on the expiration of the term, or does he hold over until his successor is appointed and qualifies?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The term ends on the 4th of March. I have here a telegram from the former Commissioner of Patents, Mr. Ewing, asking me to do all I can to have this nomination confirmed. He says that the present commissioner will go out of office automatically on March 4, and there will be no one to sign the patents, which are all printed and dated several weeks ahead.

These officials will hold their commissions at the pleasure of the President, for the time being, so that Mr. Harding will not be embarrassed by the confirmation. The same testimony was given before the Committee on Patents by many of the officials of the department. The greatest pressure has been brought to bear upon us not to leave the Government Patent Office without any head to it, even for a few days.

Mr. SHIELDS. Under those circumstances I will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the nomination of Melvin H. Coulston as Commissioner of Patents is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

COLD-STORAGE FOODS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GRONNA submitted the following report:

The second committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9521) to prevent hoarding and deterioration of and deception with respect to cold-storage foods, to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate commerce, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That this act may be cited as the 'United States cold storage act.'

"SEC. 2. Whenever used in this act,—

"(a) The term 'person' includes an individual, partnership, corporation, or association;

"(b) The term 'commerce' means commerce among the several States or between any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia and any foreign nation, or between any Territory or the District of Columbia and any State, or between any Territory and any other, or between any Territory and the District of Columbia, or within any Territory or the District of Columbia, or between points in the same State but through any other State or any Territory or the District of Columbia or any foreign nation;

"(c) The term 'cold storage' means the storage or keeping of any article of food at or below the temperature of 45 degrees above zero (Fahrenheit) in a cold-storage warehouse;

"(d) The term 'article of food' means—

"(1) Meat, meat products (including all edible portions of food animals), poultry and game whether drawn or undrawn, poultry products, game products, fish, fish products, shellfish, oysters and clams;—if fresh, cooked, prepared, cured, or frozen;

"(2) Eggs or portions thereof;—if in shell, dried, or frozen;

"(3) Butter, oleomargarine, lard, lard substitutes, butter substitutes, and cheese;

"(4) Oils for food purposes; and

"(5) Milk, evaporated or powdered;—

"but does not include any such article not intended or designed for food purposes which is plainly and conspicuously marked in such manner as correctly to show the fact in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe;

"(e) The term 'cold-storage warehouse' means any place, including a car, vessel, or other vehicle, in which the temperature is artificially cooled to or artificially maintained at or below 45 degrees above zero (Fahrenheit); but does not include a place used exclusively for storage of any article of food for the sole use of the occupant, owner, or maintainer thereof (1) for consumption by himself or his family or guests, or (2) in his business of serving meals, or (3) in connection with his retail business only, except that such place shall, in respect to any article of food held therein for more than 30 days in connection with such retail business, be deemed a cold-storage warehouse for the whole of the period of storage therein of such article;

"(f) The term 'warehouseman' includes any person maintaining or operating a cold-storage warehouse; and any person who rents and controls a room or space therein; and

"(g) The term 'mark' includes stamp, brand, tag, and label, and the term 'marked' includes stamped, branded, tagged, and labeled.

"SEC. 3. (a) It shall be unlawful at any time more than 30 days after an article of food is first placed in cold storage for any person to ship, deliver for shipment, sell or offer for sale, in commerce, or to hold in cold storage in commerce, or having received in commerce, to sell or offer for sale in the original unbroken package, such article of food, unless it is plainly and conspicuously marked, in accordance with this act and the regulations thereunder, in such manner as correctly to show (1) the words 'cold storage,' (2) all the dates when put in and taken out of cold storage, and (3) the names and locations of all the cold-storage warehouses in which stored, or suitable distinguishing designations thereof approved by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose.

"(b) If any article of food which is required by subdivision (a) of this section to be marked, is subdivided, or is in or is placed in a container, or is transferred to a different container, the person who is liable under this act for any failure to have such article of food marked, shall mark the subdivision or the container thereof in the same manner as provided by subdivision (a).

"(c) If (1) an article of food that has not been held in cold storage is mixed or mingled with an article of food, whether or not of the same kind, that is or has been held in cold storage, or (2) the containers of such articles of food are mixed or mingled, or (3) an article of food that is or has been held in cold storage is mixed or mingled with an article of food, whether or not of the same kind, that is or has been held in cold storage during a different period of time, or (4) the containers of such articles of food are mixed or mingled; then for the purposes of subdivisions (a) and (b) of this section and for the purposes of section 6, the dates required to be placed upon the article of food, if any, resulting from such mixing or mingling, or upon the containers so mixed or mingled, and from which the periods of time referred to in subdivision (a) and in section 6 are to be computed, shall be those of that one of such articles of food which was first placed in cold storage, and the names and locations of cold-storage warehouses shall be those of all such warehouses in which each of such articles of food is or has been held in cold storage.

"SEC. 4. If the Secretary of Agriculture finds that the proper and customary manner of handling any article of food is such that it is commercially impracticable to mark the same or the container thereof in accordance with this act, the person otherwise required under this act to have the same so marked shall furnish or display, as the Secretary of Agriculture may require, to the receiver of such article of food a written statement, or an invoice or bill of lading or other shipping document, which shall describe such article of food, shall correctly state the facts otherwise required by this act to be marked, in the manner prescribed in the regulations under this act, and shall be preserved and be subject to examination by an officer, employee, or agent duly authorized under this act, for such reasonable length of time as the Secretary of Agriculture deems necessary for the purposes of this act; except that, in the case, under this section, of a sale at retail to the consumer, the facts required by clauses (2) and (3) of subdivision (a) of section 3 may be omitted, unless otherwise requested by such consumer.

"SEC. 5. Except as otherwise permitted by this act, it shall be unlawful for any person (a) to alter, mutilate, destroy, obscure, obliterate, or remove any mark required by this act to be placed on any article of food or the container thereof, while it is in commerce or, having been transported in commerce, remains unloaded, unsold, or in the original, unbroken package, or (b) to alter, mutilate, destroy, obscure, or obliterate any statement, invoice, or document or portion thereof, required to be furnished or displayed, during the time the same is required to be preserved under section 4.

"SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful for any person to ship, deliver for shipment, sell, or offer for sale, in commerce, or to hold in cold storage in commerce, any article of food, or having received in commerce, to sell or offer for sale, in the original, unbroken package any article of food, after the expiration of 12 months following the date when such article of food was first placed in cold storage; except (1) that the Secretary of Agriculture may in such instances in respect to frozen eggs and portions thereof as he deems advisable, extend such period of time to not more than 18 months following the date when such eggs or portions thereof were first placed in cold storage, and (2) that the above provisions of this section shall not apply to cheese held for the purpose of ripening and improving the quality thereof.

"SEC. 7. The provisions of sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 shall not apply to any article of food shipped or sold or delivered for shipment to any foreign country, if in respect to the requirements of such section, the article of food complies with the specifications and directions of the purchaser or consignee in such foreign country and is not in contravention of the laws of such country; but if the article of food is not actually exported, this section shall not exempt such article of food from the operation of sections 3, 4, 5, and 6.

"SEC. 8. (a) No person shall receive in commerce any article of food for cold storage after the cold-storage warehouse in which it is to be stored is found by the Secretary of Agriculture, after due notice and hearing, to be insanitary or otherwise unfit for the storage of any such article of food. Such finding shall remain in force until the Secretary shall, after further hearing, determine that such condition has been remedied.

"(b) No person shall receive in commerce any article of food for cold storage in a cold-storage warehouse if such person has refused inspection, when requested under this act, of such warehouse; nor shall any person ship in commerce any article of food if he has refused inspection of such article of food when requested under this act.

"SEC. 9. In order to carry out the provisions of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture or any officer, employee, or agent specifically authorized by him in writing for the purpose may, on any business day during the usual hours of business, enter any cold-storage warehouse which receives, or from which is shipped or delivered, any article of food, in commerce, and may inspect such warehouse and the contents thereof, and any statements, books, papers, letters, or documents relating thereto.

"SEC. 10. (a) In order to carry out the provisions of this act and to provide information for the Congress, every warehouseman shall keep such records and accounts and make such reports, in such manner and form, verified under oath or otherwise, every three months and at such other times as the Secretary of Agriculture may require as to (1) the amounts and kinds of all articles of food or foodstuffs held or in transit in cold storage by such warehouseman, (2) loans made by such warehouseman upon the security of such articles or foodstuffs, (3) charges made by such warehouseman for storage and other services rendered by him, and (4) the size or capacity of his warehouse. The Secretary of Agriculture in his discretion may at any time require such further reports as he deems necessary or proper concerning the ownership, receipt, delivery, or transportation of any such articles of food or foodstuffs. Any information obtained by the Secretary of Agriculture under this act shall be available for the use of either House of Congress. The Secretary of Agriculture shall cause such information as may be of public interest to be published from time to time.

"(b) No person shall willfully (1) fail or refuse to make full and true entries or make any false entry in the accounts or records of his business required to be kept pursuant to this section, or (2) alter, mutilate, conceal, or destroy any such account or record, or (3) make any report required under this section which is false or fraudulent in any material particular, or (4) fail or refuse to make any report required under this section.

"SEC. 11. No person shall willfully hinder, obstruct, or resist the Secretary of Agriculture or any duly authorized officer, employee, or agent, in the performance of his duties under this act.

"SEC. 12. Any person who violates any provision of section 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, 11, or 16 shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment not more than one year, or both. After judgment of any court with respect to any violation of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture may give notice thereof by publication in such manner as he by regulation may prescribe. A person shall not be prosecuted for any violation of section 3, 4, or 6, resulting from the act, omission, or failure of any other person not acting for or employed by him, prior to the time when the article of food involved came into his possession or control, if he shows that such violation was not knowingly committed by him and also (except in such cases as the Secretary of Agriculture deems necessary and advisable and shall by regulation prescribe), establishes a written guaranty signed by such other person, who shall be a resident of the United States, from whom he obtained the possession or control of such article of food, to the effect that such article of food has not been in cold storage or that, if it has been in cold storage and is apparently marked or represented in accordance with subdivision (d) of section 2 or section 3 or 4, the marks or representations are true. The guaranty shall contain the address of the person required to sign it, and such person shall be amenable to the prosecution, fine, penalty, or imprisonment which would otherwise attach to the person to whom he delivered the possession or control of the article of food.

"SEC. 13. (a) When construing and enforcing the provisions of this act, the act, omission, or failure of any person acting for or employed by any individual, partnership, corporation, or association, within the scope of his employment or office, shall in every case also be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such individual, partnership, corporation, or association, as well as of such person.

"(b) If any person acting for or employed by any individual, partnership, corporation, or association, negligently or willfully omits personally to perform any necessary act or properly to supervise or apportion duties among his subordinates, in the execution of the authority or functions vested in him, and by reason of such omission a violation of this act directly results, he shall be liable to all the penal and other provisions of this act with respect to such violation; but nothing in this subdivision shall be held to relieve the individual, partnership, corporation, or association from such provisions.

"(c) The provisions of this section shall be held to extend and not to limit the application of section 37 or 332 of the act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States,' approved March 4, 1909, as amended.

"SEC. 14. (a) Whenever in the case of any article of food being offered for importation, the Secretary of Agriculture has reason to believe that any provision of this act is being violated with respect to such article of food, he shall give due notice and opportunity for hearing thereon to the owner or consignee, and certify such fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon (1) refuse admission and delivery to the consignee of such article of food, or (2) deliver such article of food to the consignee pending examination, hearing, and decision in the matter on the execution of a penal bond to the amount of the full invoice value of such article of food, together with the duty thereon, if any, and to the effect that on refusal to return such article of food for any cause to the Secretary of the Treasury when demanded, for the purpose of excluding it from the country or for any other purpose, the consignee shall forfeit the full amount of the bond.

"(b) If, after proceeding in accordance with subdivision (a) of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture is satisfied that any provision of this act is being violated with respect to such article of food, he shall certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon notify the owner or consignee and cause the sale or other disposition of such article of food refused admission and delivery or entered under bond, unless it is exported by the owner or consignee within three months from the date of such notice, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. All charges for storage, cartage, or labor on any such article of food which is refused admission or delivery or is entered upon bond shall be paid by the owner or consignee.

"SEC. 15. Whenever it appears that any article of food in cold storage in commerce is in such condition that it is likely immediately to become or is unsound, unwholesome, or unfit for food, the Secretary of Agriculture may cause the immediate seizure of such article of food and thereupon shall at once cause notice of the facts to be given to the United States district attorney for the district in which the article of food is seized. Such district attorney shall proceed without delay against such article of food in any court of the United States in such district for confiscation by process of libel for condemnation. If in the opinion of the court the article of food is in such condition that it is likely immediately to become or is unsound, unwholesome, or unfit for food, it shall be immediately disposed of by destruction or sale as the court shall direct, but such disposition shall not be contrary to any law of the United States, or of the State, Territory, or District where such destruction or sale takes place. The proceeds of any sale under this section, less legal costs and charges, shall be paid to the person entitled thereto. The proceedings in such libel for condemnation shall conform as nearly as may be to proceedings in admiralty and shall be at the suit and in the name of the United States. For the purposes of this section the Secretary of Agriculture may cause investigations, inspections, analyses, and tests to be made and samples to be collected of any article of food in commerce. The Department of Agriculture shall pay to the person entitled, upon his request, the reasonable market value of any such samples.

"SEC. 16. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to designate in writing specifically officers, employees, and agents of the Department of Agriculture to administer oaths for the purpose of this act. All such officers, employees, and agents are authorized and empowered to administer to or take from any person an oath, affirmation, or affidavit for the purposes of this act, or for use in prosecutions or proceedings thereunder. Any such oath, affirmation, or affidavit, authenticated by the official seal of the Department of Agriculture, shall, when offered for use in any proceeding under this act or in any court of the United States, have like force and effect as if administered or taken by or before the clerk of such court, without further proof of the identity or authority of such officer, employee, or agent. No such officer, employee, or agent shall demand or accept any fee or compensation whatsoever for administering or taking any oath, affirmation, or affidavit under the authority conferred by this act.

"SEC. 17. For the enforcement of this act the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, to be available until expended, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the Secretary of Agriculture (a) is authorized to prescribe and promulgate such regulations as may be necessary; (b) may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person; and (c) shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, not in conflict with existing law, and make such expenditures for rent outside the District of Columbia, printing, telegrams, telephones, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere.

"SEC. 18. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage; but no penalty, fine, forfeiture, or imprisonment shall be enforced for any violation occurring within 90 days after its passage.

"SEC. 19. No provision of this act shall be deemed to repeal or limit the operation of any provision of any other act of Congress, unless directly in conflict therewith.

"SEC. 20. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to certain circumstances is held unconstitutional, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to circumstances other than those as to which it is held unconstitutional shall not be affected thereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"An act to prevent hoarding and deterioration of, and deception with respect to, cold-storage foods; to regulate shipments of cold-storage foods in interstate and foreign commerce; and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

A. J. GRONNA,
E. D. SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
JAMES YOUNG,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, on the 9th day of February I submitted to the Senate a conference report on House bill 9521, the cold-storage bill. It passed this body unanimously, but the House objected to certain provisions. I want to explain those provisions very briefly before I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the report.

The conferees have again agreed. There was objection in the House to the provision fixing a period of 10 days for free cooling. It was thought that the time was insufficient. The Senate bill originally contained a provision for 30 days. The conferees have now stricken out the provision for free cooling, and have submitted in section 3, subsection a, the following, which I wish to read:

Section 3(a). It shall be unlawful at any time more than 30 days after an article of food is first placed in cold storage for any person to ship, deliver for shipment, sell or offer for sale, in commerce, or to hold in cold storage in commerce, or, having received in commerce, to sell or offer for sale in the original unbroken package, such article of food unless it is plainly and conspicuously marked in accordance with this act and the regulations thereunder, in such manner as correctly to show (1) the words "cold storage," (2) all the dates when put in and taken out of cold storage, and (3) the names and locations of all the cold-storage warehouses in which stored, or suitable distinguishing designations thereof approved by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose.

That gives the shipper 30 days before he will be compelled to mark the goods at all. Then there is a provision in the bill which gives an additional 30 days in cold storage before the article of food has to be sold as an article of food having been in cold storage; in other words, it gives a period of time of 60 days in all before the article of food becomes an article of food in cold storage.

Mr. SMOOT. Before it requires marking as such.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes. The other provision is in section 10. There were, inadvertently, two or three words left out and the conferees have rewritten section 10. These are the only changes made in the bill. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, this is legislation of tremendous importance and is of special importance to our section of the country. There were many protests came in after the conference report was agreed to before. I have, of course, relied upon the conferees. I have not had the time to look into the matter very closely. Furthermore, when the conference report was brought in before it rewrote some of the important provisions of the bill, but I was assured by the Senator from North Dakota that it would not injure any of the agricultural interests. I know that he was perfectly honest in that opinion, but when the people of my section became acquainted with the terms of the proposed bill they were opposed to it, and especially those interested in the production of fruits, such as apples.

Mr. GRONNA. Let me say to the Senator that fruit is not included in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Apples would not be covered?

Mr. GRONNA. No; fresh fruit and fresh vegetables are eliminated from the bill entirely.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Apples that have been in cold storage would be considered as fresh fruit?

Mr. GRONNA. Absolutely. They are not included under the terms of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Upon that assurance of the Senator from North Dakota I shall not object.

Mr. GRONNA. I assure the Senator they are not included. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] is a member of the committee and was interested in that same feature.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, may I inquire what period of time the articles included within the provisions of the bill may be in cold storage before the time begins to run in the limit of time fixed by the bill?

Mr. GRONNA. Sixty days.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That includes the cold storage of articles in shipment in refrigerator cars?

Mr. GRONNA. That is correct.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the bill relates to dehydrated fruit and dried fruit?

Mr. GRONNA. No; it does not include fruit of any kind, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I have had a number of protests in regard to eggs, and I am not quite clear as to the character of the protests. May I ask the Senator whether the bill now eliminates the objections which were made and, as I understand, made in very great number to those provisions of the bill which related to eggs?

Mr. GRONNA. There was a misunderstanding as to eggs, I think. The bill provides that an article of food having been in cold storage 12 months can not be shipped or enter into commerce or be sold as a food product at all. It was claimed by those who are engaged in the industry of frozen eggs that that time was insufficient, so we have left it discretionary with the Secretary of Agriculture to extend the time to 18 months in the case of frozen eggs. I am sure the objections have been eliminated.

Mr. KING. I recall now that some of the letters which I received indicated that frozen eggs would keep indefinitely, and that there ought not to be any limitation whatever in respect to that commodity.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that there is a deterioration in eggs as well as in other food products after 12 months. We had extended hearings on that. While they may be kept for 18 months and still be fit as an article of food, yet there is a deterioration after 6 months, and especially after 12 months.

Mr. KING. I am not sufficiently advised as to the merits and demerits of the bill to make any objection to the confirmation of the report, but I shall feel constrained to vote against the report. I shall not, however, object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

The report was considered and agreed to.

WASHINGTON MARKET CO.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9036) to repeal and annul certain acts of the charter and lease granted and made to the Washington Market Co. by act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington Market Co.," approved May 20, 1870.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 9036. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let the bill be read.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have understood that it is the desire to take a recess until 8 or 8.30 o'clock and then take up the calendar for unobjected House bills. I think we ought to do something of that kind.

Mr. MOSES. I made my request because I understood just the contrary and that this is the time to prefer unanimous-consent requests. It will not take two minutes to dispose of the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not object to consideration of the bill, but I think we ought to have some understanding about these matters. I would be glad to continue in session now and take up unobjected House bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9036) to repeal and annul certain parts of the charter and lease granted and made to the Washington Market Co. by act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington Market Co.," approved May 20, 1870, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it is hereby declared to be the desire, purpose, and intent of the United States to annul and hold for naught the lease made by Congress to the Washington Market Co. of reservation No. 7, in the District of Columbia, and to take over unto its own ownership, use, occupancy, and control the said grounds and buildings and improvements thereon and therein now held and occupied by the said market company and its tenants under authority of an act approved May 20, 1870, entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington Market Co.," and acts or laws amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto.

SEC. 2. That all of said market grounds and buildings, together with all improvements thereon and therein, shall be surrendered by the market company and taken over by and appropriated to and for the United States on the date of the payment to the said market company of a sum of money equal to 75 per cent of the amount of the award hereinafter provided, which said payment shall be made upon the filing of the award by the commission to be appointed as hereinafter provided, and the remainder of said award, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent per annum until paid, shall be paid to the said market company at the expiration of 30 days thereafter unless an appeal is noted to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, as hereinafter provided; and, in the event of such appeal, the balance unpaid of the award as finally determined shall be paid to the said market company within 20 days from the date judgment is rendered by said court of appeals, with interest thereon as hereinbefore provided.

Upon securing possession of said premises, and, until otherwise directed by Congress, the complete possession and control of said grounds, buildings, and improvements shall, for the benefit of the United States, vest in the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall first reserve so much of the grounds and space in said buildings as he may deem necessary for the use of the United States; and, after such reservation shall have been made, and until Congress shall otherwise direct, any remaining portion or portions of the said grounds, buildings, or improvements may be rented by the Secretary of Agriculture to the present tenants or to any other person or persons for such rental as may be agreed upon by the parties; but, in no event, shall any part of the premises be subleased by the tenant. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby empowered and directed to make and enforce such rules and regulations for the management and control of the said property as he may deem best for the enforcement of the provisions of said act.

The said Secretary shall not make or enter into any lease for any part of said premises for a longer period than one year, and all such leases and contracts shall be subject to cancellation and annulment by Congress at any time; and all revenues derived from said premises shall be the property of the United States. The rents and storage charges which are due or may become due to the market company up to the date of the taking over by the United States, but which remain unpaid at the time the property is taken over by the United States, shall belong to the market company; but if any rents or storage charges have been paid to the market company, on account of said reservation No. 7, for any period terminating on a date later than that of the taking over of the property by the United States, the market company shall account to and pay to the United States the proportion of such rents and storage charges which the unexpired portion of the period bears to the whole period for which payment has been made. Nothing herein shall be so construed as to relieve the market company of its liability for rentals, imposed by existing law, for any part of the period during which the property remains in the possession of the market company. Neither shall the market company be released from the payment of any taxes owing by them on account of said reservation No. 7 when taken over by the United States under the terms of this act; but the said market company shall not be chargeable with or liable for rental or taxes beyond the date of the taking over of said property.

The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized, out of appropriations made by Congress from time to time for that purpose, to employ such persons and purchase such materials as may be essential to the operation or maintenance of said property and for the proper management and control thereof; and he shall render a detailed report to Congress at the beginning of each regular term thereof of all revenues derived from and expenditures made on the said property.

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States, as soon as is practicable after the approval of this act, shall appoint a commission composed of three disinterested men, not more than one of whom shall be a resident of the District of Columbia, to appraise the said buildings and improvements thereon and therein which were erected or made at the expense of the Washington Market Co., and which stand and remain upon said reservation; the valuation thereof to be determined as of the date of filing said award; and the finding of a majority of said commission shall constitute the award. Any member of the commission who may dissent from the award made by the majority thereof shall make a minority report in writing, which shall be filed with the award and made part of the record to be considered by the court of appeals, if an appeal be taken as hereinafter provided. A copy thereof shall be delivered to the market company at the same time and place that the award is delivered.

No one shall be appointed on said commission if he be either a Member of Congress or an ex-Member thereof; nor if he be an officer or employee of the United States; nor if he be a stockholder in, or the owner or pledgee of any bond of the market company; nor if he be a creditor or debtor of the said market company or of any officer or stockholder thereof; nor if he be an officer or stockholder of any corporation which is either a creditor or debtor of any officer or stockholder of the market company; nor if he be, directly or indirectly, interested financially in the market company, any of its officers, stockholders or bondholders; nor if he be a tenant, lessee, bailee or bailor of the market company; nor if he be the owner or pledgee of any bond or of any of the capital stock of the market company; nor if he be an officer, agent, employee, tenant, bailee, or bailor of any firm, copartnership or corporation which is a tenant, bailee, or bailor of the market company; nor if he be attorney for any of the aforesaid.

Before entering upon the discharge of his duties, each member of said commission shall make oath before a justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to faithfully and impartially perform his duties according to law; and at the same time, that he is qualified under the provisions of this section, which oath shall be spread upon the order book of said court.

SEC. 4. That the said commission shall have power, and it shall be its duty, to subpœna witnesses, with or without books or papers, before it for either of the parties, and to require such witnesses to testify under oath administered by the chairman of said commission or by anyone authorized to administer oaths. Said commission shall give each party a full hearing on the question of what is a fair and just valuation of the buildings and improvements erected and made at the expense of the said market company on said premises, and remaining thereon when the award is made. And the commission shall daily furnish to the Attorney General and to the market company a stenographic copy of each day's proceedings.

Thereafter the said commission shall fix the amount to be awarded as a fair and just valuation of the buildings and improvements erected and made on said premises at the expense of the said market company and remaining thereon when the award is made; and the award of the commission, together with the record and evidence on which the same is based, shall, within six months from the date of the appointment and qualification of the members thereof, be filed in the office of the clerk of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, and copies of said award and minority report or finding, if any, together with said record and evidence, shall, on the day of the filing thereof, be delivered by said commission to the Attorney General of the United States and to the market company at its principal place of business in the District of Columbia.

If either party be dissatisfied with the amount of the award, such dissatisfied party may take an appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia by noting in the office of the clerk of the court of appeals an appeal therefrom within 30 days after the filing of said award, and perfect the said appeal within 60 days thereafter by filing the entire record, or a copy thereof, certified by the chairman or any two members of said commission, and filing it in the office of the clerk of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, which court is hereby vested with jurisdiction to hear and determine such appeal, and may revise the amount of the award as shall be just; and the judgment rendered by said court shall be final.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, by contempt proceedings or otherwise, to compel witnesses to obey the subpœnas hereinbefore provided for; to produce all records, and to testify before said commission, and generally to require observance of all reasonable rules and regulations adopted by the said commission.

SEC. 6. That a sufficient sum of money is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be disbursed by the President, to pay said award and interest and to compensate the members of said commission and a secretary and stenographer thereof to be chosen by said commission: Provided, That the total compensation made the members of the commission and the secretary thereof, including the stenographer and necessary expenses, shall not exceed $35,000.

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to assign one or more of the attorneys in the Department of Justice to represent the interests of the United States before said commission and before the court of appeals, if an appeal should be prosecuted thereto, and, generally, to represent the United States in all steps and proceedings looking to the enforcement of this act.

SEC. 8. That if at any time the Secretary of Agriculture, or his successor in charge of said reservation, should become satisfied that any lessee of said reservation, or any part thereof, or any person having property stored thereon, is guilty of overcharging, extortion, profiteering, or making any unconscionable bargain or sale he is hereby empowered and directed to cause such person, together with his goods and wares, to be ejected therefrom; and, further, forever afterwards denied the privilege of trading or being employed therein in any capacity whatever. The right or authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, or his successor in control of said reservation, to summarily and forthwith eject therefrom, as aforesaid, and to cancel the lease or contract of storage—either or both—without recourse to any judicial tribunal, of any person so offending is hereby made specific and mandatory. And no contract of lease or for storage shall be made or entered into by the said Secretary, or his successor, without such a provision being incorporated therein and agreed to by the lessee or bailor. If any such offending lessee or bailor be a firm, joint-stock company, copartnership or corporation, no member of, or stockholder in, any such concern shall be permitted thereafter to trade in said reservation or to store any article of merchandise or commerce therein.

The words "lessee," "bailor," "bailee," and "person" used herein shall, for the purposes of this act, be construed to include any firm, copartnership, joint-stock company and corporation.

SEC. 9. That all laws and acts, or parts of laws or acts, to the extent that they are in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOMINATION OF HENRY T. RAINEY.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to ask, as in open executive session, for the confirmation of the nomination of the Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY to the position of member of the Tariff Commission. Mr. RAINEY is a Member of the House of Representatives. He has been a Member of that body, I understand, for the past 18 or 20 years, and if any courtesies are to be extended to Members of the House, they surely ought to be extended to Mr. RAINEY in the present instance. I think we always have had here a rule to extend such courtesy to Members of the House as well as Members of the Senate nominated to positions for which confirmation by the Senate is required.

Mr. RAINEY has been for many years a member of the Ways and Means Committee of the House. He is now the ranking minority member of that committee in the absence of Mr. KITCHIN. His ability as a legislator and as a lawyer is beyond question. I know of no man in the House who possesses a greater amount of information and who has a better grasp of matters pertaining to tariff legislation and the imposition of tariff duties than has Mr. RAINEY.

I think every Member of this body is acquainted with Mr. RAINEY, because he is a man of national reputation; is one of the most prominent Members of the other House, and has been so for years. I think every man who knows Mr. RAINEY will bear witness to the truth of my statement that he is eminently fitted for the position to which he has been nominated by the President of the United States.

Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of my colleagues upon the other side of the Chamber to another fact in reference to this appointment. Senators will recall that the Tariff Commission is a bipartisan body. In the statute creating it, it is expressly provided that the appointees shall be divided between the two parties. Mr. RAINEY, though a Democrat appointed by a Democratic President, is appointed as one of the Democratic members of that body, as one of the members to which the Democratic Party under the law is entitled upon that body. I appeal to Senators not to apply to this nomination the rule which they have generally applied to Mr. Wilson's nominations during this session.

Whenever Mr. Wilson has sent up a nomination here during this session it has been said that the matter ought to be left open in order that the incoming President might make his own selection to help him in the administration of the affairs of the Government. This position now open on the Tariff Commission being a position to which a Democrat is entitled to be appointed, it does seem to me that that rule ought not to apply in this instance, and that the outgoing Democratic President ought to be permitted to fill the position rather than to hold it open in order that the Republican President may fill it.

I wish under these circumstances especially to appeal to my colleagues on the other side to permit the confirmation of this nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration——

Mr. MOSES. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Just a moment. Let the Chair state the question before any Senator objects. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration, as in open executive session, of the nomination of HENRY T. RAINEY as a member of the Tariff Commission. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

CONFIRMATION OF NAVAL NOMINATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, as in open executive session, I move that the Senate advise and consent to the list of nominations in the naval service which I send to the desk. I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration, as in open executive session, of certain nominations which the Secretary will report.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not ask to have the nominations read, but I should like to ask the Senator from Washington as to the substance of the request. Who are included in these nominations?

Mr. POINDEXTER. All of the naval nominations are included except the bureau chiefs. The list does not include nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. SWANSON. Then, I understand that nominations in the Marine Corps below brigadier general are not included.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; they are not.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like for the Senator to include in his report all appointments in the Marine Corps except brigadier general.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will ask the Senator to withhold that request until I can hold a conference with him. I will say there are certain complications in regard to the effect of confirming a portion of the list of nominations in the Marine Corps without taking action on others which need to be straightened out. There will be opportunity a little later to take up separately the matter of the Marine Corps nominations. Has the Senator any objection to the confirmation of the naval appointments?

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let us have that disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. May I ask, merely for information, of the Senator if the personnel of the Navy shall not be increased but shall be reduced to 100,000 will some of the officers whose names are embraced in this list be promoted?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, yes; they would all be promoted.

Mr. KING. Regardless of the number of the personnel?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Entirely regardless of that, because there is a great shortage of commissioned officers in the Navy even if the enlisted strength should be reduced below 100,000 men. Mr. President, as I understand, my request has been granted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the reading of the report will be dispensed with; and, if there be no objection, the nominations reported will be confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified. The Chair hears none.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until the hour of 8.30 p. m.

Mr. SWANSON. I simply wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I withdraw my request until I hear the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. The Marine Corps and the Army have always been treated similarly; they have been governed by similar rules; similar methods of promotion have obtained; the officers of the respective services have enjoyed similar rank and similar pay. All the Army appointments below the grade of brigadier general have been confirmed regardless of the effect it might have on others. It does seem to me right and proper, therefore, that the Marine Corps should have the same right extended to it as has heretofore been accorded to the Army.

I ask the Senators to let the nominations in the Marine Corps below grades of brigadier general be acted upon.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have already explained to the Senator from Virginia that I should like an opportunity to talk with him about the matter. There will be an opportunity later this evening to take up the subject to which he refers.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

BRIDGES ACROSS SAVANNAH RIVER.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I wish to obtain consideration for two bills, one of which passed the Senate yesterday and went to the other House, and the House has passed a similar bill, which is now on the Senate Calendar. I wish to ask that the Senate consider and pass these two bills, being House bill 10883 and House bill 10963.

Mr. CURTIS. Let us have the bills read before consent is given for their consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask that the question be put on my motion that the Senate take a recess until 8.30 o'clock this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington object to the request of the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to have the titles of the bills stated before unanimous consent is given for their consideration.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. They are only bridge bills.

Mr. CURTIS. If they are only bridge bills, I shall not object to their consideration.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I first ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House bill 10883.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10883) to authorize the counties of Beaufort, S. C., and Chatham, Ga., to construct a bridge across the Savannah River at or near Savannah, Ga.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10963) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge across the Savannah River near Haileys Ferry, between the counties of Anderson, S. C., and Hart, Ga.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to present to the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact into law Senate bill No. 4678.

I will state, for the benefit of the Senate and of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], who is chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining, that I introduced the bill referred to last December. Its purpose is to change the time for the performance of the annual assessment work on mining claims. The Senator is familiar with it. The bill if enacted into law would accomplish great good to the West, and I hope that he will bear the matter in mind.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall be glad to do so.

The joint resolution of the Legislature of Nevada was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, as follows:

Senate joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact into law Senate bill No. 4678, changing the time for the performance of annual assessment work on mining claims.

Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States, Senate bill No. 4678, introduced by Senator CHARLES B. HENDERSON, of Nevada; and

Whereas said bill amends the present law relative to the performance of assessment work and provides that the period in which annual assessment work shall be done in each year shall be between the 30th day of June of one year and the 1st day of July of the succeeding year; and

Whereas said bill if passed will be of inestimable benefit to prospectors and mine owners of Nevada: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the assembly concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, memorialized to enact into law said Senate bill No. 4678; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators representing Nevada, and Nevada's Representative in Congress be, and they are hereby, requested to work for the passage of and vote for the enactment of said law; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be authorized and directed to send a copy of this resolution signed by the governor of Nevada, president of the senate, and the speaker of the assembly to each Nevada Senator and Representative in Congress and to the President of the Senate of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MAURICE J. SULLIVAN,
President of the Senate.
T. R. HOFER,
Secretary of the Senate.
CHAS. S. CHANDLER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
DAN. E. MORTON,
Clerk of the Assembly.

Approved February 19, 1921.

EMMET D. BOYLE, Governor.

RECESS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask that my motion be put.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask the Senator to withhold the motion for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Washington that the Senate take a recess until 8.30 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.), the Senate took a recess until 8.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

On the expiration of the recess (at 8 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), the Senate reassembled.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January session, A. D. 1921.

Resolution (H. 533, substitute B) in aid of legislation now pending in the Congress of the United States for the benefit of disabled men of the World War. (Approved Feb. 17, 1921.)

Whereas the thousands of disabled men who served in the World War ought to be cared for with greatest dispatch by the Government which their sacrifices preserved; and

Whereas legislation to provide for the consolidation of all ex-service agencies under one responsible head in one department of the Government is proposed in the Congress of the United States by the Rogers bill (H. R. 14961), now pending in the House of Representatives, and the Capper bill (S. 4613), now pending in the Senate; and

Whereas it appears to the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island that relief to these disabled men can be most speedily given through a single department, rather than by separate agencies:

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, That Senators and Representatives of Rhode Island in the Congress of the United States be, and they hereby are, earnestly requested to give their ardent support to said H. R. 14961 and said S. 4613, or legislation with a like purpose of consolidating the agencies for the relief of our disabled men who served in the World War, and to use their efforts to secure the early passage of this legislation by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be transmitted by the secretary of state to the Senators and Representatives of Rhode Island in Congress.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, February 22, 1921.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution passed by the general assembly and approved by the governor on the 17th day of February, A. D. 1921.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid this 22d day of February, in the year 1921.

[SEAL.] J. FRED PARKER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. COLT presented a resolution of the Legislature of Rhode Island, which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

January Session, A. D. 1921.

Resolution (S. 63) recommending to Congress the passage of legislation for the continuation of Federal aid to States in the construction of rural post roads. (Approved Feb. 28, 1921.)

Whereas the development of the State highway system has been greatly benefited by the passage by the United States Congress of "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes"; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States an act for the continuation of Federal aid to the States in the construction of rural post roads: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island respectfully request the Senators and Representatives in Congress to urge the passage of suitable legislation which will provide for the continuation of Federal aid to the States in the construction of rural post roads, and the secretary of state is hereby instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE TO AUDIT AND CONTROL THE CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Senate resolutions 448, 444, 468, and 442.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent to make certain reports. Is there objection?

Mr. CALDER. I ask for their immediate consideration.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have them read first.

Mr. CALDER. I will state that they provide for the continued employment of four clerks whose employment was authorized by the Senate over a year and a half ago. They add no new places to the Senate pay roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The resolutions will be read.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Senate resolution 448, submitted by Mr. CALDER (for Mr. LODGE) on February 12, 1921, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate No. 225, agreed to on November 19, 1919, authorizing the Committee on Foreign Relations to employ an assistant clerk during the Sixty-sixth Congress, be, and the same is hereby, extended in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-seventh Congress, at the rate of $1,800 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is that to the end of the next Congress?

Mr. CALDER. Yes, sir. I will say that this clerk has been in the employ of the Committee on Foreign Relations during the present Congress.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it not wise to let the next Congress attend to the employment of its own clerks, without providing that this Congress shall authorize it?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the committee needs the clerk, and the chairman of the committee offered the resolution himself.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask the Senator whether it would not be possible to leave the next Congress to attend to the employment of its own clerks?

Mr. CALDER. Of course it would be possible; but, as I say, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations has introduced the resolution. He says the clerk is needed, and he is desirous that the clerk shall continue right through from the beginning of the next Congress to-morrow. There are four of these resolutions.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What are the others?

Mr. CALDER. One provides for the employment by the Committee on Claims of an expert clerk, whose employment has been continued for years. One is for the employment of an assistant clerk by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, of which I am chairman; and one is for the employment of an assistant clerk by the Committee on Public Lands. These clerks have been on the pay roll for over a year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE TO AUDIT AND CONTROL THE CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE SENATE.

Senate resolution 444, submitted by Mr. CALDER on February 10, 1921, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That S. Res. 99, agreed to July 17, 1919, authorizing the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to employ an assistant clerk during the Sixty-sixth Congress, be, and the same is hereby, extended in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-seventh Congress, at the rate of $2,000 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Senate resolution 468, submitted by Mr. SMOOT on March 1, 1921, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk during the Sixty-seventh Congress at the rate of $2,000 per annum, to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO THE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Senate resolution 442, submitted by Mr. SPENCER on February 9, 1921, was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That S. Res. 42, agreed to June 6, 1919, being a resolution authorizing the Committee on Claims to employ an assistant clerk during the Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, at the rate of $2,200 per annum, said compensation to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, and which resolution was extended and continued in authority by S. Res. 218, agreed to on November 10, 1919, until the end of the Sixty-sixth Congress, be, and the same is hereby, further extended in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-seventh Congress.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A bill (S. 5050) for the examination and survey for irrigation works for the storage and diversion and development of waters on the watershed of the Truckee River; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands;

A bill (S. 5051) to aid in the reclamation of certain lands in portions of the bed of Virgin River in the State of Nevada; and

A bill (S. 5052) to aid in the reclamation of lands in the bed of Carson Lake, in the State of Nevada; to the Committee on Public Lands.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 15934. An act to provide for the relief of certain employees of the Government who have become eligible for retirement under the provisions of the retirement act of May 22, 1920, and have thereafter been continued in the service or reemployed therein, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

PAUL ALBERT JENSEN.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the Committee on Naval Affairs the bill (S. 4276) for the relief of Paul Albert Jensen, together with the accompanying papers, no adverse report having been made thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection it will be so ordered.

THOMAS BAYTON AND BERTHA M. HARTT.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 3984, for the relief of Thomas Bayton and Bertha M. Hartt. It is a bill that has passed the House. It has been gone into very carefully. An animal belonging to citizens of our State was killed by the negligence of the Forestry Service in the handling of telephone wires, and $300 was found to be a reasonable compensation. The department recommends the passage of the bill, and I hope it may be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Washington?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3984) for the relief to Thomas Bayton and Bertha M. Hartt. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas Bayton and Bertha M. Hartt, of Elwha, Clallam County, Wash., the sum of $300, as compensation for the loss of a bull owned by them, which was killed September 15, 1915, by becoming entangled with a telephone wire, the property of the United States, on the Olympic National Forest in the State of Washington.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

VALIDATION OF HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1695) validating certain homestead entries.

UNITED STATES DAUGHTERS OF 1812.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which has been reported favorably from the Committee on Patents. It is House bill 10104.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am very much afraid that the consideration of so many irrelevant matters will be likely to defeat the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Connecticut?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10104) to renew patent No. 25909, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a certain design patent issued by the United States Patent Office of date August 11, 1896, being patent No. 25909, is hereby renewed and extended for a period of 14 years from and after the passage of this act, with all the rights and privileges pertaining to the same as of the original patent, being generally known as the badge of the United States Daughters of 1812.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask that the House report on this bill, which I send to the desk, may be printed in the RECORD in connection with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

UNITED STATES DAUGHTERS OF 1812.

Mr. NOLAN, from the Committee on Patents, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 10104:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred H. R. 10104, respectfully report that they have had the same under consideration, and report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The purpose of this bill is to secure for the incorporated association known as the United States Daughters of 1812 the right to use the insignia or badge adopted by them and upon which they obtained a design patent in 1896, said patent now having expired. The purpose of securing this protection is not commercial, but in order to enable the association to prevent the manufacture, sale, and use of the insignia except with the consent of the association. Under the rules and regulations of the association members, even, are not allowed to wear this badge until they obtain a permit issued by the proper officers of the association.

The design patent having expired, there is no way in which the desired protection can be secured other than by act of Congress.

POSTMASTER AT OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the nomination of Mr. Herbert S. Daniel to be postmaster at Omaha, Nebr., may be confirmed as in open executive session, and the President notified.

In preferring that request, before it is presented, I desire to say that, as a Democrat and as a party man, I feel that it is entirely justifiable for the party now controlling the Senate, and soon to control the administration, to reject political nominations that have been sent here by the outgoing President. There is some precedent for that. I remember that eight years ago the Democrats, then about to assume control of the Senate, took that position; but, Mr. President, when they took that position they also established another precedent, and that was that they would give unanimous consent, and they did in a number of cases give unanimous consent, for the unopposed confirmation of postmasters in cities where Senators had their residences, on request of those Senators. I do not recall in how many cases that consent was given, but I remember one notable case, and that was in the case of the late Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. Gallinger; and there were a number of others. I feel justified, therefore, on behalf of this appointee of my home city, my native city of Omaha, in making this request.

Mr. Daniel is a man of the highest character. He passed the competitive examination at the head of the list, and his name has been sent to the Senate by the President after he has been in office as postmaster now for many months. He was appointed to fill a vacancy due to the death of Postmaster Fanning.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that his nomination may be confirmed under that precedent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

MEMORIALS TO CHICKASAW AND SEMINOLE TRIBES OF INDIANS.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the House of Representatives has passed a bill providing for the erection by the Secretary of the Interior of memorial monuments for the Chickasaw and Seminole Tribes of Indians at their capitals, using in each case $15,000 of their own money. The bill has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I am directed by that committee to make a unanimous report of the bill, and ask unanimous consent to dispose of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it a House bill?

Mr. OWEN. It is a House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the report of the bill? The Chair hears none. Does the Senator request unanimous consent for its present consideration?

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Withholding objection, I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The reading clerk read the bill (H. R. 15085) to perpetuate the memory of the Chickasaw and Seminole Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is authorized and directed to erect at Tishomingo and Wewoka, Okla., monuments constructed of Tishomingo granite to perpetuate the memory of the Chickasaw and Seminole Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma.

SEC. 2. That the monument erected at Tishomingo, Okla., shall have inscribed thereon such words and figures as will in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior preserve the memory of the Chickasaw Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma.

SEC. 3. That the monument erected at Wewoka, Okla., shall have inscribed thereon such words and figures as will, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, preserve the memory of the Seminole Tribe in Oklahoma.

SEC. 4. That there is authorized to be appropriated out of any money belonging to the Chickasaw and Seminole Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior the sum of $15,000 from each tribe, respectively.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CARSON NATIONAL FOREST, N. MEX.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Public Lands I ask unanimous consent to report back favorably House bill 14669, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reception of the report and the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of my colleague whether the Senators from New Mexico approve of it?

Mr. SMOOT. The junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] desired to have the bill reported. There are four of these bills, and I will say to my colleague that there is nothing in any of them that is contested. They are simply, in two cases, bills for the consolidation of lands outside of forest reservations by exchange with lands in the forest reservations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Utah?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14669) for the consolidation of forest lands in the Carson National Forest, N. Mex., and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized in his discretion to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands within the Carson National Forest, N. Mex., if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture the public interests will be benefited thereby and the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes, and in exchange therefor may give not to exceed an equal value of such national forest lands or timber within the said national forest as may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior.

Timber given and the timber on lands given in such exchanges shall be cut and removed under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests, and under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become a part of the Carson National Forest.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMBROISE REOPEL.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 15861.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15861) to confirm private claim 61, of Ambroise Reopel, in townships 2 and 3 south, range 11 east, Michigan meridian, Wayne County, Mich., which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That private claim No. 61, of Ambroise Reopel (between claims Nos. 118 and 119), in townships 2 and 3 south, range 11 east, Michigan meridian, Wayne County, Mich., containing 220.74 acres, according to the survey made in 1809–10 by Aaron Greeley, United States surveyor, shall be, and the same is hereby, confirmed to the said Ambroise Reopel, and the Department of the Interior shall cause patent to issue for said land to Ambroise Reopel, his heirs, assigns, and legal representatives: Provided, That this act, and the patent which may be issued in pursuance of the same, shall only operate as a relinquishment on the part of the United States, and shall in no way prejudice any valid adverse right, if such exist, to the said land; the intent being that title shall inure to the true owners of the land under the laws of Michigan, including the laws of prescription, in the absence of any interest or estate of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RAINIER NATIONAL FOREST.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 11851.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11851) authorizing the exchange of lands within the Rainier National Forest, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator state the object of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. The object of the bill is to exchange lands in the Rainier Forest Reserve for lands outside of it. It is a department bill, simply to help the Forest Service to more perfectly administer the forests.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And to protect the water supply of the city of Tacoma.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Serial No. 044521, Billie H. Evashanks, south half southeast quarter, northwest quarter southeast quarter, section 34, township 29 north, range 41 east, and west half east half, northeast quarter southwest quarter, section 1, township 28 north, range 41 east.

That upon receipt of the certificate from the Secretary of the Interior as provided in section 1 of this act the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to make payment of the amounts so certified out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, and issue his warrant in settlement thereof.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

CLASSIFICATION OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed with the consideration of a motion I made a few days ago for the discharge of the Committee on Appropriations from the further consideration of Senate bill 4106 and for reference of that bill, and report accompanying the bill, to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

Mr. STERLING. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the motion at the present time.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from South Dakota if he will not withhold his motion for a few moments so that I can send for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. STERLING. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has had notice that I would bring the motion up at the very first opportunity. I told him so to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator does not do that, I shall suggest the absence of a quorum, and I can certainly get him here by that means.

Mr. STERLING. How long will it take to get the Senator here?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it will take very long.

Mr. STERLING. Very well; I will withhold my motion until the Senator from Wyoming can be present.

GEORGE LECLEAR.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1299) for the relief of George LeClear.

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be read.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, in these unanimous-consent matters at this late hour I will ask the Chair to have all the bills read in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, George LeClear, who was a private in Company I, Twenty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 30th day of April, 1862: Provided, That no bounty, pension, pay, or allowances shall be held as accrued prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. I should like to have some explanation from the Senator from Wisconsin before I consent to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. This is a House bill, one in which I have no interest, except that I was a member of the subcommittee to which the bill was referred.

The facts are that this George LeClear enlisted in a New York regiment for a service of three months. His regiment was mustered into the Federal service under that three months' enlistment. Inadvertently, the two years' enlistment under which all the other regiments went into the Federal service was not applied to this regiment. He served something over a year, became ill, and went to a hospital. He supposed that his time of enlistment had expired, and he went home and within a few months thereafter he voluntarily reenlisted, served through the war, and received an honorable discharge on his second enlistment. It is a very clear and meritorious case.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether heretofore he has been the recipient of any pension from the Government?

Mr. LENROOT. He has not.

Mr. KING. And this would place his name upon the pension roll and entitle him to the $50 a month?

Mr. LENROOT. I want to say that I think, from the facts as I have stated them, he is just as clearly entitled to it as any veteran in the service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONFIRMATIONS—MARINE CORPS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I report from the Committee on Naval Affairs the following nominations of officers in the Marine Corps. I ask unanimous consent that they be confirmed en bloc, as in open executive session, and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration, as in open executive session, of certain nominations of officers in the Marine Corps. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. As I understand, automatically, if the enlisted personnel of the Navy is increased, it increases the personnel of the Marine Corps. Assume that the personnel of the Navy shall be reduced to 100,000; would that result in a corresponding reduction in the Marine Corps, and if it did, if these confirmations were now permitted, would it give promotions to individuals who later on would be compelled to be reduced in rank?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That would make no difference whatever; the commissioned personnel would remain the same. It would simply reduce the number of enlisted men in a company or a regiment. It would not reduce the number of officers. Furthermore, even if it did, that matter would be adjusted by the law at the time the new law takes effect. This would have effect under the existing law only.

Mr. KING. If I understand the Senator, we would not be providing for the promotion of officers who, if there should be a reduction in the personnel, would have no troops under them, or enlisted men?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all. I understand what the Senator has in mind, but this does not increase the number of officers at all. It simply makes the promotions.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and without objection the nominations will be confirmed, and the President will be notified.

NOMINATION OF FRED K. NIELSEN.

Mr. KELLOGG. I report again from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Fred K. Nielsen as Solicitor of the State Department, and ask that it be considered now as in open executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the nomination.

The READING CLERK. Fred K. Nielsen, of Nebraska, to be Solicitor of the Department of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration, as in open executive session, of this nomination. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This afternoon I asked the Senator to let this nomination go over for an hour or two. Since that time I have looked into it, and I find that there is no objection to the confirmation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the nomination will be confirmed, and the President will be notified.

EMIL S. FISCHER.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 255) admitting Emil S. Fischer to the rights and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

Mr. President, this joint resolution grants citizenship to one Emil S. Fischer, who has been a resident of this country since 1892, but much of the time has been compelled to sojourn in the Orient, representing American interests. The citizenship is recommended by a number of eminent people, among them a United States judge in Chicago, a commercial attaché in San Francisco—Julian Arnold—and several Army officers, and there is a unanimous report from the Committee on Immigration. It has also been reported unanimously from the Immigration Committee of the House, and is on the House Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution, immediate consideration of which is asked by the Senator from New York.

The reading clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas Emil S. Fischer, born in Austria in 1865, emigrated from Brazil and arrived in the United States at the port of New York and established a permanent residence in the city of New York in 1892; and

Whereas said Emil S. Fischer, being then a resident of the city of New York, did on the 4th day of November, 1903, apply to the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York and received his first citizenship papers; and

Whereas said Emil S. Fischer, while maintaining continuously his said residence in New York City, has sojourned in China representing American banking and commercial interests, fostering American trade expansion, among other things acting as adviser and foreign secretary to the Chinese Government Commission at the San Francisco Exposition and for the Chinese alien property custodian during the late war; and

Whereas the absence of said Emil S. Fischer has prevented his completing his citizenship, although he has rendered invaluable service to the United States Government, and in order that he attain citizenship and continue his work in China: Therefore be it Resolved, etc., That Emil S. Fischer be, and he is hereby, admitted to all of the rights and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, why can not this person be naturalized?

Mr. CALDER. This man has on two different occasions filed his application for first papers and received them, and then has been compelled to be abroad representing American interests. He has been in China off and on for about 28 years and has been unable to remain here long enough to obtain citizenship. This is recommended by the Naturalization Bureau.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the Senator state what this man's nationality is?

Mr. CALDER. Austrian.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Are there any property rights involved in it?

Mr. CALDER. Not any property rights which would in any way involve him with the Alien Property Custodian. I can assure the Senator of that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He has no property rights which the Alien Property Custodian has taken over which he wants to get back?

Mr. CALDER. I am sure he has not.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from New York how it happens this individual might not have taken advantage of the registration laws and registered himself at the nearest American consulate or legation?

Mr. CALDER. I only have the facts as they are presented before the House Committee. The members of the Immigration Committee of the Senate are here, and they heard this man himself before their committee. The case seems to me to be a perfect one and has been acted upon by the House committee and reported by that committee favorably.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If this man has been here, why has he not been naturalized here?

Mr. CALDER. Because he has been unable to stay here continuously for the period required by our Federal statutes. He has been abroad, as I say, continuously, representing American interests.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Was he in China?

Mr. CALDER. In China a good part of the time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. We have a United States court in China. Could he not have been naturalized there?

Mr. CALDER. If I may read a letter from the judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Seventh District, residing in Chicago, addressed to Congressman SABATH, I think it will throw light on the case. This judge said:

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: This will introduce Mr. Emil S. Fischer, whom I first met at Chicago quite a good many years ago. His affairs have kept him in China a great deal of the time, and I have usually seen him on his return here, and am always interested to learn of his progress. Being foreign born, and having, since taking up his residence in the United States, been often absent in other lands, he experiences some difficulty with respect to his naturalization, and states to me that an act for his relief is pending in Congress.

I beg to say of Mr. Fischer that I believe him to be an honorable man, well deserving of any relief in this respect which can properly be granted to him, and I bespeak for him your good offices in this regard.

Thanking you in advance for any exertion in his behalf, I am, with personal regards,

Sincerely, yours, SAM'L ALSCHULER.

Mr. JONES of Washington. May I ask the Senator if we have had any precedents of legislatively making a man a citizen?

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, my attention was called to three different precedents. I have not the names of them here, but they have been called to my attention, and I am certain of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator if it would not be a better way, and a safer way, to authorize him to present himself to the proper court having jurisdiction over the matter, and take out his second papers, removing any obstacle that may have resulted by reason of his absence from the United States?

Mr. CALDER. The gentleman representing American interests is about to proceed to the Orient again, if he can not get relief in this Congress. I can assure the Senator from Utah that I have been into the matter pretty carefully and it is a perfectly straight transaction. He can be assured there is precedent for this action. I have seen the precedents. I forget the names of the cases, but the matter was called to my attention and I know there are precedents for this action.

Mr. KING. I have looked into the matter some little myself because of the fact that the applicant called to see me and presented the facts in regard to the case. In my opinion he ought to be naturalized, but I did have some little doubt as to the processes that should be employed in order to effectuate that result. I believe it would be better to authorize naturalization, removing such impediments as had developed by reason of his protracted absence from the United States. However, in view of the record of the man and his splendid service abroad, I shall interpose no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CALDER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How long did the applicant for this grace live in this country after he took out his first papers?

Mr. CALDER. About a year, I think.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then the Senator is asking that Congress should give citizenship to a man who took out his first papers, lived in this country one year thereafter, and has been absent ever since?

Mr. CALDER. He has been back and forward from China and the Orient a dozen times since.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How long did he live in this country?

Mr. CALDER. He has lived here off and on for the past 28 years.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But off and on might mean a visit, merely coming here and going immediately abroad again to remain. I was asking about his actual residence really to get the intent of the man that should lead him to take out his first papers and then come to Congress to become a full-fledged citizen after having been away for whatever length of time the Senator has stated.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York if the whole gist of the matter is that the man desires to get married and the girl will not marry him unless he is an American citizen? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

CLASSIFICATION OF CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I now renew my motion that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 4106, being the bill to provide for classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and the standardization of compensation therefor, and the report of the Congressional Joint Commission on Reclassification of Salaries, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	La Follette	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Gore	Lodge	Smith, Md.
Borah	Gronna	McKellar	Smoot
Brandegee	Hale	McLean	Spencer
Calder	Harris	McNary	Sterling
Capper	Harrison	Moses	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Heflin	Myers	Swanson
Cummins	Hitchcock	Overman	Townsend
Curtis	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	Trammell
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Poindexter	Underwood
Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Edge	Kellogg	Ransdell	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	Kendrick	Reed	Walsh, Mont.
France	Kenyon	Robinson	Warren
Gay	Keyes	Sheppard	Willis
Gerry	King	Simmons	Wolcott
Glass	Kirby	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I am advised that there are quite a large number of Senators who hesitate to vote in favor of this motion for fear it might displace the naval appropriation bill. In order to help my friend, the Senator from South Dakota, to remove that objection, I ask unanimous consent that the naval appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside only for the purpose of the consideration of this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that the naval appropriation bill be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire to say just a few words in support of the motion. The bill was introduced in the Senate by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] on the 22d day of March last. With the bill was the report of the Congressional Joint Commission on the Reclassification of Salaries of Civilian Employees in the District of Columbia. I was not in the Chamber when the bill was introduced with the report and the reference was made. I did not know of it until some time thereafter. I was very busily engaged at that time with the civil-service retirement bill and could give no attention to this matter then. The civil-service retirement bill, which was the unfinished business of the Senate for 60 days, finally passed, but that was near the close of the last session of Congress.

I saw no opportunity for doing any work upon this bill and the report at the present session of Congress, and hence have not hitherto asked for a reference thereof to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment. But there may be some opportunity to do some work upon the subject during the interim between the adjournment of this session and the beginning of the next session, and that is one reason why I should like to have the matter of reference decided here to-night.

Further, I desire to say that I am asking the reference not because I covet the work involved, because I know there will be a vast amount of work connected with the subject, but I am asking it as a clear matter of right under the rules and precedents of the Senate, and under the rule of reason as well. If there is any Senator here who has doubt as to whether or not this bill and report should be referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, let him look at the bill and see what is contained in the bill—Senate bill 4106. It is legislation pure and simple, general legislation. It does not make and can not make any appropriation of any amount whatever for the purpose of the pay of the civil-service employees.

Permit me to call attention briefly to the subject of the bill. After some sections of definition of the various terms in the bill it proceeds with the title or subject "Allocation," and the Civil Service Commission itself is given supervision over the matter of allocation of the various employees of the civil service to the several branches of that service.

The next subject treated after allocation is that of amendment to classification. The next subject is that of compensation provided for. The next subject is that of efficiency ratings. Over all these subjects the Civil Service Commission has jurisdiction, according to the terms of the bill.

The next subject in the bill is "promotion appointments"; pure legislation again, and over that the Civil Service Commission has jurisdiction.

The next subject is in relation to the "transfers" from one branch of the service to another, and over that the Civil Service Commission has jurisdiction.

"Leaves of absence and sick leave" is another subject treated of in this bill.

"Advisory council and personnel committees"—another subject under a subhead which is treated in this bill, with rules and provisions governing all these several subjects.

The bill is one of 29 pages. Another subject here is that of "teacher," and so on; another subject is that of "appeals."

Mr. President, there is not one single line in the bill, there is not one single subject treated in the bill, and for which provision is made, which is a proper subject of jurisdiction on the part of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate.

I desire to call attention briefly to what is said in Hinds' Precedents which, while precedents of the other House, are according to the unbroken custom of the Senate in that regard. Here is what is said on page 700 of volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents:

While the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction to report appropriations, the power to report legislation authorizing appropriations belongs to other committees.

Further, it is said:

It is to be understood, however, that the legislation authorizing appropriations in these services—

After having specified various services of the Government—is not within the jurisdiction of the Appropriations Committee, but is exercised by the Committees on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Ways and Means, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, Public Lands, the Judiciary, etc. Also, the Committee on Public Lands authorizes the construction of public buildings, including post office buildings in various cities, but the appropriations are made in the sundry civil bill by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. President, in a case so plain as this there ought not to be any necessity for the citation of any authority whatever. It appears on its face that this is pure legislation which we are referring to the Appropriations Committee, whose business it is to consider appropriation bills.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Dakota yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask if the bill deals with the report on the reclassification of salaries?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. It deals with the employees in the Agricultural Department, does it not?

Mr. STERLING. It deals with the civilian employees in all the various departments of the Government in the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRISON. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has jurisdiction of questions affecting the salaries of the employees in the Agricultural Department, I believe?

Mr STERLING. No; in effect——

Mr. HARRISON. I might put the question in this way: The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry would have just as much right to deal with that question as would the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. STERLING. Exactly.

Mr. HARRISON. And the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads would have the same right to deal with the question of the salaries of postal employees as would the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. STERLING. Exactly, or, if anything, in the case which I am discussing there is absolutely no right whatever to deal with the subject, while there is some relation between the subject referred to by the Senator from Mississippi and the particular committee to which he refers.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, the appropriations for the salaries of nearly all the employees of all the departments in Washington considered and recommended by the Appropriations Committee are included in the legislative bill. Why? For the simple reason that were it done otherwise the clerks in the Agricultural Department would have one scale of salaries; the clerks in the Post Office Department would have another; the clerks in the Navy Department would have another; and the clerks in the War Department would have still another. In order, therefore, to have uniformity of salary and classifications the custom is to let such questions be considered by one committee for all the departments in Washington, except in rare instances, and that committee is the Appropriations Committee, is it not?

Mr. STERLING. That may be true as to the salaries for the clerks in the various departments which are carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. That bill, of course, deals with appropriations altogether; it carries no legislation, except such as may be put on in the Senate as general legislation by common consent and without objection.

Mr. SWANSON. As I understand, the salaries of all the civilian employees in the Navy Department are fixed by the Appropriations Committee of the Senate in the legislative bill, and the members of the Naval Committee have nothing to do with it. That course is pursued for the purpose of securing uniformity in the salaries of the clerks, stenographers, and other employees and in their classification.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will excuse me, it is suggested to me by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill provides the appropriations, but it does not fix the salaries. The salaries are elsewhere and otherwise fixed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota now yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator from South Dakota is not a member of the Appropriations Committee, is he?

Mr. STERLING. I am not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the Senator when was this bill referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. STERLING. The bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations nearly a year ago—on March 22 last.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is the Senator aware of any study that the Appropriations Committee has given to this bill in the lapse of nearly one year?

Mr. STERLING. I am not aware of any study given to it by the Appropriations Committee save this, I will say to the Senator—and I hardly think it involves or implies a study—that an item was included in an appropriation bill authorizing some survey to be made of this reclassification subject.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say——

Mr. WOLCOTT. That involved a study of this bill, did it?

Mr. STERLING. I do not think it involved a study of the bill; I do not think there has been any study of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Was there not a joint commission appointed to survey that very subject?

Mr. STERLING. There was a joint commission, and the joint commission's report accompanies the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then, Mr. President, if I may be permitted to make the observation, it would appear to me that the Appropriations Committee has devoted more time to attending to those affairs that properly belong to it and has not considered it worth while to devote much time on this subject, which, on this hearing, would seem to me to belong elsewhere, to another committee.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. WARREN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. STERLING. I merely wish to say a few words more.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to break in right at that point, if I may, in reply to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. STERLING. I desire to say something suggested by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from South Dakota, in answering the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware, will, I hope, be a little careful not to depart too far from the conditions as they exist.

Mr. STERLING. Exactly. The Senator from Delaware refers to the work of the Reclassification Commission. I wish to say with reference to the report of the Reclassification Commission, and with reference to the bill itself, that the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment will enter upon the study of this subject with an absolutely open mind. We shall not be controlled by the terms of the bill or by the report made by the Joint Reclassification Commission. What I am insisting upon is that the bill belongs to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment as a matter of right. The right of that committee to have this bill referred to it as clear as is the right of the Committee on Banking and Currency to have referred to it any bill introduced here relating to the Federal Farm Loan Board or to the Federal reserve system or to the national bank system. It is just as clearly the right of the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment to have a reclassification bill referred to it as it is the right of the Finance Committee to have referred to it a bill relating to the internal revenue or to the tariff or any other measure, joint resolution, or what not, pertaining to the subject of Government finance. Our right is just as clear to the reclassification bill as is the right of the Committee on Military Affairs to have referred to it a bill providing for the reorganization of the Army; it is as clear as is the right of the Judiciary Committee to have referred to it a bill to amend the Municipal Code of the District of Columbia, or any measure involving a constitutional question.

Mr. President, because the salaries of employees are involved in this instance gives no right to the Appropriations Committee to have this bill. It might be said with as much reason that a bill creating a commission and prescribing the salaries of the commissioners, such as the Federal Trade Commission or any other commission which Congress has created, should, because of the fact that salaries are provided for, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. President, I base my claim on the clear ground of right. I grow a little restive sometimes—and I am not alone in that feeling, either—because of the excess of guardianship and supervision manifested here from time to time, arrogating to itself, apparently, the wisdom to preside over the destinies of many subjects not pertaining to the particular committees to which the individual Senators may belong and over which they have no lawful jurisdiction. Impliedly that guardianship and supervision fear to trust the motives or the capacity or the sense of responsibility of other Members of the Senate.

I do not know why there should be such a strained effort on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to hold on to the reclassification bill. I am asking that it go to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment because of right it should go there and because of the work—and, as I have said, I do not covet the work—which I think the necessities of the case demand in connection with the undertaking to reclassify our civil service.

Mr. President, a word in conclusion. I have said that I was not speaking in my own right or because I am sensitive about my personal rights; but when I stand here to plead that this bill be referred to the proper committee I speak for the right of every committee in the Senate; more than that, I speak for the right of every Senator here, who has the right to demand that a bill over which a committee of which he is a member has proper jurisdiction shall be referred to that committee. That is all I have to say.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE CLARK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the committee appointed to attend the funeral of the late Representative CLARK the Chair substitutes for the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and for the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

TRANSPORTATION OF EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to make a request for unanimous consent before the bill which is before the Senate is discussed further. As I understand it is not expected to enact a law to-night on that subject. It is simply a matter of change of reference.

I should like to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the so-called explosives bill, which has passed the House and to which there is no objection that I know of. It ought to be passed and sent back to the House in order that we may get action on it before morning. That is the only reason why I am asking to inject it in here instead of waiting until the discussion of this other question has been completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say that it is H. R. 12161, Order of Business 692.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to explain the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can explain it very briefly.

There have been a great many accidents on trains, especially passenger trains, of late. The number has been growing very rapidly, and there is now a proposition to include among dangerous explosives certain gases, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not recognize the bill by its number; but from the Senator's description of it, so far as I am concerned, he need not proceed further with his explanation, because I know just what the bill is, and I think perhaps it ought to be passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 12161) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 1134).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Assistant Secretary informs the Chair that the bill has already been read. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GRONNA. Let the bill be read.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The bill has been read. It was read the other day.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to have it read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 232, 233, 234, 235, and 236 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, approved March 4, 1909, be amended to read, respectively, as follows:

"SEC. 232. It shall be unlawful to transport, carry, or convey, within the limits of the jurisdiction of the United States, any high explosive, such as, and including, dynamite, blasting caps, detonating fuzes, black powder, gunpowder, or other like explosive, on any vessel, car, or vehicle of any description operated in the transportation of passengers by a common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, which vessel, car, or vehicle is carrying passengers for hire: Provided, That it shall be lawful to transport on any such vessel, car, or vehicle smokeless powder, primers, fuses, not including detonating fuzes, fireworks, or other similar explosives, and properly packed and marked samples of explosives for laboratory examination, not exceeding a net weight of one-half pound each, and not exceeding 20 samples at one time in a single vessel, car, or vehicle; but such explosives shall not be carried in that part of a vessel, car, or vehicle which is being used for the transportation of passengers for hire: Provided further, That it shall be lawful to transport on any such vessel, car, or vehicle small-arms ammunition in any quantity, and such fusees, torpedoes, rockets, or other signal devices as may be essential to promote safety in operation: And provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the transportation of military or naval forces with their accompanying munitions of war on passenger-equipment vessels, cars, or vehicles.

"The words 'detonating fuzes,' as used in this section shall be interpreted to mean fuzes used in naval or military service to detonate the high explosive bursting charges of projectiles, mines, bombs, or torpedoes. The word 'fuzes' as used herein shall be interpreted to mean devices used in igniting the bursting charges of projectiles. The word 'primers' as used herein shall be interpreted to mean devices used in igniting the propelling powder charges of ammunition. The word 'fuses' as used herein shall be interpreted to mean the slow-burning fuses used commercially and intended to convey fire to an explosive or combustible mass slowly or without danger to the person lighting. The word 'fusees' as used herein shall be interpreted to mean the fusees ordinarily used on steamboats and railroads as night signals.

"SEC. 233. The Interstate Commerce Commission shall formulate regulations for the safe transportation within the limits of the jurisdiction of the United States of explosives and other dangerous articles, including inflammable liquids, inflammable solids, oxidizing materials, corrosive liquids, compressed gases, and poisonous substances, which shall be binding upon all common carriers engaged in interstate or foreign commerce which transport explosives or other dangerous articles by land or water, and upon all shippers making shipments of explosives or other dangerous articles via any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by land or water. Said commission, of its own motion, or upon application made by any interested party, may make changes or modifications in such regulations, made desirable by new information or altered conditions. Such regulations shall be in accord with the best-known practicable means for securing safety in transit, covering the packing, marking, loading, handling while in transit, and the precautions necessary to determine whether the material when offered is in proper condition to transport. Such regulations, as well as all changes or modifications thereof, shall, unless a shorter time is authorized by the commission, take effect 90 days after their formulation and publication by said commission and shall be in effect until reversed, set aside, or modified. In the execution of the provisions of this act the Interstate Commerce Commission may utilize the services of the bureau for the safe transportation of explosives and other dangerous articles, and may avail itself of the advice and assistance of any department, commission, or board of the Government, but no official or employee of the United States shall receive any additional compensation for such service except as now permitted by law.

"SEC. 234. It shall be unlawful to transport, carry, or convey within the limits of the jurisdiction of the United States, liquid nitroglycerin, fulminate in bulk in dry condition, or other like explosive, or any vessel, car, or vehicle of any description operated in the transportation of passengers or property by land or water by a common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce.

"SEC. 235. Every package containing explosives or other dangerous articles when presented to a common carrier for shipment shall have plainly marked on the outside thereof the contents thereof; and it shall be unlawful for any person to deliver, or cause to be delivered, to any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by land or water, or to carry upon any vessel, car, or vehicle operated by any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by land or water any explosive, or other dangerous article, as specified in section 233 of this act, under any false or deceptive marking, description, invoice, shipping order, or other declaration, or without informing the agent of such carrier in writing of the true character thereof, at or before the time such delivery or carriage is made. Whoever shall knowingly violate, or cause to be violated, any provision of this section, or of the three sections last preceding, or any regulation made by the Interstate Commerce Commission in pursuance thereof, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 18 months, or both.

"SEC. 236. When the death or bodily injury of any person is caused by the explosion or escape of any article named in the four sections last preceding, while the same is being carried or placed upon any vessel, car, or vehicle to be transported in violation thereof, or while the same is being so carried or transported, or while the same is being removed from such vessel, car, or vehicle, the person knowingly carrying, placing, or aiding or permitting the carrying or placing of such articles upon any such vessel, car, or vehicle, to be so carried or transported, shall be imprisoned not more than 10 years."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just read?

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Michigan, I should like to know wherein this bill differs from existing law?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The only way in which it differs from existing law is to guard and protect the public against some of the newer inflammables and explosives which have been invented. There has been some confusion as to what were subject to transportation and what were not. This bill attempts to define more clearly the difference between high and low explosives, those which can be handled in small amounts with safety to the public and those which can not.

Mr. KING. It creates no more penal offenses?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not at all.

Mr. KING. Does it increase the present punishment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It does not, although the Interstate Commerce Commission suggests that section 236 be amended in accordance with an amendment which I am going to offer now, so as to remove any doubt as to where the liability is. It does not change the penalty.

Mr. KING. Does it apply merely to the mail or to all articles in interstate commerce?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It applies to explosives being transported on passenger trains or on trains that are carrying passengers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk, suggested by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In lieu of section 236, as printed in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 236. When the death or bodily injury of any person results from the violation of any of the four sections last preceding, or any regulation made by the Interstate Commerce Commission in pursuance thereof, the person or persons who shall have so knowingly violated or caused to be violated such provision or regulation shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it was impossible in this part of the Chamber to hear the amendment. I ask that it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Assistant Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. REED. Is that the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I direct the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the preceding section? It strikes me that there is some incongruity. The last few lines of the preceding section read as follows:

Whoever shall knowingly violate, or cause to be violated, any provision of this section, or of the three sections last preceding, or any regulation made by the Interstate Commerce Commission in pursuance thereof, shall be fined not more than $2,000, or imprisoned not more than 18 months, or both.

The amendment which the Senator has just offered, as I understand, relates to section 236, and that embraces section 235, from which I have just read a paragraph. Section 235 prescribes a penalty of $2,000 and imprisonment not more than 18 months; and yet the following section, which embraces the paragraph which prescribes a lesser punishment, prescribes a still larger punishment, to wit, $10,000 fine and 10 years' imprisonment. It seems to me there is a conflict.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, there is no conflict, I think the Senator will find when he understands it. In the first place, this does not change the existing law in any respect, except the wording of the last clause of section 236, which provides the same penalty as is provided in existing law. But it was felt that it was perhaps not as clearly understood.

Section 235 is in reference to marking. Where there is death or bodily injury, because of some willful violation of the law, then the fine is $7,000 or imprisonment, as suggested here. This amendment does not change existing law as to the extent of the punishment or as to the liability, except that it adds to the law certain other explosives and inflammables, against the transportation of which the public should be protected.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Michigan believe that his amendment is limited merely to the article therein referred to, rather than to the comprehensive language in the three preceding sections?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think it changes existing law at all. I am not attempting to change existing law. I am simply rewriting, on the suggestion of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the wording of that last penalty clause.

Mr. KING. Then the Senator does not think there is any incongruity between the larger punishment prescribed by the amendment which he has tendered and the smaller punishment incorporated within the lines which I have just read?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is not this the situation: Section 236 provides an additional punishment for an aggravated offense; section 235 prescribes a penalty for violating the regulations prescribed in this act, or by the Interstate Commerce Commission; section 236 provides that if such violation results in death there shall be a heavier penalty. That is all, is it not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Absolutely.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not think there is any incongruity at all.

Mr. KING. That would be true, if the Senator will pardon me, if the language of the tendered amendment related solely to those acts which are described in the preceding sections, which might result in death or in great bodily harm, and if they may not be extended to embrace the other acts which may be inhibited or penalized, then I agree with both Senators.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It clearly specifies it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

STANDARD MILLING WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to H. R. 9755, to establish the standard of weights and measures for the following wheat-mill and corn-mill products, namely, flours, hominy, grits, and meals, and all commercial feeding stuffs, and for other purposes.

This is a bill which was passed by the House of Representatives some little time back, and ought to have had the attention of the Senate before this hour. It was reported favorably by the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures, after having been referred to the proper department.

It undertakes to establish a standard of weights and measures in flour and the by-products. The report of the House committee is very short, and the report of the Department of Commerce is likewise very brief. Let me read a clause from the latter:

2. The principle involved in this proposed bill is that mandatory standards be established for packages of wheat mill and corn mill products and that these standards be on the hundredweight basis. This principle has the unqualified indorsement of this bureau, and in our opinion this bill is excellently adapted to carry the purpose into effect. It is one which is urgently required on account of the discrepancies in the standards established by law in the various States, which cause great confusion in interstate commerce, and unfair competition between brands manufactured in a State and those shipped in for sale from points outside the States.

3. This bureau is strongly of the opinion that this proposed legislation will do a great amount of good for the consuming public and for the manufacturer; that it represents a long step forward in standardization and deserves the favorable consideration of Congress.

Mr. President, about all there is to the bill is the declaration that a barrel of flour shall contain 200 pounds, and that the various packages shall be in amounts which are decimal resultants, so that a 50-pound sack of flour hereafter will contain 50 pounds, not 45 pounds, in one State, 47 in another, 40 in another, and so on. So far as I could learn, the bill seems to have the support of nearly all the millers in the United States. They were here in a representative body and urged this bill as a great convenience to the millers and as a protection to the public as well.

I have felt it my duty, under the circumstances, to call the attention of the Senate to the bill, and in view of the fact that there does not seem to be any very pressing matter before us this evening I ask unanimous consent that the bill may now be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Missouri if public hearings have been held on this bill?

Mr. REED. Yes; public hearings were held. Everybody who had asked to be notified was notified, and there were a great number of letters, and there was an appearance by a millers' organization. Some 10 or 12 men came, and spoke, through one man. The testimony has been filed with the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. Have those hearings been printed?

Mr. REED. They were not printed.

Mr. GRONNA. Were the millers of the western country represented?

Mr. REED. This organization, as I understood, represented the mills of practically all over the country. They seemed to be very frank gentlemen. They stated to me that they did not know of any objection, except from some mill in Minneapolis and some mill in Kansas or Missouri. They stated that this matter had been discussed at many of the conventions where millers had met, the bill had been very carefully worked out, and that, in their judgment, it represented practically the unanimous opinion of the millers; although I suppose there is never a great question which receives absolutely the unanimous opinion of any large body of men.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I shall not object to the request for unanimous consent, but I want to say to the Senator that I have received a great many protests, not against this particular bill, but against any bill changing the standards. We know that it will involve a great deal of expense in many respects; but if the millers and those whom it affects most vitally are not opposed to it, of course personally I have no objection to the bill. But I have received a great many protests against legislation of this sort.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator may be in some confusion regarding this bill. There are two bills. There is a bill which proposes to establish a metric system, and there has been great advocacy of that bill, and there has been great opposition to it. But this bill does not do anything except specify the size of the packages in which flour and grains are to be sent out, and they allow a large number of different sizes, but each of them is some decimal of the 200-pound barrel so that we do away with fractions. The bill does not become operative for a year. That, I understand, is in order that the mills may have time to use up their old packages, their old sacks, and their old barrels, the material they have on hand. I think it is a good bill. It has passed the House and, of course, if it does not pass the Senate now, the work will remain to be done all over again.

Mr. GRONNA. Does this bill change the standard of a barrel of flour? A barrel of flour now weighs 196 pounds.

Mr. REED. Yes; it makes it 200 pounds, because if it is 196 pounds, every time you try to divide a barrel, you get a fraction, and they make it 200 pounds. They make the so-called 50-pound sack of flour, which we have always regarded as 50 pounds commercially actually 50 pounds, instead of 49 pounds, or 48 pounds, and according to the statement of these gentlemen, the States have different standards. In some States a barrel of flour weighs 196 pounds; in some States the so-called 50-pound sack weighs 46 pounds. The bill does not contain any harsh terms or harsh penalties, but for the first time it fixes a general standard for the United States.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have confidence in the Senator from Missouri, and I am sure he would not advocate legislation which would be destructive of the milling industry, and I shall, of course, not object.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I would like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri about the bill. I notice that its operation is not restricted to interstate commerce, but applies to all commercial transactions. Upon what basis does the Senator feel that the Government of the United States may prescribe the size of packages which shall pass in commercial transactions wholly within a State?

Mr. REED. The right to fix standards, weights, and measures is the only right it could be placed under.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Congress has the right to fix standard weights and measures, but this does not fix standard weights and measures at all. It fixes the size of packages within which a number of units of either standard weight or measure may be included.

Mr. REED. I will say to the Senator frankly that it may be that the bill is broader than the mere fixation of standards in itself, and unless the right to fix standard weights and measures carries with it the right to fix the size of the package, then the Senator's objection is sound. I desire to say to the Senator that I have given the bill only brief consideration. It was brought to my attention and I tried to make very careful consideration of it to see whether it was going to do a hardship to anyone. I did not examine it from the critical legal standpoint. It passed the House and I took that for granted in this case.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It occurs to me that the fixing of the size of packages within which a certain quantity of goods may be carried falls altogether outside the scope of the provision authorizing Congress to fix standard weights and measures. I suppose in the first place that it rested upon the commerce clause. I should doubt whether, even under the broad provisions of the commerce clause, Congress would be empowered to say to any person that it would be a penal offense to ship packages of any size he saw fit. I can not quite see upon what basis legislation of that character could rest. If a man finds it convenient to his business to pack flour in 30-pound packages and he plainly notes upon the package that it contained but 30 pounds, upon just exactly what kind of governmental right can he be imprisoned for so selling his flour? Does not the Senator think that would be such a natural right that he could not be penalized even under the commerce clause?

Mr. REED. I think that very problem is raised by the suggestion of the Senator with regard to the limitations of the powers of Congress being found in the interstate commerce provision, but, waiving that, it is my judgment that the right to fix standard weights and measures carries with it the right to make reasonable provision with reference to the size of the packages in order to protect the public against misrepresentation or any kind of overreaching. Of course, the provision must be a reasonable one. My examination of the bill has led me to believe that it is reasonable. The Senator will observe that it applies only to packages of 5 pounds or over, and that it shall be a package containing 100 pounds or a multiple of 100 pounds or one of the following fractions thereof—5, 10, 25, or 50 pounds. It seemed to me at first that that was too limited, but when it was explained to me that when a man wanted 15 pounds of flour all he had to do was to get a 5-pound package and a 10-pound package, or if he wanted to get 20 pounds of flour he could get two 10-pound packages, and if he wanted 25 pounds, of course, that was provided for, and that he could get packages of less than 5 pounds, there being no limitation there, I saw no further objection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut will state it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has the Senator from Missouri obtained unanimous consent yet or not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. That is not a debatable question, although the Chair recognizes that questions for information may very well pass between Members.

Mr. REED. I thought consent had been granted. Let me say if the bill is to meet with any serious objection—if there are Senators who think it is not wise to take it up—it is not my purpose to press it. I told the men who were supporting the bill that I had, after examination, thought it was a meritorious bill and that I would try to present it to the Senate if opportunity afforded. I had thought from the course of events this evening that probably the Senate would be in a humor to consider the bill. I think it is quite an important one, but it is not a bill that I would try to force on the attention of the Senate if there is any serious objection to it at this hour.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not rise to object. I am not informed about the bill and I would not object to it. I have no objection to its consideration. I simply did not want it debated before we had unanimous consent, and perhaps waste an hour and then have some one object at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not press the bill at this time. I agree with the Senator upon so many matters that I know we agree with reference to the power of the Federal Government in matters of this kind, but I think he will find upon further examination that the Senate ought not to pass the bill. I hope the Senator will not press his request for unanimous consent, as I should be constrained to object.

Mr. REED. Of course, that is a very polite and courteous and kindly way to make an objection, and I quite understand it. I shall not press the bill, but, if I may be permitted this word, with the exception of the objection which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has raised, and it may be a serious one requiring amendment, and if there were amendment it would be fatal to the bill, I do not think it is subject to any serious objection.

Let me say to the Senator from Utah, if I may be permitted a further word, that I am as much opposed to the Federal Government invading the powers of the States and municipalities and interfering with business as any man can be, but the idea of the bill lies directly within the constitutional powers of Congress. The regulation is one which does not undertake to interfere with any man's business further than merely to prescribe the kind of package or the size of package, so that the public may not be deceived. However, objection having been substantially made, and I having done my duty in the premises, I am quite content to let the matter drop.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri withdraws the request for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I was hopeful the Senator from Utah would not insist upon his objection.

Mr. KING. I shall insist upon it.

Mr. KIRBY. May I say just this further word about the matter: The mills in my State are very much in favor of the passage of the bill. They say present conditions require them to keep on hand large stocks of packages of these various kinds, which would not be necessary if this bill became a law; that the present condition is an imposition which the public would be relieved of by the passage of the bill.

PANHANDLE AND PLAINS SECTION.

The bill (H. R. 14490) to transfer the Panhandle and Plains section of Texas and Oklahoma to the United States standard central time zone, was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, there is a similar bill on the Senate calendar with a favorable report. In view of that fact I ask that the House bill be considered at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill the title of which has just been reported. Is there objection?

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas if it will lead to any discussion.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill is one of local interest, merely transferring a section of Texas and Oklahoma from the mountain time zone to the central time zone. I do not think it will lead to any discussion.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONGRESSIONAL MEDAL.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16076) authorizing bestowal upon the unknown, unidentified British soldier buried in Westminster Abbey, and the unknown, unidentified French soldier buried in the Arc de Triomphe, of the congressional medal of honor. The bill was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and approved by every member present, 16 or 17. I can not think that there will be any objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I had thought that at some time I should submit some remarks with reference to the shipping situation, but the time has not seemed opportune, and I am not going to do it now. I may do it later. However, I have here a statement prepared by Mr. Joseph N. Teal, one of the present members of the Shipping Board, giving what I consider a very good account of the operations of the board since it was organized. It gives some information that I think ought to be of very great benefit, and I ask permission, as a part of my remarks, to have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OPERATIONS OF THE UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD AND UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION FROM SEPTEMBER 7, 1916, TO JANUARY 1, 1921.

[By Joseph N. Teal, February, 1921.]

PRESENT AND FUTURE.

The merchant marine act, 1920, popularly called the Jones Act, was approved June 5, 1920. This date marks the dividing line between the past and the present of the operations of the United States Shipping Board. Where the "board" is referred to, the Emergency Fleet Corporation is included.

Nearly all that is heard or read about the Shipping Board or its operations refer to the past. It is the purpose to deal with the present and the future.

ACTIVITIES OF BOARD DIVIDED INTO THREE PERIODS.

The activities of the board fall quite naturally into three periods:

1. From the date of the approval of the original shipping act, September 7, 1916, to November 11, 1918, the date of the armistice. This includes the time we were at war.

2. From the date of the armistice, November 11, 1918, to June 5, 1920, the date the merchant marine act, 1920, was approved.

3. From and after June 5, 1920.

FIRST PERIOD.—DUTY UNDER ACTS APPLICABLE TO FIRST PERIOD RELATED TO WAR.

The board under acts applicable to this period had very different duties to perform from those of the third period. Its purpose during war emergency was to build with all possible speed ships that would carry cargo overseas. With the brief space separating us from those days when every thought and every pound of our national strength was centered on "winning the war," it is unnecessary to take the time to emphasize or enlarge upon the then conditions. Every day the newspapers carried the story of the sinkings of ships until the loss of tonnage and its consequent effect upon the war could no longer be concealed. At the most critical time—during the year 1918—although Great Britain was hard pressed for tonnage for her immediate needs, the United States was borrowing tonnage from her. No one could foresee, much less know, how long the war would last, and had it continued as anticipated, with the rate of sinkings as they were, we should have needed all the vessels contracted for and more. There was neither time nor purpose to weigh with great care the qualities and characteristics of different types of ships with the thought of ultimately concluding as to which were the better and for general purposes more serviceable. There was no time to consider the possibilities of building a well-balanced fleet of vessels for commercial purposes. Trade routes were not thought of. The problem was to turn out ships of some kind, of every kind that could lend support to the forces overseas. This was done. The war was won, and our vessels played an important part in helping to win the victory.

The first period, being primarily devoted to preparation for war and war operations, and every effort being directed to that end, it would be misleading and futile to apply the costs of that period to peace conditions, or to measure what was then done by a yardstick applicable to normal times and normal conditions. Cost in time of war is not controlling. The turning out of an instrumentality for use is. Value, as the word is ordinarily used, was nonexistent. One might as well attempt to value a glass of water to one dying of thirst or a loaf of bread to one starving as to attempt to place a value on a usable vessel during the war. They have, indeed, short memories who do not recall the cry for ships, ships, and more ships and the statement, made over and over again, that if a ship carrying arms and ammunition or other necessities made but one trip overseas she paid for herself. The attempt to measure the selling or any other value now by cost or value then is a waste of time. The purpose the vessel served then is different from the purpose it serves now. Its use then was different from what it is now.

WORK DONE BY FORMER BOARDS.

In passing, I feel that it is as little as I can do to express my appreciation of the work the men in charge of Shipping Board affairs in those days did in playing their part in the winning of the war. Never before had any nation undertaken the task of actually creating a great fleet almost overnight. All the world characterized it as impossible. Every record was broken in the completion of ships as well as in individual operations. As time goes on and the work done and its results are better understood mistakes and errors will be forgotten, and the fact of what was really accomplished will stand out as a monument to the memory of those whose energy and patriotism made the undertaking possible. In a sentence, the duties of the first Shipping Board were as distinct from those of the present board, under the Jones Act, as though its existence had terminated at the passage of that act, and, so far as the existing board is concerned, as though the former had never been in existence at all.

SECOND PERIOD.

The second period was largely a speculative era. Temporarily there was a scarcity of ships. In addition to other demands for space, enormous amounts of food products and fuel required prompt handling. In consequence charters and rates soared to unbelievable heights, and the speculative possibilities seized many who did not know an ocean liner from a prairie schooner, and in they plunged, to the harm, as it later developed, not only of themselves but of the legitimate operator. During this period the price of ships was high. Based on the current earnings at that time, if legitimate and sustained, the prices asked may have been justified, but with the decline of rates the price of ships inevitably declined. Immutable economic laws control the price of a ship as certainly as they do the price of a bushel of corn.

THIRD PERIOD.

The third period is the return to normal conditions through readjustment affected as it is quite largely by a reaction from the former feverish state.

THE PARAMOUNT DUTY UNDER MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1920.

The paramount duty—the outstanding function of the Shipping Board under the Jones Act—is to establish, develop, and maintain an American merchant marine.

The language of the Congress is direct and unambiguous:

"That it is necessary for the national defense and for the proper growth of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine of the best equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater portion of its commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency, ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to do whatever may be necessary to develop and encourage the maintenance of such a merchant marine. * * * And in the administration of the shipping laws keep always in view this purpose and object as the primary end to be attained."

The provisions of the law are quoted so that the intent of Congress and the obligations cast upon the board may not only be known but that they will be borne in mind in considering the conduct of business by the board under the mandates of the act.

DUTIES UNDER JONES ACT RELATE TO PEACE.

It is the object of the law that the United States shall have a merchant marine sufficient for and adapted to two purposes—peace and war. It is with its use as a commercial agency we are now concerned.

PLAIN STATEMENT OF FINANCIAL AND OPERATION CONDITIONS IS NECESSARY.

To those who look forward with hope to the establishment of an American merchant marine "of the best equipped and most suitable types of vessels sufficient to carry the greater portion of its commerce and serve as a naval or military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency," it is of the greatest consequence that a plain, comprehensive statement of the affairs of the board be submitted to the public so that it may appreciate what has been done in the past, and be able to form fair and just conclusions as to what may, can, or should be done in the future. Such a statement should neither minimize, maximize, nor color facts. All men know that a merchant marine such as this country is seeking to establish can not be secured in a day, and that in the face of the sustained and keen competition we meet from every maritime country on the face of the globe it will cost a considerable amount of money to realize our purpose. Following the line of thought as above expressed, this statement will deal with facts rather than with argument.

While not essential for the purposes of this statement, it is thought best to incorporate the balance sheet herein, so as to show the accounts and their state as of the date named as they appear on the books of the board.

The foregoing balance sheet shows the accounts as they stood on the books January 1, 1921. Nothing has been charged off. Some of the accounts, such as "Reserve," are bookkeeping entries and represent no actual value or actual indebtedness. Many items, such as ships sunk or destroyed, and otherwise lost properties are still carried in these accounts at what they originally cost. In a word, it is the cumulation of items as they were charged for from the inception of the enterprise.

RECEIPTS FROM APPROPRIATIONS AND INCOME FROM SEPTEMBER 7, 1916, TO JANUARY 1, 1921, AND ASSETS JANUARY 1, 1921.

In order to summarize and show the results of the operations of the Shipping Board in the simplest form, a statement has been prepared showing the Shipping Board's receipts from appropriations, allotments, and income from its operations, either in cash or accounts or bills receivable, and the property on hand January 1, 1921. The tabulation covers the period from September 7, 1916, to January 1, 1921:

Receipts from appropriations and allotments and from estimated earnings and other sources in cash and in bills and accounts receivable from Sept. 7, 1916, to Jan. 1, 1921.

1. Appropriations and allotments	$3,275,498,438.91
2. Net receipts from operation of vessels	112,253,819.21
3. From other sources (interest on deposit, rentals, etc.)	11,891,821.67
4. Accounts receivable and bills receivable	75,631,636.45

8. Housing projects and transportation facilities, book value	24,813,446.12
Total	773,087,104.34

No attempt is made to place a value on the vessels. The limitations of the law, the financial and business conditions, and the wide variations in the opinions of those who are conversant with this subject preclude the possibility of making an estimate of value that would generally be accepted. Moreover, it is obviously unfair to use as a basis for the ascertainment of values of these vessels the prices obtaining in the midst of a world-wide depression. Therefore, under the circumstances, it was thought best to omit any attempt to place a valuation on the fleet.

Other properties have been listed by account title at their book values and an estimate of recoverable value given.

While endeavor has been made to be reasonable and conservative in arriving at estimated values, it is realized there is room for very considerable difference of opinion. Indeed, as to some items it is not unlikely they have not been charged down as much as they should have been. In connection with all the accounts a survey and appraisal of items were made by those who should be familiar with their status, to the end that probable realizable amounts might be shown.

The estimated recoverable value of the assets referred to is much less than their book values and will not exceed in all $326,000,000.

ESTIMATED LIABILITIES.

1. Amount due to complete shipbuilding program (see Appendix "A" for detail)	$130,000,000.00
2. Vouchers payable	9,732,407.97
3. Accounts payable and claims filed	162,510,360.81
4. Charter hire payable	47,674,423.39
5. Unclaimed wages	104,126.38
6. Deposits on sales and charter purchase plan	6,599,471.31
7. Mortgages payable	2,500,000.00
Total	359,120,789.86

The foregoing is an estimate of the amount of money that will have to be provided for purposes set out. No estimate has been attempted as to amount required to pay expense of liquidation.

OFFSET AGAINST SHRINKAGE IN VALUES.

In considering the loss occasioned by the shrinkage of values and costs not only of vessels but of other kinds of property, there is a credit which while difficult to measure in dollars and cents is none the less potential, and that is the effect the tonnage of the Shipping Board has had and now has in holding rates to a reasonable basis. One does not need a vivid imagination to realize what the rates on movement overseas would have been had it not been for the United States Shipping Board fleet with its 10,000,000 tons. Without this fleet the tonnage of the world would have been substantially in the hands of Great Britain, the Scandinavian countries, Holland, France, and Japan. Other countries have fleets of but trifling proportion. Undoubtedly, with Great Britain's control over a large majority of the tonnage, a conference would have been created that could have named such rates as it chose. In 1920 the export and import traffic of the United States was, in round numbers, 100,000,000 long tons. Without the transportation opportunities furnished by the fleet of the United States Shipping Board during 1920 the rates might have been staggering. Argument is sometimes advanced that the producers in the United States are not affected by the freight rate. Theoretically, there may be something in this. A more practical test is to ask the grower of grain, the flour miller, the feeder of live stock, the cotton farmer, and the lumberman whether or not an increase in rates affects them in their business. There will be but one answer. Therefore, in considering the loss the gain should not be lost sight of.

GROWTH OF FLEET AND TONNAGE CARRIED.

[See Appendix "B."]

The growth and development of the American merchant marine in point of tonnage and the corresponding growth of the proportion of cargoes carried in American bottoms is shown in the accompanying charts, covering a period of over a century. The peak of our world commerce was reached in the years 1820 to 1830, from which period the recession of our activities was gradual and indicative of a hard-fought effort between 1850 and 1860 to maintain the supremacy of our wood fleet against the encroachment of iron and steam. The Civil War marked the end of the struggle to maintain supremacy on the seas and the balance of ocean-borne commerce swung rapidly to the foreign-flag vessels until in 1910 American bottoms carried but 9 per cent of our foreign commerce. Now the pendulum has commenced its upward swing, having received its impetus from the World War and the tremendous activities as indicated by our shipbuilding program of 1918–1920, in which period our total merchant fleet developed from 14,886,776 dead-weight tons in 1918 to 24,386,278 dead-weight tons in 1920. This wonderful growth can be visualized by the fact that in 1914, at the beginning of the war, there was only 1 ton of American shipping in overseas trade for every 17 tons under the British flag, whereas in 1920 the ratio had changed to 1 ton under the American flag and 2 tons under the British flag. These ships have been set to work as fast as they have been commissioned. Already they have restored an economic condition unknown since 1860, in that 50 per cent of the money value of our imports and 34 per cent of the money value of our exports are actually moving under the American flag, and the total value of foreign trade in 1920 was approximately $12,000,000,000.

SYNOPSIS OF THE CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH VESSELS CONTROLLED BY DIVISION OF OPERATIONS ARE OPERATED.

General cargo carriers are operated under what is termed the M. O. 4 agreement, adopted October 16, 1920, and made retroactive to March 1, 1920. Under this agreement the operator is appointed and termed "the agent." His duties are to manage, operate, and conduct the business of such vessels as may be assigned to him by the Shipping Board, acting for the United States, the board being represented by the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The agent is to man, equip, supply, and pay for accounts of the corporation the cost thereof, and all other costs and expenses incident to management and operation and generally look after the business, care for, and manage the vessels assigned to him for operation.

As compensation for services rendered the agent receives a commission of from 2½ to 5 per cent on gross receipts from freight and certain other revenues. Generally the compensation is 10 per cent on gross passenger and excess-baggage revenue. Provision is made for per diem compensation under certain conditions named in the contract and for 2½ to 5 per cent of salvage earned. The foregoing is substantially the compensation provided for in the contract.

The agent's compensation is not affected by additional cost, increased expense, or loss. His percentage is based on the gross earnings, and to the extent that he increases the gross he increases his profit. Having no interest in keeping down expenses there is no incentive for the agent to make any particular effort to economize. Indeed, the terms of the contract tend to encourage extravagance—and worse. Practices have been uncovered in several instances where through controlled companies, having to do with furnishing ship supplies, loading and discharging, etc., expenses have been unduly and improperly increased. While every effort is made to watch expenditures, doing its best the board is at a great disadvantage.

Although this form of agreement was intended to meet special conditions, and probably was as good as could have been devised at the time for the purpose intended to serve, it has never been satisfactory to the board, which has had for some time and now has under consideration the abandonment thereof in favor of a bare boat charter. Thus far operators generally have refused to accept bare boat charters. While at all times efficient operators and men of high character should be in charge of the vessels of the board, under the M. O. 4 agreement it is imperative that great care should be made in the selection of the men who are to handle the Shipping Board business. The volume of the business is very large and a slight increase in expense or change in rates makes a great difference in the result.

COST OF REPAIRS.

According to latest advices from Repair Cost Audit Bureau, the total cost of repairs and physical maintenance of vessels for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1920, was $72,441,546.77. The total cost for the six months ending December 31, 1920, was $27,403,866.47. There is not included in these figures $7,411,679.83 for repairs which had been made but not settled by January 1, 1921.

PRESENT TENDENCY TO "TIE UP."

The tendency at present is to "tie-up." Just when a change for the better will take place is not at all certain, but it is quite certain that the bottom has not been reached. While very considerable reductions have been made in cost of "tie-up" per ship, at best it is directly an expensive proposition without considering depreciation, etc. It is probable that there are more Shipping Board vessels being tied up than those owned by private operators.

TOTAL VESSELS TIED UP.

Date.	Number vessels tied up.	Dead-weight tons.	Total vessels, all kinds.	Per cent of vessels tied up.
July 1, 1920	88	340,670	1,505	5.84
Jan. 1, 1921	468	2,162,565	1,683	27.81
Feb. 1, 1921	513	2,349,267	1,677	30.59

On February 1, 1921, in addition to 248 vessels reported above as tied up, there were 103, of a dead-weight tonnage of 701,745, in process of tying up. This for all practical purposes would make the "tie-up" of steel vessels February 1, 1921, 351, of a dead-weight tonnage of 2,075,739, or approximately 25 per cent of the entire steel fleet. This has increased to such an extent that on February 23 the "tie-up" was 467 steel cargo vessels, of 3,000,000 dead-weight tons, or 33 per cent of the total dead-weight tonnage of the steel fleet. In addition, on February 19 there were 122 steel cargo vessels temporarily idle.

The cost of "tie-up" includes wages and subsistence of crews, fuel, wharfage, if any, and estimated incidentals. All of the above costs of "tie-up" of steel vessels will be materially reduced in the near future when the main repairs have been completed and the ships have been completely tied up. A further saving in the cost of "tie-up" will be effected as soon as the wages of the tie-up crews are reduced. A reduction in the number of men comprising the tie-up crews on the wooden vessels is now being put into effect. Cost of "tie-up" as set out does not include repairs other than those that can be done by crews, depreciation, insurance, or interest.

ESTIMATED TOTAL COST OF TIE-UP PER ANNUM.

On February 1 the total estimated cost of taking care of the tied-up vessels per annum was $8,379,000. There will be causes for increase as well as decrease in this amount, but on the whole it is probable under existing conditions the annual cost will reach $12,422,806, not including repairs which are estimated at $9,195,000 per annum or anything for depreciation, insurance, or interest.

FIXED CHARGES.

These charges have been established and set up on the books on a basis that in the opinion of many can not now be justified. They were probably adopted originally because of the prices then established for ships ($200 per dead-weight ton) were so high that they required a speedy and immediate application of a depreciation charge that would quickly absorb the shrinkage in values it was foreseen would occur. It may also be that the very high freight rates then prevailing would apparently justify temporarily at least such charges. Then, too, the war was just over and the pyschology of losses under war conditions could not at once be dispelled. Measures are now under consideration to alter the requirements as to insurance, which it is expected will be concluded in the near future.

Tabulated, the set up of fixed charges is as follows:

	Per cent.
Depreciation (this for the first year. Then 9 per cent of remaining value, and so on year by year until 5 per cent is reached at the sixth year, which per cent is thereafter maintained)	10
Insurance	4½
Interest	5
Reserve for repairs	4
	23½

While the interest rate is not used, under the M. O. 4 agreement, as the compensation thereunder is based on a percentage of the gross earnings, the other percentages are still in use for accounting purpose, vessel insurance being figured at 3½ per cent and protection and indemnity at 1½ per cent.

BASIS OUT OF LINE.

It is obvious the formula is unsound, and if put to use would so distort the real situation as to make the figures resulting therefrom useless for any purpose, and if enforced would make sales of Shipping Board vessels practically impossible. Five per cent on a steel vessel is too high, and if proper depreciation is allowed, and the vessels maintained, then the "reserve for repairs" is an extra charge, amounting in reality to excess depreciation. So, too, 4½ per cent for insurance is too great. Indeed, under this formula as to insurance based on value stated. the ship operator is working for the insurance companies and is placed in a position where he can not pay both the Shipping Board and the insurance company. The result is that the latter gets the money. To show in tabulated form the effect even with a lower scale of charges, both on the sale of vessels and on ability of one purchasing vessels from the Shipping Board to compete with vessels purchased on a lower basis and different conditions, a statement is attached as Appendix C. It will be noted that 5 per cent depreciation and 3½ per cent insurance are used for steel cargo vessels. In the tabulation protective and indemnity insurance are included on a basis of 65 cents per gross ton per annum on steel vessels.

RESULT OF CHARGES PER DEAD-WEIGHT TON PER ANNUM.

A comparison is submitted showing effect of charge per dead-weight ton per annum used in the tabulation referred to based on $200, $160, $100, and $75 dead-weight ton valuations:

	Value dead-weight ton.
	$200	$160	$100	$75
Depreciation	$10.00	$8.00	$5.00	$3.75
Insurance	7.43	6.03	3.93	3.00
	17.43	14.03	8.93	6.75
Repair reserve	8.00	6.40	4.00	3.00
	25.43	20.43	12.93	9.75
Interest, 5 per cent	10.00	8.00	5.00	3.75
	35.43	28.43	17.93	13.50

Interest at 5 per cent is used, as it is the rate charged on deferred payments on sales of vessels of the Shipping Board. The commercial rate is higher, 6 per cent might be considered the minimum. Taking a 10,000-ton vessel, valued at $200 per dead-weight ton, depreciation and insurance alone amount to about $173,000 per annum. On the same vessel at a valuation of $100 per dead-weight ton the annual charge would be about $89,000, the difference—$64,000 per year—being very substantial saving.

OPERATING RESULTS.

It is impossible at the moment to secure a statement of actual operating results, but a very close approximation can be had.

The accounting department has the task of analyzing, checking, and auditing accounts of the past as well as caring for present business. The business of the board is not local. Its activities cover the world. It is impossible on round voyages, some of them taking many months, to secure accurate accounts of either earnings or expenses until voyage is completed. Hence, if it is sought to bring accounts to date there will necessarily be some estimates.

In order that the statements may more nearly represent existing conditions, the last six months of 1920 and the first six months of 1921 are used. All charges for insurance, depreciation, and interest are omitted, the reason being no valuation has been placed on the vessels in this paper. The figures therefore, show simply income and out-of-pocket cost in money. While insurance is a proper charge, it is omitted; as the board carries its own insurance it is not actually out the money.

ESTIMATED RESULTS FROM OPERATIONS FROM JANUARY 1 TO JUNE 30, 1921.

[Six months' period.]

The following estimate is based on monthly receipts, consideration of business conditions, tendency of traffic, rates and earnings, available tonnage, seasonal commodity movements, past performances, lessening of costs of operation, etc.

		16,894,268.30
Amount out-of-pocket cost over receipts		38,120,164.75

No allowance for depreciation, insurance, or interest.

Basis, average tonnage to be employed 5,800,000 dead-weight tons.

The present year will show many causes affecting operations that render it difficult to forecast the outcome with any degree of accuracy. Among other things, the results from operating the passenger and cargo service in trans-Atlantic and trans-Pacific service are problematical and subject to so many conditions that no estimate can be made thereon. Consequently the above estimated results are subject to considerable variation.

COMPARATIVE OPERATING COSTS AND PRICE FOR VESSELS.

There is no official or accepted compilation of comparisons of costs of operation between vessels flying the United States flag and those flying the British, Japanese, French, or other flags. Nor is there a similar compilation of comparative costs of construction. There are many such compilations, but none agree in all things, and in each are found wide differences of estimates. In the merchant marine act the importance of securing this information is recognized and there is a provision directing that it be done. It is of vast importance that a thorough, official investigation be had to establish comparative costs of operation between American and foreign flag vessels in the various trade routes, making the comparison as between vessels of similar size and type engaged in the same trade routes. The board fully realizes the importance of doing this work, and part of it has been done, some is now under way, and it is hoped that before long the final steps in the inquiry will be under way.

APPROXIMATE COMPARISONS.

The following is an approximate comparison of the wages and food costs as between American and other named foreign flag cargo ships of similar tonnage and dimensions at the present time. The estimates cover an 8,800-ton coal burner vessel on Atlantic and Gulf wage scales, in par of exchange. American cost of operation represents 100 per cent.

Flag.	Complement.	Wages and food per month.	Per cent.
United States	48	$6,755.00	100
British	45	5,019.00	75
Canadian	38	4,561.00	67
Japanese	59	4,189.00	62

The cost of a British vessel is said to be 30 to 40 per cent less than of a vessel built in the United States. Using 30 per cent as the difference in cost, it would mean that where an American vessel of 9,000 dead-weight tons cost, say, $70 per dead-weight ton, or $630,000, a British vessel would cost $49, or $441,000. These figures are simply illustrative and show how such a difference affects capital costs and returns and overhead.

REDUCTION IN EXPENSES.

During the past year there has been a persistent and continuous effort toward reduction in expenses, which is still being maintained. No attempt will be made to show the total decrease or the reductions by separate departments. A composite statement of the pay rolls of various departments at the beginning of the calendar years 1920 and 1921 illustrates the progress that has been accomplished.

Composite pay roll of U. S. S. B. and E. F. C.

January 1, 1920:
Number employed	11,165
Annual salaries	$21,678,733
January 1, 1921:
Number employed	7,622
Annual salaries	$15,345,509

This shows a reduction in number of employees of 3,543, or 31.7 per cent of the total number employed January 1, 1920, and $6,333,224 of the annual salaries paid or 29.2 per cent of the total amount of the salary budget at January 1, 1920.

ESTIMATED EXPENSES OF ADMINISTRATION OTHER THAN THOSE OF OPERATION FOR 1921.

The following statement shows estimated costs of administration for the year 1921, other than those assigned to operations. Certain costs connected with cost of construction are not set up as they can not be classed as administrative in the sense the word is being used, but estimate of cost of administration relating to all the business of the board is shown. As to whether such costs or how much thereof will be paid from sales of property, collections, other receipts, or appropriations can not be stated. This, while important to know, has no necessary relation to what is being attempted to show, to wit, cost of administration irrespective of the source from which it may be paid.

Construction and repairs	$5,776,615.42
Liquidation	3,059,371.88
General administration	2,744,210.88
Total	11,580,198.18

SHIP SALES.

Statement showing number of ships sold, selling price, dead-weight tonnage, amount paid, amount unpaid, amount past due:

Sales for year 1920.

Number of vessels	246
Selling price	$208,041,251
Dead-weight tons	735,460
Amount paid	$120,067,796
Amount unpaid	$167,896,150
Amount past due	$11,943,206

The reason the dead-weight tonnage is not large in the above tabulation is because there is included therein an unusual number of sales of small-size vessels, such as tugboats, lake boats, etc.

FROM DECEMBER 30, 1918, TO JANUARY 1, 1921.

From Sept. to Dec. 30	24	161,402	27,939,971

The average selling price of steel cargo vessels per dead-weight ton was $178 and a very large portion of it is unpaid. It would seem quite clear that this indebtedness unless amply secured or due from a debtor able to pay from resources other than ships purchased can not be of any greater value than the value of the ships. This being so, there will necessarily be a very considerable shrinkage in the value of the bills receivable representing this indebtedness.

This fact and existing conditions is indicated by the number of vessels in receiverships, which in most cases not only means the cancellation of the indebtedness and the recapture of the vessels by the Shipping Board but the payment of heavy charges as well.

It will be noted that to September 1, 1920, no vessels went into the hands of a receiver. Since that date the number going into the hands of receivers has been steadily increasing.

Every reasonable effort is being made to dispose of the vessels, but at this time there is no real market for vessels any place in the world.

RELATION OF EARNINGS TO SHIP VALUES.

The relation, under normal conditions, of earnings to ship values is hard to estimate. Readjustment to normal means the reduction of excessive capital charges established by war-time conditions and the early peace period of excessive demand over supply. The cost of ship construction can not reach the low level of prewar days, when the design and appointment of cargo ships were simpler, the standard of living was lower, and the material output per day per man was greater, and consequently realized a lower market value on the finished product. Nor can operation costs be expected to revert to prewar figures. We have raised the standard of wages, decreased the hours of labor per man, and increased the ship's complement in consequence; have raised the food standard and improved the living conditions on shipboard by providing many adjuncts to bodily comfort and sanitation hitherto unknown; all of which are reflected in increased cost of operations. Here again the solution of successful operation lies within the individual organizations, through the increase in efficiency in handling their ships to increase their turn arounds per year in order that the minimum of tonnage may carry the maximum of cargo. This can be accomplished by the process of elimination that is now in progress—the weeding out of vessels unsuited to specific trades.

Total funds that will be required to provide for completing construction program, payment of claims, etc., deficit in operations, and administrative expense for calendar year 1921.

Construction, payment of claims, general, etc	$359,120,000
Operating deficit	76,240,000
Administrative expenses	11,580,000
Total	446,940,000
General cash and cash funds, Jan. 1, 1921	51,694,478
Balance to be provided	395,245,522

Collections and sales of property other than ships will fall far short of providing the above amount during the year. So that unless ships can be sold, direct appropriations will have to be made if prompt settlements of claims are made and paid and operations maintained.

NATURE OF CONTRACTS AND WHEN ENTERED INTO.

[See Appendix A.]

All of the contracts now in effect for the construction of steel vessels, excepting five, were let before the armistice. These five are all lump-sum contracts, and are all cancellation, adjustment, or settlement contracts. That is, they were given in consideration of cancellation or changes in previous contracts. The last, an adjusted contract, was executed May 25, 1920. Most of the contracts prior to the armistice were on a cost-plus basis.

On February 12, 1921, there were 22 active contracts, of which 12 were lump sum, covering 35 vessels of 358,850 dead-weight tons; 7 cost plus, covering 19 vessels of 238,300 dead-weight tons; and 3 agency, covering 5 vessels of 40,500 dead-weight tons. This covers all the steel ships and the three concrete ships under construction. The last original contract for wood ships was for a lump sum and was dated October 2, 1918. It was for three ships. The last contract for a wood ship was an adjusted, not original, contract and was dated February 15, 1921. It was on a cost-plus basis.

It will therefore be observed that the construction work is an inheritance and nothing for which the board now in office is responsible. This is not said in criticism of the action of former boards, as they had the responsibility of meeting the difficulties and conditions which confronted them, but to state the facts.

With respect to the reduction of costs in connection with these contracts, it may be said that the chairman of this board prior to its appointment did everything possible to have the cost-plus contracts changed to lump-sum contracts. He was also met with discontent and troubles among those working in various shipbuilding plants, all of which had to be adjusted and settled, and since then has constantly endeavored and now has in hand, in cooperation with the board, reductions in costs of construction.

BOARD SHOULD BE RELIEVED OF LIQUIDITION OF ASSETS AND SETTLING CLAIMS.

The properties not properly or necessarily needed in carrying out the purposes of the act, together with unadjusted claims and the like, are of many different kinds and of very considerable value. The sale and liquidation of these properties, the winding up of the business relating to former activities, and the settlement and adjustment of claims, etc., should be carried on separately from the other work of the board. The carrying out of other provisions of the law will require all of the time of the board, and is of such a character that the board should be diverted as little as possible from constructive to liquidating work.

TONNAGE HANDLED BY AMERICAN VESSELS.

During the year 1920, 20,000 American vessels of 106,000,000 dead-weight tons entered and cleared in United States ports in connection with the foreign water-borne commerce of the United States. During that year this fleet transported 50,000,000 long tons of cargo, about 50 per cent of the total foreign commerce of the United States. This tonnage is greatly in excess of the requirements under present conditions, as 75 per cent of the tonnage used in 1920 can transport the amount of cargo carried. The increasing rapidity of the turnaround correspondingly increases the available tonnage. Under normal conditions the average turnaround of vessels in foreign trade should be six per annum. This would make the annual fleet under the American flag, necessary to carry 50,000,000 tons of cargo 80,000,000 dead-weight tons (loading to 60 per cent of the dead weight employed). In other words, it would require the maintenance by Americans of a permanent fleet of 15,000,000 dead-weight tons or about 2,500 cargo ships. In January 1, 1921, the total ocean-going fleet (steam and sail) of 1,000 gross tons and over under the American flag was approximately 18,000,000 dead weight. This is far in excess of the existing requirements and is being augmented by constant additions from new construction, which will add to the present total by the end of 1921 approximately 1,000,000 dead-weight tons. Unless our overseas trade greatly increases in volume and we seek new markets for our merchandise and new methods of conducting our credit relations with foreign markets, it is apparent that our tonnage is in excess of our requirements and under these conditions the laying up of our ships is an economic result of the law of supply and demand.

PRESENT CRISIS WORLD-WIDE.

The present crisis in shipping is not confined to the United States. It is world-wide. Great Britain has a large number of vessels tied up. Japan is reported to be in a worse condition, and other maritime nations are affected by the same causes in the same way. For the time being there are too many ships for the business. More business or less ships will take care of the problem. Depression in the shipping business is no reason why our people should abandon it. It only makes the more imperative the adoption of the best means to build up and maintain our merchant marine. It may and probably will be a long pull before we will be on a full tide of prosperity, but the most certain promise of a change from present conditions lies in the fact that shipping is suffering relatively no more than other activities and it, as other business, always has had and always will have its ups and downs.

RETURN TO NORMAL.

The return to normal in world business conditions will be gradual. The entry of the United States in the lists of the world's commerce on the high seas will undoubtedly create an era of readjustment in distribution of commodities both in export and import trade; new fields of endeavor in manufactures and the creation of new markets for the raw and manufactured materials of the United States will result.

POLICY OF CONGRESS TO ENCOURAGE PRIVATE OPERATING.

It is the policy of Congress as declared in the act to get the vessels and their operations in trade routes into the hands of private owners as soon as it can reasonably be done. In furtherance of this phase of the plan and to secure the establishment of an American merchant marine it is also the plain purpose of the law to take all proper steps within the limits of the law to aid such owners and operators to maintain lines on the trade routes determined to be necessary and proper in furtherance of the general scheme to establish a merchant marine and encourage the commerce of the United States. At best this will be a most difficult task, and it will require not only wise and prudent handling of the question, cooperation on the part of all concerned, but beyond doubt direct or indirect financial aid to those operating vessels under the flag of the United States in foreign trade. There is no question but that the cost of a similar vessel is less abroad than in this country, and it is equally true cost of operation is also less.

EFFECT OF HANDICAPS MUST BE EQUALIZED OR REMOVED.

Under present conditions we start under handicaps the effect of which must in some way be equalized or removed. There should be no difference of opinion as to the disastrous effect that will follow the loading down of our shipowners with heavy capital and fixed charges. If such a policy should be adopted and continued there could be but one result—dismal failure.

If American operators are to be encouraged to purchase Shipping Board vessels, or operate them, or as owners of other vessels to establish and maintain trade routes, there must be a reasonable certainty that only unusual or extraordinary conditions will justify the board in putting its vessels into the same trades, or to establish several lines in the same trade, and in this way defeat the purposes of the act, and such is the announced policy of the board. The public is entitled to adequate service, fair and reasonable water rates, and stable conditions. Service, rates, rules, and practices should be free from unjust or undue discrimination or preferences. When those conditions are met the object of the law is being served.

NOT PURPOSE TO SUGGEST POLICY FOR FUTURE.

It is not the purpose to drift into a general discussion of what should or should not be the policy in the future, but rather to focus attention on certain facts, and from these let those interested or responsible deduce such conclusions as they think the facts justify.

The writer of this paper is now and has been a firm believer in and advocate of an American merchant marine. He believes as part of any plan for preparedness for war as well as for peace, a merchant marine plays a vital part. This being true, its maintenance and establishment is as much a part of our national duty as the maintenance of a Navy. Indeed, it is an integral part of the Navy.

The figures given tend to show what the result of operations has been, now is, and may be. Economies can be effected, efficiency can be increased, but after making all allowance therefor, the country is still faced with the fact that to establish and maintain an adequate merchant marine as directed in the act it for the present and for some time in the future must pay directly or indirectly a large sum each year.

The vital questions, therefore, are:

1. Does the country desire an adequate merchant marine?
2. Will it pay the necessary cost to secure it?
3. Is the present law adequate for the purpose?
4. If not, what changes are required?

NOTE.—In connection with the total estimated amount required to complete contracts as given in Table I, and given as $100,477,503, it is desired to point out that this figure will not represent the total amount of money required to complete the ship construction program, for the reason that the figure given represents the amounts which will be required to be disbursed to shipyards in connection with the ships in question, and this figure does not include the Emergency Fleet Corporation administration expenses, total amount required to complete dry docks, marine railways, etc., and amounts of money still due on ship construction contracts which have actually been completed, which three items would increase the figure given to approximately $129,982,504 as of January 1, 1921.

Of the vessels now under construction, 22 are being built in yards on the Pacific coast; 13 in yards on South Atlantic and Gulf; 26 Baltimore and North; 1 on Great Lakes, and 4 in Shanghai, China.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I also have a summary of the merchant marine act of 1920 prepared by Jasper Brinton, an attorney at Philadelphia, which I consider about the fairest and clearest and most comprehensive analysis of the shipping act that I have seen. I think it will be very valuable in the discussion of these matters in future, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SUMMARY OF JONES ACT.

[By Jasper Brinton of Philadelphia.]

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

The Jones Act is the culmination of the memorable series of statutes under which the American merchant marine played its part in the war.

The earliest act in the series, the shipping act of 1916, had essentially two purposes.

The first was the establishment, through the agency of the Shipping Board, of a system of governmental control over carriers by water, analogous to that exercised over interstate commerce by the Interstate Commerce and the Federal Trade Commissions. This purpose was reflected in the elaborate provisions of the act against rebates and unfair trade practices, the enforcement of which was necessarily left largely in abeyance pending the solution of the more immediate problems of the war.

The second purpose was to provide for the creation, with the utmost speed, of a merchant marine which would be available in the event of the war then threatening. This purpose was reflected in the powers granted to the Shipping Board, covering the construction of vessels adapted for use as naval auxiliaries, and the act was the starting point of the elaborate war powers which were soon afterwards conferred upon the Shipping Board in rapid succession, either directly by statute or indirectly through delegation by the President.

Like the first act in the series, and closely related to it, the Jones Act also has a twofold purpose, the one temporary, the other looking to the future.

The first is to terminate the war powers whose purpose has served their end, and to liquidate the situation created by the war, reserving existing rights, and bringing about a readjustment to conditions of civil life without unnecessary waste.

The other and larger purpose, however, is that of providing a permanent program for the development of the American merchant marine, by adapting to normal conditions the system of administrative control announced under the shipping act, by preserving so much of the administrative machinery of the war-time program as appears worth saving, and by adopting generally the ways and means necessary for the extension of our foreign trade and the development of a privately owned merchant marine. This purpose incidentally includes within its scope a large number of altogether separate and miscellaneous undertakings, long neglected and much needed, principally in the way of amendments to inadequate laws, as, for instance, the provision of the law regarding ship mortgages and the necessary amendments covering recoveries by seamen and other more or less analogous topics.

The act is thus an omnibus bill covering a wider scope and a larger number of topics than any statute ever passed in this country affecting the merchant marine. Referring as it does to a mass of earlier and technical legislation, it goes without saying that its practical effect—the actual changes which it has brought about—often can not be appreciated by a reading of the act itself, even by an expert shipping man. An intelligent understanding of what it has accomplished requires a considerable and accurate knowledge not only of the earlier statutes (which are frequently complicated) but of the general principles of maritime law covered by them.

The following summary is aimed at meeting this difficulty. It is the outcome of the preparation in the course of office practice of a number of opinions on various phases of the act and has thus been suggested by practical experience, and is an effort through the presentation of a critical summary, topic by topic, of the entire bill, to make the purpose and accomplishment of this epoch-making statute more readily intelligible to the shipping world and others affected by its provisions.

DECLARATION OF POLICY.

(Sec. 1.)

The act opens with a declaration of policy, a somewhat unusual practice, but in the case of a statute of such comprehensive character, a highly desirable one. It declares that the national defense and the development of foreign and domestic commerce demand the building up of an adequate merchant marine "ultimately to be owned and operated privately by citizens of the United States," and announces it to be "the policy of the United States" to do whatever may be necessary to accomplish this end.

The reasons given in support of the policy are the traditional ones, often urged throughout the history of our navigation laws. Their vigorous reassertion in the opening of this act, however, is timely and should be useful as emphasizing the essentially national as distinguished from any local or special interests sought to be advanced.

The most significant feature of the declaration is the phrase relating to private ownership. The important word is "ultimately." The act contains many provisions contemplating a more or less temporary continuance of governmental operation under special contingencies. It remains to be seen how far in actual administration the act will be interpreted as a measure of indefinite postponement and how far it is to be taken as an imperative mandate for a return of American shipping to private control at the earliest practicable hour.

REPEALS.

(Sec. 2.)

The second section of the act repeals generally so much of the war-time legislation as has served its purpose, reserving only such powers as are necessary to complete existing engagements.

1. It repeals the emergency shipping-fund provisions of the deficiencies appropriation act of 1917, as it was twice amended in the following year. This act included generally the legislation under which the President, immediately following the declaration of war, was authorized to order ships and materials; to cancel requisitions and contracts; to take possession of street railroads and the product of shipbuilding plants; to acquire, construct, and requisition industrial plants; to purchase and requisition ships and charters, and to make the necessary loans and advances. The act provided compensation for property taken, and authorized the President to delegate his powers to such agencies as he determined. These powers, it will be remembered, were delegated by the President to the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation by Executive order, and were exercised by those bodies during the period of war.

Needless to say, to the extent to which the Shipping Board derived its powers by delegation from the President under this act, such powers disappear, and the authority of the board must henceforth be derived from the legislation, specifically or by implication, defining the powers of the board. This would apply to the matter of loans and to all other incidental powers formerly exercised by the board.

2. It repeals the provisions of the transportation facilities act of 1918, establishing a method of compensation for transportation facilities taken over under the act similar to that used for compensation in the case of ships and plants.

3. It repeals the provisions of the appropriation act of 1918 authorizing the making of additional contracts for acquiring shipbuilding plants to the extent of some $30,000,000, and providing that the Shipping Board should not require payment from the War Department for the charter hire of Government vessels furnished from July 1, 1918, to June 30, 1919.

4. It repeals the entire act of July 18, 1918, under which the President was authorized to prescribe charter rates and freight rates and to requisition vessels.

5. It repeals those sections of the original shipping act covering generally the war-time powers of the Shipping Board relating to the construction, charter, and sale of vessels.

These repeals are made subject to certain general limitations calculated to preserve existing rights and obligations.

Thus it is provided that all lawful contracts entered into under the previous acts shall be carried out by the board, that all rights and remedies accruing under them shall remain valid and that the repeal shall not extinguish any penalties incurred; also that the board shall have authority to complete any construction begun under the act if in the opinion of the board such construction is for the best interests of the United States.

A special provision of the same section directs the board generally to settle all claims arising out of the exercise of war powers by the President, saving to dissatisfied claimants their previous rights to sue the United States.

REORGANIZATION OF SHIPPING BOARD.

(Sec. 3.)

The third section of the act is an amendment of the two sections of the shipping act of 1916 establishing the Shipping Board, and materially reconstructs that body.

Under the original act it will be recalled that provision was made for a board of five members, at salaries of $7,500, to be appointed by the President with the consent of the Senate, to hold office for six years, the terms of office of the original members to expire one at a time annually after their appointment so that normally one change annually should take place in the membership of the board. By the Jones Act the number of commissioners is increased from five to seven, to be appointed by the President, with the consent of the Senate, as soon as practical after the enactment of the act (June 5, 1920), it being provided, however, that the commissioners in office at the time of the passage of the act shall hold over "until all of the commissioners provided for are appointed and qualify." It is under this proviso that two of the seven members whose appointment was announced on November 8, are holding over, the remaining five being recess appointees subject to confirmation.

The term of office is unchanged, being six years, the terms of office of the respective members having been fixed by the President for graduated terms at the time of their appointment, thus insuring the holding in office of an experienced personnel to serve with new appointees.

Under the old law not more than three commissioners were to be appointed from the same political party. Under the new law the limit is fixed at four.

The provision forbidding the commissioners from being in the employ of, or holding official relation to, any common carrier or other person subject to the act is continued, but the provision of the earlier act prohibiting ownership by commissioners of any stock or bonds in such common carriers or the holding of any pecuniary interest therein is replaced in the new act by a prohibition against the acquiring of such stock or of such interest "while holding such office."

A new proviso is inserted, to the effect that commissioners shall not take part in the consideration of any matters in which they have a pecuniary interest. On the other hand the provision of the former act prohibiting commissioners from actively engaging in any other business, vocation, or employment is omitted and gives place under the new act to a proviso that each commissioner "shall devote his time to the duties of his office."

The former proviso that a commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect, or malfeasance is continued, as also a provision that a vacancy in the board shall not impair the rights of the remaining members to exercise all its powers, a provision which has permitted the functioning of the board during the several months following the passage of the act.

The new act contains a proviso permitting the division of the duties of the board so that the directorship of the various activities may be assigned to one or more commissioners.

The proviso of the old law that commissioners shall be appointed with regard to a fair representation of the geographical division of the country gives place to a specific proviso that two shall be appointed from the Pacific States, two from the Atlantic States, one from the Gulf States, one from the States touching the Great Lakes, and one from the interior. The territorial distribution is at present as follows: Atlantic States (two), Admiral W. S. Benson, chairman, Georgia, Democrat, six years; John A. Donald, New York, three years. Pacific States (two), Joseph N. Teal, Oregon, Democrat, four years; Chester H. Rowell, California, Republican, four years. Gulf States (one), Frederick I. Thompson, Alabama, Democrat, five years. Great Lakes (one), Guy D. Goff, Wisconsin, Republican, one year. Interior (one), Charles Sutter, Missouri, Republican, one year.

The provision of the shipping act permitting the President to authorize the detail of officers of the military, naval, and other services for such duties as the board may deem necessary is omitted, as is also the proviso that, with the exception of the secretary, the commissioner's personal clerks, the attorneys, naval architects, and special experts and examiners, the employees of the board shall be appointed from the civil-service list.

The new act also contains a general saving clause providing that the board shall have such other rights and perform such other duties not inconsistent with the merchant marine act of 1920 as are conferred by existing law. Under this proviso there would be carried over into the new law the provision of the earlier statute permitting the board to employ and fix the compensation of "such attorneys, officers, naval architects, special experts, examiners, clerks, and other employees as it may find necessary for the proper performance of its duties and as may be appropriated by the Congress."

The new law, however, contains a special proviso in regard to attorneys, permitting the employment, within the limit of congressional appropriations, of such attorneys as the board finds necessary for proper legal services to the board, or for representation of the public interest in investigations or proceedings by it or before it, or for appearance on behalf of the board in any courts or other tribunals. This latter provision has been interpreted by the Attorney General in an opinion rendered in August, as authorizing the attorneys for the Shipping Board appointed under this section to represent the board in such litigation only to which the Shipping Board, either as an entity or as a group of commissioners, is a party, and as not covering civil suits involving the interests of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation or suits or proceedings in the admiralty, all of which were intended to remain as heretofore, under the direction of the Department of Justice. This opinion, however, relates only to the litigation, and does not touch the subject of investigation and the general conduct of the duties of the board.

The final amendment of this section is that which increases the salary of the members from $7,500 to $12,000, the specific provision of the earlier act for the employment of a special officer at $5,000 per annum having been omitted, the appointment of such officer being thus relegated to the general proviso relating to employment of its other agents and employees.

In a recent opinion of the Comptroller of the Treasury (Dec. 9, 1920), passing on the question of the payment of salaries to the members of the board, that officer has held that the purpose and effect of the Jones Act was not merely to add two additional members to the board and to increase the compensation of all the members, but to create a new board, with additional duties, new tenure of office, different salaries, and a different manner of electing a chairman; that, as a result, the commissioners whose appointment antedated the Jones Act might be paid at the rate of $7,500 per annum under the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act of June 5, 1920, making appropriation for the salaries of five commissioners at $7,500 each, until the date of their appointment and qualification as members of the new board on December 1, 1920; but that thereafter, and as to all seven of the new appointees, payment to them of any salary prior to their confirmation by the Senate was prohibited by section 1761, Revised Statutes, expressly prohibiting the payment of salaries in the case of recess appointments where the vacancy existed during the session of the Senate and the office was one requiring confirmation by the Senate; and that upon such confirmation the appropriation referred to would be available to pay not to exceed five members at the rate of $7,500 per annum from date of confirmation to the end of the fiscal year 1921.

TRANSFER OF VESSELS TO BOARD.

(Sec. 4.)

The fourth section of the act provides that the ships and other property acquired by the President through the various war powers and agencies should be transferred to the board, with the exception of vessels and property required by other branches of the Government service and vessels at the time in the military and naval service, including vessels assigned to river and harbor work and inland waterways of vessels for such needs in course of construction or under contract by the War Department.

This section is aimed at concentrating in the board the custody and legal title of a large miscellaneous body of marine property, floating and otherwise, acquired during the war, the larger part of which was already in the possession of the board.

SALE OF VESSELS BY BOARD.

(Sec. 5.)

The fifth section of the act is stated to be in furtherance of the general policy as set out in the opening of the statute, looking to the ultimate private ownership and operation of the American merchant marine.

By this section the board "is authorized and directed to sell as soon as practicable, consistent with good business methods," all of the vessels transferred to it as above referred to.

The conditions of sale are left to the board with special permission to defer final payment of purchase price for a period of 15 years.

The act, however, undertakes to guide the board by suggesting certain considerations to be taken into account in fixing the sale price of its vessels, as, for instance, the price in the domestic and foreign market, the available supply and demand, the existing freight rates and their prospects, present cost of constructing similar types as well as original cost or purchase price, "and any other facts or conditions that would influence a prudent, solvent business man in the sale of similar vessels or property if he is not forced to sell."

This proviso took the place of the rigid and impracticable restriction originally proposed, forbidding sales at a less price than the cost of construction in private yards of the United States at the time of sale, after deduction of depreciation.

All sales made pursuant to present laws are specifically subjected to the limitations and restrictions of section 9 of the shipping act, as amended, and which prohibits the sale, transfer, or mortgage of such a vessel to any person other than a citizen, or the placing of the vessel under foreign register without obtaining the board's approval, subject to the penalty of forfeiture. The definition of "citizen" in this section has itself been considerably modified and narrowed by a later provision of the act to which reference is hereafter made.

SALE TO FOREIGNERS.

(Sec. 6.)

The sixth section of the act authorizes the sale of the vessels to foreigners on conditions not inconsistent with those declared in the previous section, provided the board has been unable to sell the vessels to a citizen of the United States, and is satisfied that they are not necessary to the American merchant marine. Such sales, however, require a concurrence of five members of the board, and the period for the completion of payment is limited to 10 years, interest being fixed at the rate of 5½ per cent, as contrasted with the failure of the section relating to sales to citizens to fix any rate of interest. Needless to say, the execution of this power was not possible during the period of delay in the appointment of the board by the President.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SHIPPING ROUTES.

(Sec. 7.)

The seventh section of the act is one of great importance and covers generally the authority of the board to open and establish commercial trade routes in the interest both of our foreign and domestic trade and of the development of adequate postal service.

Following up certain broad authorities covering the necessary investigations, the board is authorized to sell, and if a satisfactory sale can not be made, to charter "vessels under its control to responsible persons, who are citizens of the United States, who agree to establish and maintain such lines upon such terms of payment and other conditions as the board may deem just and necessary." Where, however, no such charters are available, and the service is deemed necessary, the board is directed to operate vessels on such lines "until the business is developed so that such vessels may be sold on satisfactory terms and the service maintained, or unless it shall appear within a reasonable time that such lines can not be made self-sustaining."

In the sale or assignment of vessels preference is directed to be given to citizens of the United States who have the "support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested, if the board is otherwise satisfied of their abilities, and to persons who are already maintaining such services." It is also provided that preference shall be given to citizens at that time maintaining such services and that services already established in ships of the board shall be maintained until the board is of the opinion that the maintenance is unbusinesslike and against public interest.

Another clause provides that where services additional to those already in existence are deemed necessary, the rates and charges for the Government service shall not be less than the actual cost, including interest and depreciation.

Finally, it is provided that, regardless of restrictions in earlier acts, the Postmaster General is authorized to carry the mails over all lines operated by the board.

INVESTIGATION.

(Sec. 8.)

Under the eighth section of the act the board is charged in the broadest terms with the duty of conducting investigations in cooperation with the Secretary of War covering generally the entire subject of the promotion and development of ports and transportation facilities in connection with the water commerce over which it has jurisdiction. These investigations may cover territorial regions and zones tributary to the ports, the cause of congestions, cost of ports, and the general subject of water terminals and their equipment, with a view to suggesting improvements. The board is further required to advise with communities regarding the location of wharves and water terminals, to investigate the practicability and advantages of harbor, river, and port improvements in connection with foreign and coastwise trade, and generally to investigate "any other matter" tending "to promote and encourage the use by vessels of ports adequate to care for the freight which would naturally pass through such ports."

Having in mind the fact that such conditions are largely affected by the rates, charges, and other regulations fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, the board is further authorized, where any such rates or charges are in its judgment detrimental to the encouragement of commerce, or where new rates or regulations are required, to submit its findings to the Interstate Commerce Commission for such action as that commission considers proper.

INSURANCE.

(Secs. 9, 10, 25, 29.)

Four sections of the act are devoted to various features of the all-important problem of marine insurance.

INSURANCE SYNDICATES.

(Secs. 9, 29.)

Under section 9 it is provided that as to all vessels sold upon deferred payment the board shall require the purchaser, as a condition of the sale, to keep the vessel insured against fire and marine risks and against war and other risks, as required by the board, "with such insurance companies, associations, or underwriters, and under such forms of policies and to such an amount as the board may prescribe or approve." Protection and indemnity insurance is also required in similar manner.

This section is supplemented by another (sec. 29) intended to relieve American insurance companies from the oppressive restrictions of the antitrust laws, and thus to give them the same freedom of movement in the matter of combination for risk sharing that has been the foundation of the English Lloyds and which has been largely responsible for the predominant part which British companies have played in marine underwriting in this country.

It is by virtue of these provisions that an agreement has been reached between the Shipping Board and the representatives of the marine-insurance companies of the country for the organization of the so-called American marine-insurance syndicates.

The first, known as Syndicate A, is a service syndicate organized to perform at cost survey inspections and loss surveys for Shipping Board vessels and to perform similar service in respect to any other vessels on payment of professional charges, a class of service heretofore almost an entirely British monopoly. It is clear that no effective American control of marine insurance could be accomplished without a control over this primary and fundamental function.

Syndicate B and Syndicate C cover strictly marine insurance. Syndicate B is limited to strictly American companies. It is authorized to insure Shipping Board vessels to the full extent of the purchase price, and also such other steel ships heretofore sold by the board as are acceptable for insurance to the syndicate, which is to have an underwriting capacity of not less than $2,000,000 upon a single hull. Syndicate C is organized to insure all American ocean-going steel hulls when approved and accepted by the syndicate, which has a total underwriting capacity of not less than $2,500,000 upon a single hull. Syndicate membership in this syndicate is composed of two groups—one group, consisting of strictly American companies, representing at least two-thirds of the amount underwritten on any risk; the other, consisting solely of foreign companies, representing not exceeding one-third of the underwriting capacity of the syndicate.

Under a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury (Oct. 1, 1920) it has been held that the Shipping Board may not, in the absence of express statutory authority, advance its funds to private corporations or associations for working capital to transact maritime insurance business, such loans being furthermore specifically prohibited by the provision of the Revised Statutes relative to the custody and audit of public moneys.

SHIPPING BOARD INSURANCE FUND.

(Sec. 10.)

A separate section of the act authorizes the Shipping Board to establish its own insurance fund out of net revenues from its operations and sales to cover any interest of the Government in vessels either constructed or in process of construction and in any plants or materials therefore acquired by the board or transferred to it under the Jones Act.

AMERICAN BUREAU OF SHIPPING.

(Sec. 29.)

In an effort to develop and build up an American Bureau of Shipping to take the place in the American shipping world of the British Lloyd's in England (whose recognition is purely unofficial, Norway having the only other officially recognized bureau) the act provides that for the classification of vessels owned by the United States and for other purposes proper to a classification bureau the governmental departments are to recognize an American bureau of shipping so long as it continues to be maintained as an organization without capital stock and paying no dividends. This recognition, however, is subject to the appointment of two governmental representatives upon the executive committee of the American bureau, one by the Secretary of Commerce and one by the chairman of the board, these representatives to serve without compensation, except traveling expenses. It is also provided that the official yearly list of governmental vessels is to contain notations indicating all vessels which have been classified by the board. This list is prepared annually under the direction of the Commissioner of Navigation.

The purpose of this section was thus expressed in the Senate by the sponsor of the act (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 66th Cong., 2d sess, May 13, 1920, p. 7548):

"This is intended to promote the development of an American organization of that kind and to perform the duties in connection with American vessels which Lloyd's does in connection with British vessels. In general it will be the duty of this organization to supervise the construction of ships and classify them, so that when a ship is constructed it shall receive a classification by this bureau, and our shipping people and the shipping world generally will understand what that means.

"We have not been able, apparently, to develop an organization in this country to have the standing of Lloyd's. One reason for that probably is that we did not have very much shipping.

"This American bureau has been in existence for quite a good many years. It was not very active until we commenced shipbuilding on a large scale, and it is now developing quite a splendid organization. It is the purpose of this legislation to encourage that American institution in such a way as to make it a great agency toward aiding and upbuilding the American merchant marine, as Lloyd's is in connection with the British merchant marine."

CONSTRUCTION AND LOAN FUND.

(Sec. 11.)

The eleventh section of the act provides for the creation of a loan fund, to be used "in aid of the construction" of vessels of the most efficient type for the establishment and maintenance of service on lines deemed necessary by the board. To this end the board is authorized to set aside annually out of its revenues from sales and operations a sum not exceeding $25,000,000. The fund is to be used to aid citizens of the United States in the construction of vessels in private shipyards, such aid being limited in any individual case to two-thirds of the cost of the vessel, adequate security, including a first lien on the vessel, being first given. It will be noted that the fund must be derived from the revenues of the board from "sales and operations," a limitation sufficiently restrictive at the present time.

REPAIR AND OPERATION OF VESSELS.

(Sec. 12.)

A short section gives the board the obviously necessary authority of reconditioning and repairing its vessels, and also authorizes it, pending the sale of such vessels, to continue to manage and operate them, or to charter or lease them under such conditions as it shall consider best adapted to promote the general policy of the act. To this end the Emergency Fleet Corporation is continued in existence and given authority to operate vessels until all vessels are sold as required. The provision of the shipping act limiting the life of the Emergency Fleet Corporation to five years from the conclusion of the war is accordingly to that extent abrogated.

SALE OF OTHER PROPERTY.

(Sec. 13.)

The thirteenth section of the act authorizes the board to sell all property, other than vessels, which have been transferred to it under the provisions already referred to.

DEPOSIT OF FUNDS.

(Sec. 14.)

The financial relation of the board to the Treasury is covered by a proviso directing that with the exception of its working capital, its insurance fund, and its construction loan fund, all net profits derived prior to July 1, 1921, shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the board, to be expended by it within the limits of its existing authority. After July 1, 1921, such proceeds are to be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. The board is also directed to withdraw, as rapidly as it deems advisable, the investment of Government funds made by it during the war emergency, and to cover the same into the Treasury in the same manner. This proviso would put a stop to the present revolving fund system, unless, as is possible, a change in the law shall be effected in the meantime so as to permit the board to have access to all of its receipts from all purposes, including the sale of ships and the operation of vessels.

CHARTER HIRE ON GOVERNMENT VESSELS.

(Sec. 15.)

To clarify a long-existing controversy, a short section provides that the board shall not require payment from the War Department for the hire of Government vessels furnished by the board from July, 1918, to June 30, 1919.

REPEAL OF HOUSING ACT.

(Sec. 16.)

The authority for the purchase and erection of houses given by the housing act of March 1, 1918, and under which the enormous war-time housing projects of the board were carried through, is terminated, with the proviso that the board is permitted to repair houses already constructed, and to complete houses contracted for or under construction, if deemed advisable, with further directions "to dispose of" all such properties at as early a date as practicable "consistent with good business and the best interests of the United States."

FORMER GERMAN PORT FACILITIES.

(Sec. 17.)

The board is directed, on January 1, 1921, to take possession of and to maintain and develop the German port facilities—docks, wharves, terminal equipment, rights of way, etc., acquired by the President under the war-time powers. It is also provided that the President may, in his discretion, transfer to the board the possession and control of other docks, port facilities, and terminal equipment as acquired by the War and Navy Departments during the war. The President is also authorized to reverse the procedure and to permit or transfer the possession to these departments of any of the property transferred to the board under this section. None of such property, however, may be sold by the board except as subsequently authorized by statute.

COASTWISE TRADE.

(Secs. 18, 22, 27, 37, 38.)

The Jones Act was not intended to materially affect the coastwise situation. Careful analysis, however, shows that the act includes a number of changes in the law affecting that trade.

It should be recalled that from 1817 until the recent war the coastwise trade of the United States was limited to vessels built in the United States. This restriction was removed by the shipping act of 1916, under which the board was authorized (with certain exceptions) to purchase or charter vessels, regardless of whether foreign-built or under foreign registry (except enemy vessels), and to sell or charter the same to citizens of the United States, with the right of American registry. As to all such vessels it was specifically provided that they should be permitted to engage in the coastwise trade.

A special act was also passed on October 6, 1917, authorizing the Shipping Board, in its discretion, to suspend the existing provisions of the law and to permit vessels of foreign registry, as also foreign-built vessels which had been admitted to American registry under the ship-registry act of 1914, to engage in the coasting trade on a permit limiting and defining the scope and the time of such employment, preference always being given to vessels of foreign registry owned by citizens of the United States. This act does not apply to coastwise trade with Alaska or between Alaskan ports. Under its provisions permits have been granted to a considerable number of vessels, mostly engaged in the trade upon both coasts and upon the Great Lakes during the war, the permits usually being for a single voyage.

This situation has been affected by the Jones bill in the following particulars.

Probably the most radical change (sec. 21) is that which extends the application of our coastwise laws, and consequently their prohibitions, to the Philippines and the other island territories and possessions of the United States, this extension to take effect on February 1, 1922. Its result, of course, will be to limit direct trade between the Philippines and the United States to American bottoms.

It will be recalled that a similar provision was adopted once before, was strongly opposed by Mr. Taft, then Governor General of the Philippines, and was repealed.

This section has come in for perhaps as much controversy as any other portion of the bill. Representatives of Philippine interests have protested on the ground that the effect of the bill would be to stifle Philippine trade with the United States and put an end to the ambition of Manila to become the American Hongkong. On the other hand, it may be said that the act simply brings our island possessions into line with the policy that has been successful for a century and under which the United States became possessed of a tonnage in vessels greater than the combined coastwise fleets of the leading maritime nations of the world.

The going into effect of this proviso, moreover, is also subject to certain important limitations and contingencies. The Shipping Board is directed, prior to February 1, 1922, to establish "adequate steamship service at reasonable rates to accommodate the commerce and passenger travel" of these islands and to maintain and operate such service until it can be taken over upon satisfactory terms by private capital. If the service can not be established by that time the President is authorized and directed to extend the period to such time as may be necessary to establish such facilities. Whether the available trade will justify the extension of special lines remains to be seen.

It is further provided that until Congress authorizes the American registry of vessels owned in the Philippine Islands the Philippine Government is authorized to enforce its own coastwise laws covering the Philippine archipelago. This is substantially in accordance with the present legislative powers of the Philippine Government.

Finally the section provides that the extension shall not take effect as to the Philippine Islands until the President, "after a full investigation of the local needs and conditions," shall declare that adequate shipping service has been established, and shall fix a date for the going into effect of the same. As it will be seen, therefore, the effectiveness of the act depends on contingencies which should afford a reasonable guaranty that all legitimate American interests will be fully protected.

A second change (sec. 22) in the coastwise system is embodied in a repeal of the act of October 6, 1917, given above, but with the very broad saving clause that all foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry, owned on February 1, 1920, by persons citizens of the United States, and all foreign vessels owned by the United States on June 5, 1920, when sold and owned by a person a citizen of the United States, may engage in the coastwise trade so long as they continue in such ownership. Unless the 600,000 tons, more or less, of interned German shipping is to be regarded as prize (a doubtful question), and in which case it would become eligible to American registry under the general registry law, such shipping, it will be observed, would fall within the privilege of this section as foreign vessels owned by the United States.

The purpose of this proviso was thus explained by Senator JONES in the Senate (Cong. Rec., 66th Cong., 2d sess., May 11, 1920, p. 7408):

"I understand there are not a great many of those ships, and we believe that where the ships are wholly owned by American citizens, built by American capital, there can be no injury done to the coastwise trade by allowing them to be admitted to American registry, so long as they continue in that ownership. Then, the Navy Department owns several small ships, some of which it has owned since the Spanish War. They are foreign built. They are very small. If they are given the privileges of the coastwise trade of the United States, they will be able to sell them at very much greater advantage to the United States, and they will be covered by this proviso."

It is thus a step in the direction of confining the coastwise trade to vessels built in the United States.

The same section also authorizes the board to issue permits for the carrying of passengers on foreign ships between Hawaii and the Pacific coast from February 2, 1922. This proviso appears to have been the result of a protest by Senator NELSON, calling attention to certain hardships arising under existing law, under which a penalty of $200 per passenger is inflicted upon foreign ships which carry passengers from one port to another in the United States. In practice, however, these penalties were usually remitted.

Another and equally important change is that which relates to the ownership of stock in vessels engaged in the coastwise trade. Heretofore under the right of coastwise trade extended to vessels sold, leased, or chartered by the Shipping Board to citizens, it has been possible for subjects of foreign Governments, or even for foreign Governments themselves, to own and operate such vessels in the coasting trade through the fiction of corporate ownership, as the legal test of citizenship in such cases has been governed by somewhat technical rules affecting the citizenship of the corporation as a legal entity, rather than by the citizenship of the owners of its stock.

The Jones bill squarely meets the situation by two provisos.

The first proviso (sec. 27) strictly limits the coastwise trade to vessels "built in and documented under the laws of the United States," or vessels to which the privilege of engaging in the coastwise trade has been extended by the provisions of law relating to Shipping Board vessels just referred to. (Secs. 18 or 22.)

The second proviso is embodied in an amendment (sec. 38) to section 2 of the shipping act defining citizenship as applicable to the coastwise trade, a definition which is applicable not only to the shipping act but is also specifically made applicable to the various provisions of the Jones bill. (Sec. 37.)

Under the amendment referred to, in the case of a corporation, association, or partnership operating any vessel in the coastwise trade, the amount of interest required to be owned by citizens of the United States is 75 per cent. The effect of this proviso is to strictly limit the foreign interest or stock ownership in vessels engaging in the coastwise trade to 25 per cent.

To avoid the possibility of evasion the act contains a specific definition of the method in which the 75 per cent ownership must be made up. Such ownership will be defeated if the title to 75 per cent is not vested in citizens free from any trust; or if 75 per cent of the voting power is not vested in citizens of the United States; or if through any understanding it is arranged that more than 25 per cent of the voting power may be exercised directly or indirectly in behalf of any person who is not a citizen; or if by any other means, control of any interest in the corporation in excess of 25 per cent is permitted to be exercised by any person not a citizen.

Finally (Sec. 27) the act protects the coastwise trade from foreign approach by extending the general prohibitions, which, as interpreted by Attorney General Wickersham in 1913, were limited to transportation "by water" from one port in the United States, either directly or via a foreign port, or for any part of the voyage, to the broader case of all transportation "by water or by land and water," subject to two specific exceptions, one excluding its application in the case of merchandise carried between points in the continental United States, outside of Alaska, over through routes involving Canadian rail lines, and recognized by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the other defining the date for taking effect in the case of the Yukon River until the completion of the Alaska Railroad.

The proviso would thus cover the familiar case of codfish caught in Alaska and carried to the Eastern States partly by water and partly by rail, and other similar situations.

SUITS AGAINST SHIPPING BOARD VESSELS.

(Sec. 18.)

One of the provisions of the shipping act of 1916 which gave rise to the most embarrassment and difficulty was that proviso of section 9 which provided that vessels purchased, chartered or leased from the board, should, while employed solely as merchant vessels, be subject to all laws, regulations, and liabilities governing merchant vessels whether the United States be interested therein as owner, in whole or in part, or hold any mortgage, lien, or other interest in the vessels.

Apart from the difficulty of fixing the definition of merchant service, the act as interpreted by the Supreme Court, operated to subject such vessels to the ordinary processes of arrest in admiralty suits and to the delays consequent upon the securing of bond for the vessel's release.

To remedy this situation there was passed on March 9, 1920, the suits in admiralty act, under which no vessels owned by the Government may be arrested in admiralty proceedings, a method of suit by notice to the Attorney General being substituted.

The Jones Act, however, in amending section 9 of the shipping act, repeats, and therefore technically reenacts, as of June 5, 1920, the particular clause providing that Shipping Board vessels should be subject to the liabilities governing other vessels. Thus the question is presented, which only the courts can answer, whether, through an inadvertence or otherwise, the former situation as to arrest of vessels is to be restored. In all probability, however, it will be held that it was not the intention of the Jones bill to effect the suits in admiralty act of the same year.

AMERICANIZATION OF AMERICAN VESSELS.

(Secs. 18–37–38.)

The Jones Act takes a long step toward removing the abuses of foreign ownership in American vessels.

Under the original ship registry act of 1792, which has been in force for over a hundred and twenty years, the privilege of American registry is confined to American built ships "wholly owned by a citizen or citizens of the United States or a corporation created under the laws of any of the States * * *."

In opening American registry to foreign-built vessels not over five years of age (a limit entirely removed two years later) the Panama Canal act of 1912 restricted the ownership of such vessels to "citizens of the United States or corporations organized and chartered under the laws of the United States, or of any state thereof, the president and managing directors of which shall be citizens of the United States."

It will be observed that under these laws, both of which are still in effect (except as modified in the manner now explained), there is nothing to prevent a practically entire foreign stock ownership in such corporations, provided the corporation itself, which, in the eye of the law, is determined primarily by its place of incorporation, is legally a citizen of the United States. As a result it is a matter of common knowledge that the practice of such ownership has grown to formidable proportions.

The shipping act of 1916, however, considerably restricted the ownership of Shipping Board vessels. Under that act the board was given authority to charter, lease, or sell vessels "to any person a citizen of the United States." The second section of the same act defined the word "citizen" for the purposes of the act as being limited to corporations and associations in which "the controlling interest therein is owned by citizens of the United States," and in which, in the case of corporations, its president and managing directors are citizens of the United States and the corporation itself is organized under the laws of the United States or a State, Territory, District, or possession thereof.

In several important particulars the Jones Act restricts the opportunities for foreign ownership thus presented.

First, it proceeds to establish a new definition of citizenship to be applied to all cases where such citizenship is involved either under the Jones Act or under the shipping act. This definition takes the form of an amendment to the definition contained in the shipping act above quoted. In effect it repeats the previous definition, so far as relates to the question of controlling interest and the citizenship of the president and managing directors, but goes further by providing that such an interest shall not exist if the title to a majority stock is not free from any trust in favor of foreigners, or if the majority of the voting power is not vested in citizens or if through any contract or understanding it is so arranged that the majority voting power can be exercised in behalf of foreigners, or if by any other means control of the corporation is permitted to be exercised by any person not a citizen of the United States.

Under the Jones Act itself this definition applies, inter alia, to three important classes of vessels.

Under the fifth section of the act it covers the case of all vessels sold by the board pursuant to the declared policy of the act to place the merchant marine of the United States in private ownership at as early a date as practicable. The act, however, does not appear to cover the case of a change in the stock ownership of the purchasing company brought about after the purchase of a vessel.

In the second place, the definition applies to the sale or charter of vessels to citizens for the establishment of trade routes under the broad provisions of the seventh section of the act already summarized.

Finally, and of equal importance, it extends the definition outside the class of vessels which have been owned or chartered by the Shipping

Board by prohibiting the sale, transfer, or mortgage or, except under regulations of the board, the charter of any vessel documented under the laws of the United States "to any person not a citizen," a prohibition which is subjected to a personal penalty of $5,000 and imprisonment of five years and to the forfeiture of the vessel. This prohibition, of course, does not affect the ordinary process of original registry under the navigation laws first above mentioned, but as applying to the transfer of title or mortgage of all vessels it is gradually bound to bring within its scope a very large proportion of the merchant marine of the country.
